LUCCA, THE REPUBLIC OF, a small territory of Italy, lying on the Tuscan Sea; about 24 miles in length, and from 10 to 20 in breadth. The soil does not produce much corn; but there is plenty of wine, oil, silk, wool, and chestnuts. Their oil, in particular, is in high esteem, but the poorer people receive part of their support from chestnuts, lupins, and French beans. The industry of the people, in improving to the best advantage every spot of their ground, is equally surprising and commendable. This republic is under the protection of the emperor. The regency consists of a gonfalonier, assisted by a council of 9 members; all of these, however, are changed every two months, and are chosen out of the great council. This is composed of 240 nobles, of whom one half forms what are called the ordinary counsellors, and the others the extraordinary. Both are changed once in two years, by a new election. The gonfalonier, and nine regent counsellors, whilst in the administration, live in the state palace, and at the public expence. The republic maintains a regular body of 500 men, and 70 Swiss, as a guard for the regency. The number of inhabitants in the city, and the 150 villages belonging to it, is computed at upwards of 120,000. The revenues amount to about 30,000l. per annum.

LUCE, a great bay of Wigtonshire, lying to the E. of the Mull of Galloway.

LUCENA, a town of Cordova; and a town of Valencia, 18 miles NE. of Segorva; both in Spain.

LUCENA, a town of Capitanata, in Naples, with a manufacture of cloth. It is 60 miles NE. of Naples.

LUCERN, one of the 13 cantons of Switzerland, and the most considerable of them, except Zurich and Bern. It is bounded on the E. and SE. by the cantons of Zug, Schewitz, and Underwalden; and on all the other sides by the canton of Bern. The inhabitants, who are Romanists, are under the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishop shop of Constance. It is about 30 miles in length, and 20 in it's mean breadth. The soil is fertile, but unequal; the southern parts are mountainous, but without glaciers, and there is a very considerable exportation of cheese. The sovereign power of this republic resides in the council of 100, comprising the senate, or little council. The former is the nominal sovereign; but the power resides in the latter, consisting of 36 persons, who are formed into two divisions, which exercise the office by rotation. Although the government appears purely aristocratic, yet this aristocracy is restrained in divers respects; as in the matter of making war or peace, concluding new alliances, acquiring new territories, or imposing new taxes, the consent of all the citizens must be obtained. The chiefs of all the republic are two magistrates, called advoyers.

LUCERN, a very ancient and tolerably well built town, the capital of the canton of Lucern, in Switzerland. It is divided into two parts by one of the branches of the river Reufs, which falls into the lake, on which the town is situated. The streets are clean, the grand church is very handsome, and the arsenal is well furnished with new cannon; but the town scarcely contains 3000 inhabitants, has no manufactures of consequence, and little commerce; and there are few places where learning meets with less encouragement, and, consequently, is less cultivated.—The bridges, which skirt the town, round the edge of the lake, are the fashionable walk of the place, and remarkable for their length. Being covered at the top, and open at the sides, they afford a constant view of the beautiful and romantic country. They are decorated with coarse paintings, representing the Histories of the Hebrews, the Battles of the Swiss, and the Dance of Death. Lucern is situated on the Waldstaetter See, or Lake of Lucern, where the Reufs issues from it, 30 miles SW. of Zurich, and 35 E. of Bern. Lat. 47. 5. N. lon. 8. 6. E.

LUCERN, LAKE OF. See WALDSTAETTER SEE.

LUCERNA, a town of the Four Valleys, in Piedmont, to one of which it gives name. It is 5 miles SW. of Pignerola.

LUCIA, ST. or ALOUSIE, an island of the W. Indies, about 22 miles in length and 15 in breadth, affording amongst other tropical productions, plenty of cocoa and tustic. It is very healthy, and exhibits a variety of hills, yet partly consists of very fertile plains, finely watered with rivulets, and furnished with timber, fit for building houses and windmills, and often employed for that purpose by both the French and English planters. It is provided with several good bays and commodious harbours, the chief of which, called the Little Carnage, is reckoned the best in all the Caribbee Islands. In it are two remarkably round and high mountains, said to be volcanos, by which this island may be known at a considerable distance. It was long considered as neutral, by the English and French, till it was ceded to France by the peace of 1763. In 1777, it was taken by the English, but restored to the French by the peace of 1783. It has been again taken by the English in the present war, (by Sir Charles Grey and Sir John Jervis, in 1794,) and still remains in their possession. It is about 70 miles NNW. of Barbadoes, and 38 S. of Martinico. Lat. 13. 25. N. lon. 60. 58. W.

LUCIA, St. one of the smaller Cape de Verd Islands, about 24 miles in length, with a commodious harbour on the E. side, formed by two small islands, and affording good shelter and anchorage. The island is high and mountainous. Lat. 17. 18. N. lon. 24. 8. W.

LUCIGNANO, a town of Tuscany.

Luckford, Dorset. W. of Holme, by the river Luckford, which empties itself into the Frome, and forms the W. boundaries of Purbec Isle. Luckham, Devon. in Uffcolumb parish. Luckington, Wilts. SW. of Malmesbury. Lucknor, Northumb. W. of Sunderland.

LUCKNOW, an ancient city of Hindoostan, capital of Oude. It is an extensive place, but poorly built; the houses are chiefly of mud, covered with thatch; and many consist entirely of mats and bamboos; and are thatched with leaves of the cocoa-nut, palm-tree, and sometimes with straw. The houses of the merchants are of brick, lofty, and strong, and there are some, but not many, magnificent edifices, Sujah Dowlah having destroyed most of the ancient palaces, when he erected others. The others are mostly built on eminences, here and there, whence the inequality of the ground makes it troublesome to walk, continually ascending or descending. The streets, moreover, are crooked, narrow, and stinking, every kind of filth being thrown into them, and no care taken to keep them clean. In the dry season, the dust and heat are almost intolerable; in the rainy season, the mire is so deep as to be scarcely passable; and there is a great number of elephants belonging to the nabob and the great men of his court, which are continually passing the streets, either to the palace or to the river, to the great danger and annoyance of the foot passengers and shopkeepers. The palace of the nabob is seated on a high bank near the Goomty, and commands an extensive view both of that river and the country on the eastern side. Lucknow is 650 miles NW. of Calcutta. Lat. 26. 35. N. lon. 81. 25. E.

LUCKO, a town of Volhynia, in Poland, 176 miles SE. of Warsaw.

Luck me, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

LUCKOR, Glamorganf. an ancient borough, on the river Luckor, which is navigable here for vessels of 200 tons burden, and over which it has a ferry. It is 7 miles W. by N. of Swansea.

Luckor, a river of Glamorganshire, which passes by Llanetty or Llanelly, Luckor, &c. and empties itself into the Bristol Channel at the Worms Head. Luckton, Heref. near Croft Castle.

LUCO, a town of Abruzzo Ultra.

Lucomb, Dorsetf. 2 miles N. of West Chelburgh.

LUÇON, or LUZON, a town in the dept. of Vendee, seated in an unwholesome morass, on a canal, about 6 miles long, which communicates with the sea, 17 miles N. of Rochelle.

LUCONIA, or MANILLA, the chief of the Philippine Islands, in Asia, about 400 miles in length and 100 in breadth. It is not so hot as might be expected, because it is watered by a vast abundance of large and small lakes, springs, rivulets, and great rivers, and by the periodical rains, which inundate all the plains. There are several volcanos in the mountains, which occasion earthquakes; and a variety of hot baths. The produce of this very fertile and healthy island is wax, cotton, wild cinnamon, sulphur, cocoa nuts, rice, gold, which is found in every part; horses, buffaloes, game, 40 different sorts of palm-trees, and all sorts of fruits, both of the E. and W. Indies, with some that are to be found nowhere else. The inhabitants are composed of several nations, besides Spaniards, and they all produce a mixed breed, distinct from any of the rest. The blacks have long hair and good features; and there is one tribe who tattoo themselves, drawing curious figures on their bodies. To this island the Spaniards bring all sorts of commodities; such as silver from New Spain, Mexico, and Peru; diamonds from Golconda; silks, tea, Japan and China ware, and gold dust, from China and Japan. The Spaniards send hence two large ships every year to Acapulco in Mexico, with merchandise, and return back with silver. There is an acquisition here, but it does not affect the natives and the Mahometans. This island is divided into several provinces, mostly under the jurisdiction of the Spaniards. The principal are Illocos, the richest and most populous, the coast of which extends upwards of 30 leagues; Balagan, which contains about 2500 tributary Indians; Camarinas, in which is the city of New Caceres, the see of a bishop; Paracale, which contains about 7000 tributary Indians, and abounds in mines of gold and other metals, and of valuable loadstones; and Cagayan, in which are about 9000 tributaries. Manilla is the capital.

Ludbrook, Devonf. in the parishes of Ermington and Modbury. Ludburgh, Linc. colnsf. W. of Saltfleet. Luddenham, Kent, two miles from Faversham. Ludderton, Yorkf. NW. of Thrapston. Lug, a river in Heref. which runs into the Wye near Hereford. Lug, a river which rises in Radnorshire, and running S. through Herefordshire, Shropshire, and Monmouthshire, passes by Monmouth, and falls into the Severn at or near Chepstow.

LUGANO, a town of Swisserland, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, which is the principal of the 4 transalpine bailiwicks, about 20 miles in length and 13 in breadth. It is built round a gentle curve on the NW. coast of the Lake of Lugano, and is the emporium of the greatest part of the merchandise, which passes from Italy over St. Gothard or Bernardin. It contains about 8000 inhabitants. Most of the houses are built of tuffstone. The bailiwick contains 106 towns and villages, and about 53,000 inhabitants, who are all Romanists. The soil is fertile in pasture, corn, fruit, and silk, and olives are produced in great abundance. It is governed by a bailiff, sent every 2 years by each canton in it's turn. Lugano is 17 miles NW. of Como. Lat. 45. 54. N. lon. 8. 48. E.

LUGANO, a lake of Swisserland, on the Italian side of the Alps, and in nearly the centre of the bailiwick of Lugano. It is about 20 miles in length, and from 2 to 4 in breadth; it's form very irregular, bending into continual sinuosities. It is about 190 feet perpendicular higher than the Lakes of Como and Locarno.

Lugham, Cornw. near Mount's Bay. Lugban, or Luggan, Cornw. among hills, N. of Redruth.

LUGO, a city of Galicia, chiefly celebrated for it's warm medicinal springs. It contains 3 parish churches, 4 convents, 2 hospitals, and a seminary, and is situated on the river Minho, 40 miles N. of Orense.

The church of E. Lulworth, the whole of which is very ancient, has a tower of an uncommon form, reaching from the base to the top, like a cone. Lulworth St. Andrews, Dorsetf. a mile SE. of Lulworth. Lulworth Cove, Dorsetf. is 1380 feet in diameter, and 21 feet in depth at low water, and will admit vessels of 80 tons burden. Lumley Castle and Park, Durham, on the Wear, opposite to Chester-le-Street.

LUNCARTY, a town of Perthshire, about 5 miles N. of Perth. It is noted, at present, for one of the most extensive bleaching grounds in Scotland, and is signalised in Scottish history, for being the place where, in the year 970, the gallant Hay turned the tide of conquest in favour of his countrymen, the Scots, in a victory obtained over the Danes.

Lund, Yorkshire, NW. of Beverley. Lund, Yorkf. N. of New Malton.

LUND, a town, the capital of Scania, and the see of an archbishop. It is accounted the most ancient in Sweden, according to an old proverb, that when our Saviour, Jesus Christ, was born, Lund was in it's glory. Here is a university, founded by Charles XI. for 21 professors, and furnished with a good library. The number of students is about 300, and of other inhabitants about 800, who have but little trade. Here likewise a Royal Physiographical Society was instituted in 1776, and incorporated by the king in 1778. The subjects treated of in it's Acts relate only to natural history, chemistry, and agriculture. The cathedral is an ancient, irregular building. It is 20 miles SSE. of Landskrona, and 225 SW. of Stockholm. Lat. 55. 33. N. lon. 13. 26. E.

LUNDEN, a town of Danish Holstein, seated near the river Eyder, 24 miles W. of Rensburg, and 57 NNW. of Hamburgh.

LUNDY, an island in the mouth of the Bristol Channel, near the middle, between Devonf. and Pembrokef. It is about 5 miles long and 2 broad, and encompassed with inaccessible rocks, so that it has but one entrance, and there scarcely two persons sons can go abreast. In the N. part of it is a high, pyramidal rock, called the Constable. Here are horses, kine, hogs, and goats, with great store of sheep and rabbits; but the chief commodity is fowl, with which it abounds much, their eggs being very thick upon the ground, at their season of breeding. It had once a fort and a chapel; at present, the only inhabitants are a man and his family.

Lune, a river of Westmorland and Durham, which runs into the Tees below Longton, about 6 miles above Barnard Castle. Lune; see Lon. Lune Forest, Yorks. near Richmond.

LUNEBURG, a town of Natangen, in Prussia.

LUNEL, a town in the dept. of Gard, producing excellent muscadine wine. It is 16 miles E. of Montpellier.

LUNEN, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, situated at the confluence of the rivers Zefick and Lippe, 20 miles SSW. of Munich.

LUNENBURG, a duchy in the circle of Lower Saxony, which, including Zell, is separated from Holstein and Lawenburg on the N. by the river Elbe; and is bounded on the E. by the duchies of Brunswick and Mecklenburgh. It is about 100 miles in length and 70 in breadth. It is watered by the rivers Aller, Elbe, Ilmenau, Jetze, the Old Mark, the Lahe, the Seeve, and other rivers; and part of it is full of heaths and forests; but, near the rivers, pretty fertile. It abounds with wild boars, which the German nobility come to hunt here for their diversion, at certain seasons. It is subject to the elector of Hanover. Lunenburg is the capital.

LUNENBURG, a large, fortified town of Germany, containing about 1300 houses and 9000 inhabitants. The chief public edifices are 3 parish churches, the ducal palace, 3 hospitals, the town house, the salt magazine, formerly a church belonging to the abbey of Heiligenthal, the anatomical theatre, and the academy. The Sulze constitutes a distinct part of the town, is walled in, and has a separate magistracy. It consists of small houses, built deep in the ground, with four large, leaden pans in each, which are new cast every month, and wherein the salt is daily boiled. Every salt house is estimated at 40,000 rix dollars, so that the capital of the whole Sulze greatly exceeds the sum of two millions of rix dollars. Of these salt-works, one-fifth part is the sovereign's due. The salt trade, however, is much reduced since the commencement of the last century, yet it still chiefly employs the inhabitants. Lunenburg is seated on the river Ilmenau, 36 miles SE. of Hamburg. Lat. 53. 16. N. lon. 10. 31. E.

LUNENBURG, a town of Virginia, 50 miles SW. of Richmond; a county of Virginia; a town of New York; and a town of Acadia, in Nova Scotia, situated on the SE. coast, 40 miles SW. of Halifax.

LUNERA, a mountain of Italy, between Naples and Puzzoli. It contains a great deal of sulphur and alum, and the springs that rise from it are accounted excellent for curing various wounds.

LUNEVILLE, a town in the dept. of Meurthe, seated in a marshy country, which has been drained, on the river Meurthe, near its confluence with the Vesouze, 12 miles SE. of Nanci. In the 6th century, it was a county of itself, but in the 12th it was united to Lorrain. It's magnificent castle, where the dukes of Lorrain formerly kept their court, as did afterwards King Stanislaus, is now converted into barracks. Stanislaus founded here a military school, a large library, and a fine hospital.

Lungdridge, Northumb. near Tweedmouth. Lungford, Hants, S. of Winchester.

LUSATIA, a territory of Germany, about 80 miles long and 40 wide, bounded on the N. by the Mark of Brandenburg; on the E. by Silesia; on the S. by Bohemia; and on the W. by Meissen. It is about 28 leagues long and 15 wide, and is divided into the Upper and Lower. Upper Lusatia abounds in mountains and hills, in which are found many boggy and moorish tracts. The latter, on the contrary, has a great number of fine woods; the very great heaths themselves being provided with it, even to exuberance. In each of these marquisates, rye, wheat, barley, and oats, are cultivated; as also much buckwheat, together with peas, lentils, beans, and millet. The culture of flax is pretty considerable, and they make some white and red wine. The inhabitants of Lusatia enjoy an important means of subsistence, in the numerous and good manufactures of linen and woollen stuffs. These flourish principally in Upper Lusatia. The cloth manufactures are the oldest, having been in vogue, in several towns, so early as the 13th century. There are also good manufactures of hats, leather, paper, gun-powder, iron, glass, wax bleaching, black and fine dyings, &c. &c. The most ancient inhabitants of this country were the Semnones, or Senones, a Suabian nation, who inhabited Upper Lusatia, but by their custom of wandering, gave place to the Wandalers; and these last again, by a like expedition, in the 7th century, to the Sorber Wends, a Scavonian people. At present, the towns are almost wholly peopled with German inhabitants, but, in the villages, a greater number of Wendish Germans is to be met with. The principal rivers are the Spree, the Black Elster, and the Pulsnitz. Upper Lusatia formerly belonged to Bohemia. Lower Lusatia, which alone, till the 15th century, was called Lusatia, was erected into a marquisate, in the year 931, by Henry I. king of Germany. In the middle of the 16th century, they were both ceded to the Elector of Saxony, in consideration of a large sum of money, which the elector had advanced to the emperor, in his war with the Bohemians, with the single condition, that the kings of Bohemia should retain the armorial bearings. The whole country is now divided between the King of Prussia and the Elector of Saxony.

Lushy, Linc. NW. of Spilsby. Lushcomb, Devonshire, in Rattery parish.

LUSIGNAN, a town in the dept. of Vienne, seated on the river Vonne, 12 miles SW. of Poitiers.

LUTKENBURG, a town of Holstein, situated near the Baltic, 30 miles N. of Lubeck.

LUTKEN DORTMUND, a town of Mark, in Westphalia.

LUTTON, a small, dirty town, of Bedfordshire, noted for its manufacture of straw hats. In its church is a remarkable Gothic font, in form of a hexagon, open at the sides, and terminating in elegant tabernacle work. It is pleasantly seated among hills, on the river Lea, 20 miles S. of Bedford, and 31 N. by W. of London. A corn market on Monday.

LUTRI, a town of Swisserland, in the Pays de Vaud, situated on the N. coast of the Lake of Geneva, 2½ miles E. of Lausanne.

LUTSCHINEN, a river of the bailiwick of Interlaken, and canton of Bern, in Swisserland, formed by the junction of two streams, the one called the Weifs Lutschinen, flowing through the Valley of Lauterbrunnen, and the other called the Schwarz Lutschinen, which comes from the Valley of Grindelwalde. After having left the fertile plains of Gisteig, and passed the village of Wilderswyll, the breadth of the valley lessens, and continues to grow so narrow, that the stream of the Lutschinen can hardly force a passage. In a rainy season, the river forms a torrent, which rushes impetuously through the great masses of rock, that obstruct its course, and, with inconceivable violence, forces from their beds the most enormous fragments. The road to Zwey Lutschinen and Lauterbrunnen is over this river, by a kind of bridge, which, to a stranger to the country, presents the most terrific appearance. It is suspended over a roaring torrent, and fixed against the sides of rocks; while a huge, vertical stone, raised in the middle of the river, supports some thick planks, so badly joined, as to be neither steady nor solid; and these form a wretched, insecure bridge, over which the inhabitants of the country daily pass, with a firm step and undaunted eye; a passage, which the traveller, unaccustomed to such strange communications, would tremble to attempt.

LUTTER, a town of Brunswick, in Lower Saxony, near which Christian IV. king of Denmark, was defeated by the Imperialists, under Count Tilly, in the year 1626; it is 11 miles NW. of Goslar. Also a river of Westphalia, which runs into the Aa 2 miles S. of Hervorden; and a river of Lower Saxony, which runs into the Lachte 12 miles NE. of Zell.

LUTTERBURG, a town of Hanover, formerly a county, and long governed by its own lords. It is 15 miles S. of Goslar.

LUTTERHAUSEN, a town of Holstein, in Lower Saxony, 2 miles from Ham-burgh.

LUTTERINGHAUSER, a town of Berg, in Westphalia, 2 miles NE. of Lennep.

LUTTERWORTH, a town of Leicestershire, containing about 360 houses and 1620 inhabitants. Its rector, the famous reformer, John Wickliff, died and was buried here, in the year 1385; but his bones were taken out of his grave, and burnt, 40 years after, by order of the council of Constance. The pulpit, in which he preached, is still preserved in its church. The Roman Watling-street runs on the W. side of the town. It is situated on the little river Swift, (into which the bones of Wickliff were thrown, after being burnt) in a fertile soil, and pleasant, open country, 14 miles S. of Leicester, and 88 NNW. of London. Market on Thursday.

comprehended a few villages, and subject to the elector palatine. It is situated on a mountain, defended by a castle, 24 miles NW. of Strasburg.

LUTZEN, a town of Mersburg, in Upper Saxony, 10 miles WSW. of Leipzig. Near this place, in the year 1632, was fought the famous battle between the Swedes and Imperialists, in which the former remained masters of the field, but lost their great king, Gustavus Adolphus, in the very moment of victory. On the spot on which he was found dead, nothing but a bare stone has been erected, and which is still to be seen there.

LUTZENSTEIN, a town in the dept. of Lower Rhine, seated on a mountain, with a castle, 30 miles NW. of Strasburg.

Luxborough, Somerset. near Dunster, Luxborough, Essex, in Chigwell parish, near Woodford Bridge, is a superb and elegant villa, built by Lord Luxborough, about 60 years ago.

LUXEMBURG, (anciently called LUCIS BURGUM, because the sun was adored here, as the moon was at Arlon, Jupiter at Carignan, and Mars at Marche-en-Famine) a city of the Netherlands, capital of a duchy of the same name. The city of Luxemburg is small, but strong, as well from it's situation as it's fortifications. Sigefroy I. count of Luxemburg, built a wall round it in the 10th century. In 1543, Luxemburg was taken and pillaged by the French, commanded by Charles, duke of Orleans, second son of Francis I. but in the year 1544, Ferdinand de Gonzagne, retook it for Charles V. after 15 days siege. It was again besieged by the duke of Guise, in 1559, but he was obliged to retire when the French were defeated at St. Quintin. In 1597, the marquis de Biron attempted to take it by a coup-de-main, it having only a small garrison, but meeting a very obstinate resistance from the citizens, he was obliged to abandon his enterprise. The city continued under the dominion of Spain till 1684, when the French, under the marshal de Crequy, came to assault it, after having bombarded it in December the preceding year; the trenches were opened the 8th of May, and on the 4th of June the city surrendered. It was ceded to the French by the treaty of Ratisbon, concluded the same year, who very much extended the fortifications; but by the peace of Ryfwick, in 1697, it was restored to Spain. It was again taken by the French, in 1701, who ceded it, by the barrier treaty, to the States General; but in 1715, it was restored to the emperor. In the 16th century, when Philip II. established so many new dioceses in the Netherlands, it was in agitation to erect Luxemburg into a bishopric, and to annex the abbey of Orval to it's revenues; but at the earnest solicitation of the archbishop of Treves, whose spiritual jurisdiction extended over the city, and part of the province of Luxemburg, the design was laid aside. The river Allitz runs through it, and divides it into the Upper and Lower Towns; the former almost surrounded with rocks, but the Lower seated on a plain. It is 25 miles SW. of Treves. Lat. 49. 37. N. lon. 6. 17. E.

LUXEMBURG, THE DUCHY OF, one of the 17 provinces of the Netherlands, lies in the centre of the Forest of Ardenes, W. of the electorate of Treves, and S. of the territories of Liege, Limburg, and Juliers. In some places it is covered with mountains and woods, but it is, in general, fertile in corn and wine, and has a good breed of cattle, and all sorts of game; here are also a great number of iron mines and founderies for cannon, which last constitute it's greatest riches. It is watered by many small rivers, the principal of which are the Ourt, the Semois, the Las, and the Chiers, which discharge themselves into the Meuse, with several others which flow into the Moselle. In the whole duchy, exclusive of the principal town (Luxemburg) are twenty-three other smaller ones. Charles IV. emperor of the Romans, raised the county of Luxemburg, in 1354, to a duchy, but dying without heirs, it came by his will to Wenzel, son to the emperor Charles IV. king of the Romans and Bohemia, who, by way of mortgage, ceded to the princess Elizabeth, daughter to his brother John, duke of Gorlitz, (who first married Anthony, duke of Burgundy, and afterwards John of Bavaria) this duchy, in lieu of a dowry of 120,000 Rhenish florins, which he had promised to give her. In 1444, this princess ceded all her right in the duchy of Luxemburg to Philip, duke of Burgundy. By the peace of the Pyrenees, France obtained the districts and towns of Thionville, Montmedy, Marville, Chevancy, Carignan, and Damvilliers; and, during the present war, the whole (with it's capital, which surrendered by capitulation, June 7, 1795) has submitted to the French republic.

LUXEUIL, a town in the dept. of Upper Saone, remarkable for it's chalybeate springs and warm baths. A great number of urns, medals, and inscriptions having been found here, it is supposed to have been a considerable place in the time of the Romans. It was destroyed by Attila in 540. Near the town was a late celebrated abbey, founded by St. Columban, an Irishman. It is seated at the foot of the Vosges, 15 miles W. of Vesoul.

Lynn, North, Norf. at the mouth of the Ouse. It had formerly a church, called St. Edmond's, which has long since been entirely swallowed up by the sea. On the opposite side of the river is Lynn, Old, or West.

*LYNN REGIS, or KING'S LYNN, a populous and flourishing town of Norfolk. The situation of this town, near the fall of the Ouse into the sea, after having received several other rivers, of which some are navigable, gives it an opportunity of extending its trade into 8 different counties, by which many considerable cities and towns, viz. Peterborough, Ely, Stamford, Bedford, St. Ives, Huntingdon, St. Neot's, Northampton, Cambridge, St. Edmundsbury, and the N. part of Bucks, as well as the inland parts of Norfolk and Suffolk, are supplied with heavy goods, not only of home produce, as coals and salt from Newcastle, but also of merchandise imported from abroad, especially wine, of which two articles, viz. coals and wine, this is the greatest port for importation of any place on all the eastern coast of England; and those wherein the Lynn merchants deal more largely than any town in England, except London, Bristol, and Newcastle. In return for this, Lynn receives back all the corn which the counties just mentioned produce, for exportation; and therefore sends more of it abroad than any port, except Hull. The foreign trade of the merchants here is very considerable, especially to Holland, Norway, and the Baltic, and also to Spain and Portugal, and formerly they drove a good trade to France, till it was turned off, by treaties on one hand, and prohibitions, high duties, &c. on the other, to Spain and Portugal. The harbour is safe when ships are in it, but difficult to enter by reason of the many flats and shoals in the passage; but they are well buoyed, and good pilots are always ready. Its air is unwholesome, on account of its vicinity to the seas. The streets are narrow, but well paved, and it has a good market place, and a noble old town-house and exchange. It is 106 miles N. by E. of London. Lat. 52. 45. N. lon. 0. 28. E. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Lyonness, Cornwall, part of the promontory overflowed at the Land's End.

LYONNOIS, a ci-devant province of France, W. of the rivers Saone and Loire, about 30 miles in length and 17 in breadth. It now forms, including the districts of Beaujelois and Forez, the department of the Rhone and Loire. Lyons is the capital.

LYONS, a large, ancient, and famous city, in the dept. of Rhone and Loire, the most considerable in the kingdom next to Paris, for beauty, commerce, and opulence, and is seated at the confluence of the rivers Rhone and Saone, by the side of two high mountains. It was founded, about the year 42 B.C. by the Romans, who made it the centre of the commerce of the Gauls. About the year 145, it was totally destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt by the munificence of Nero. Many antiquities are still observed, that evince its Roman origin. Lyons was the see of an archbishop, and before its recent calamities, contained about 160,000 inhabitants, upward of 30,000 of whom were employed in various manufactures, particularly of rich stuffs of the most exquisite workmanship, workmanship, in silk, gold, silver, &c. The quays were adorned with magnificent structures. The Hotel de Ville vied with that of Amsterdam; and the theatre was not surpassed by any in France. The other principal public buildings are the Hotel de Dieu, the hospital of charity, the exchange, the custom house, the palace of justice, the public library, and a well supplied arsenal. The town-house, cathedral, and many other buildings, are also magnificent. The bridge, which unites the city with the suburb de la Guillotiere, is 1560 feet long. The houses, in general, are high and well built; it has 6 gates and 4 suburbs, and had, before the revolution, 4 abbeys, 50 convents, 3 public schools, a college of physic, an academy of arts and sciences and belles lettres, a society of agriculture, and a veterinary school. Such was Lyons before the fatal year 1793, when the mischiefs of the revolution were poured upon this devoted city in all their horrors. In June, 1793, the Lyonesse revolted against the national convention, and sustained, with great bravery, an active siege of two months. General Kellerman, who commanded the army of the Alps, was ordered to besiege the city; but not answering to the impatience of the convention, he was removed, and general Doppet appointed to succeed him, to whom the inhabitants, who were not only unused to arms, but very ill provided with the means of defence, as well as the necessaries of life, were obliged to surrender on the 8th of October following. Considerable losses were sustained by the besiegers, as well as the besieged, in their various actions; a great part of the city was reduced to ashes, by an incessant bombardment; and, when taken, it became a prey to the merciless victors, who satiated their rage by barbarities for which language has no name. The miserable victims, who were too numerous for the individual operation of the guillotine, were driven in great numbers, with the most savage and blasphemous ceremonies, into the Rhine, or hurried in crowds to the squares, to be massacred by the more painful operation of fire-arms and artillery. It is supposed that not less than 70,000 persons in this unfortunate city alone were either put to death or forced into exile. It was also decreed by the convention, that the walls and public buildings of Lyons should be destroyed, and the name of the city changed to that of VILLE AFFRANCHE. In 1794, however, on the destruction of the faction of the Jacobins, the convention decreed, that the city should resume it's ancient name, and that measures should be taken to restore it's manufactures and commerce. Lyons is a place of very great trade, which is extended not only through France, but to Italy, Swisserland, and Spain; and there are four celebrated fairs every year. It derives vast advantages from the rivers it stands upon; and is 70 miles S. by W. of Geneva, and 220 SE. of Paris. Lat. 45. 46. N. lon. 4. 55. E.

MACZUA, a small island in the Red Sea.

MADAGASCAR, an island lying on the eastern coast of Africa, about 800 miles in length, and from 120 to 200 in breadth. The inhabitants in the interior are black. Their hair is long and curled, at least on the coasts; and there are some likewise of a yellowish complexion, who have neater features than the rest. The island is uneven and hilly, but the face of the country is one of the most agreeable in the world. It is extremely populous; yet they have no cities or towns, but a great number of villages, a small distance from each other. Their houses are huts, with doors so low, that a boy of 12 years old cannot enter them without stooping. They have neither windows nor chimneys, and the roofs are covered with reeds or leaves. Their furniture consists of a few baskets, to put their necessities in, and they can change their habitations when they please. There are a great many petty kings, whose riches consist in cattle and slaves, and they are often at war with each other. Great quantities of iron and steel are found throughout the island; as also three sorts of gold. The rivers and brooks are rich in various kinds of precious stones. The productions of the island, are the raven, a kind of palm-tree known only in Madagascar, the top of which is prepared and eaten like the cabbage palm, and of the ribs of its leaves they form the walls of their houses; rice, barley, sugar-canes, white pepper, ginger, cocoa-nuts, grapes, saffron, several kinds of gums, five different kinds of honey, and a variety of plants unknown to Europeans. Buffaloes run in herds, and there are great numbers of sheep, whose mutton is finely tasted, as well as goats, kids, and other kinds of useful quadruped animals, but neither elephants, tigers, lions, nor horses. Large crocodiles, monkeys, wild boars, cameleons, lizards, locusts, insects, birds, and fish, are numerous. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in building, in gold and iron works, making of earthenware, spinning, weaving, cordage; fishing, hunting, and mostly in agriculture. The language has a great affinity with the Arabic, the Arabs having made a conquest of the island about 300 years ago. The French have frequently attempted to settle here, but have always been driven hence. Lat. from 12. 0. to 25. 30. S.

Madam's Court Hill, in Kent, 19 miles from London, in the road to Sevenoaks. It commands a beautiful prospect of Kent and Suffex. Madam's Cowel, Kent, a hill near Maidstone. Maddenton, Wilts, 9 miles from Salisbury.

MADEIRA, an island of the Atlantic Ocean, principal of a group called the Madeiras, and subject to the Portuguese. The climate is more temperate than in the Canaries, and the soil more fertile, in wine, sugar, fruits, &c. but less so in corn, though infinitely better watered with springs and rivers. Spring and autumn reign here together, and produce flowers and fruit throughout the year. It abounds in every kind of tropical and European fruits; as oranges of all sorts and dimensions, lemons of a prodigious size, bananas, citrons, peaches, nectarines, apricots, figs, plums, melons, apples, and strawberries, that grow wild in the mountains with astonishing profusion; grapes which are as large as our common plums, and remarkable for their peculiar flavour. The oranges oranges are of a sanguine red: this species is produced from the common orange-bud, ingrafted on the pomegranate stock. There is likewise a kind of pear found here, not bigger than a walnut, and very crisp. The sugar-cane also is cultivated with success, though not in any considerable quantity. The cedar tree is found in great abundance: it is extremely beautiful: most of the ceilings and furniture at Madeira are made of that wood, which yields a very fragrant smell. The dragon tree is a native of this island, as are also mastic and other gums. Flowers nursed in the English greenhouses grow wild here, in the fields; the hedges are mostly formed of myrtles, roses, jessamine, and honeysuckle in everlasting blossom, while the larkspur, the fleur-de-lis, the lupine, &c. spring up spontaneously in the meadows. There are very few reptiles to be seen in the island; the lizard is the most common. Canary birds and goldfinches are found in the mountains; of the former, numbers are sent every year to England. But Madeira is principally celebrated for its excellent wine, which, moreover, keeps best in the hottest climate under the torrid zone. For this reason the inhabitants of the W. India Islands, that can afford it, drink little else; and the Madeira wine that is brought to England, is thought to be worth little, unless it has first been a voyage to the E. or W. Indies. These wines are of different kinds, different both in taste, colour, and strength. The exports of this article, and the profits on it are immense, and bring a large revenue to the king of Portugal. In Madeira are made the finest sweetmeats in the world; all kinds of fruits being here candied in the most exquisite perfection. Madeira is well watered and peopled; the inhabitants are good-natured, sober, frugal, and indolent. Funchal is the capital of this island, which is about 150 miles in circumference, and lies in 16 deg. W. long. and 33 deg. N. lat.

MADELEY, a town of Shropshire, situated near the iron bridge in Colebrook Dale, 8 miles NNW. of Bridgnorth, and 147 NW. of London.

Madeley, Staff. SW. of Newcastle-under-Line. Madeley Althore, Suff. near Uttoxeter. Maden House, Linc. NW. of Sleaford. Maden Load, Camb. in the Isle of Ely, between Welney and Helgey. Madern, Cornwall, N of Penzance. Madersfield, Worcestershire, near Great Malvern. Mad Fens, Northumberland, between the Pids Wall and Kirkheaton.

MADIA, MAGGIA, or MEYNTHAL, a long and narrow valley of Switzerland, on the confines of the Milanese and the Upper Valais, containing 22 parishes, and about 24,000 inhabitants. It is watered throughout its whole length by a river of the same name, which runs into Lake Major at Locarno, and is the fourth bailiwick of the Swiss in Italy. There is a town of the same name, seated on the river.

Madingley, 3 miles from Cambridge. Madley, SW. of Hereford.

MADRAS, or FORT ST. GEORGE, called by the natives CHINA-PATAM, a fort and town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, on the coast of Coromandel, built in the reign of Charles II. by order of the English East India Company. under the superintendence of Sir William Langhorne; some writers, however, assert, that it was first settled in 1640, and afterwards enlarged in the reign of Charles II. It is the principal settlement of the English, on the E. side of the peninsula, and is a fortress of very great extent, including within it a regular well-built city. It is close on the margin of the sea, from which it has a rich and beautiful appearance; the houses being covered with a stucco called chunam, which in itself is nearly as compact as the finest marble, and, as it bears as high a polish, is equally splendid with that elegant material. They consist of long colonnades, with open porticoes, and flat roofs; and they may be considered as elegant, particularly so, from being finished with such a beautiful material as the chunam; and the city contains many handsome and spacious streets. But the inner apartments of the houses are not highly decorated, presenting to the eye only white walls; which, however, from the marble-like appearance of the stucco; give a freshness grateful in so hot a country. Ceilings are very uncommon in the rooms. Indeed it is impossible to find any which will resist the ravages of that destructive insect, the white ant. These animals are chiefly formidable from the immensity of their numbers, which are such as to destroy, in one night's time, a ceiling of any dimensions. It is the wood work which serves for the basis of the ceilings, such as the laths, beams, &c. that these insects attack. "The approach to Madras, from the sea," says Mr. Hodges, "offers to the eye an appearance similar to what we may conceive of a Grecian city in the age of Alexander. The clear, blue, cloudless sky, the polished, white buildings, the bright sandy beach, and the dark green sea, present a combination totally new to the eye of an Englishman, just arrived from London, who, accustomed to the sight of rolling masses of clouds floating in a damp atmosphere, cannot but contemplate the difference with delight: and the eye being thus gratified, the mind assumes a gay and tranquil habit, analogous to the pleasing objects with which it is surrounded. Some time before the ship arrives at her anchoring ground, she is hailed by the boats of the country, filled with people of business, who come in crowds on board. This is the moment in which a European feels the great distinction between Asia and his own country. The rustling of fine linen, and the general hum of unusual conversation, present to his mind for a moment the idea of an assembly of females. When he ascends upon the deck, he is struck with the long muslin dresses, and black faces adorned with very large gold ear-rings and white turbans. The first salutation he receives from these strangers is, by bending their bodies very low, touching the deck with the back of the hand, and the forehead three times. The natives first seen in India by a European voyager, are Hindoos, the original inhabitants of the peninsula. In this part of India they are delicately framed; their hands, in particular, are more like those of tender females; and do not appear to be, what is considered a proper proportion to the rest of the person, which is usually above the middle size. Correspondent to this delicacy of appearance are their manners; mild, tranquil, and sedulously attentive; in this last respect they are indeed remarkable, as they never interrupt any person who is speaking, but wait patiently till he has concluded; and then answer with the most perfect respect and composure. From the ship a stranger is conveyed on shore in a boat of the country, called a Maffoolah boat; a work of curious construction, and well calculated to elude the violent shocks of the surf, that breaks here with great violence: they are formed without a keel, flat-bottomed, with the sides raised high, and sewed together with the fibres of the cocoa-nut tree, and caulked with the same material: they are remarkably light, and are managed with great dexterity by the natives; they are usually attended by two kattamarans, (rafts) paddled by one man each, the intention of which is, that, should the boat be overfet by the violence of the surf, the persons in it may be preserved. The boat is driven, as the sailors say, high and dry; and the passengers are landed on a fine sandy beach, and immediately enter the fort of Madras. The appearance of the natives is exceedingly varied; some are wholly naked, and others so clothed, that nothing but the face and neck are to be discovered: beside this, the European is struck with many other objects, such as women carried on men's shoulders on palankeens, and men riding on horseback, clothed in linen dresses like women; which, with the very different face of the country from all he had ever seen, or conceived, excite the strangest emotions of surprise." There is a second city, called the Black Town, nearly four miles in circuit, separated from Madras by the breadth of a proper esplanade only: Madras, in common with all the European settlements on this coast, has no port for shipping; the coast forming nearly a straight line; and it is incommoded also with a high and dangerous surf. The citadel here, which was planned by Mr. Robins, and is situated in the middle of the White, or English Town, is one of the best fortresses in possession of the British nation. The town is also encompassed with a strong wall, of the same stone with which the citadel is built, defended by batteries, bastions, half-moons, and flankers; the whole mounted with upwards of 200 pieces of cannon and mortars. Opposite the west gate of the citadel are barracks, and a convenient hospital for the company's soldiers, and at the other end of the barracks is a mint, where the company coin gold and silver. Madras was first settled by the English, in 1640, and greatly enlarged in the reign of Charles II. it was taken by the French in 1746, but restored by the treaty of Aix la Chapelle. Lat. 13. 5. MADRE DE DIOS, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Patagonia, 60 leagues in circumference. Lat. 51. S. lon. 77. W.

MADRE DE POPA, a town and celebrated convent of S. America, in Terra Firma, seated on the river Grande, 50 miles E. of Carthagena. It is almost as much resorted to by pilgrims of America, as the Santa Casa, or Holy House of Loretto, is in Europe; and they pretend that the image of Mary, the mother of Jesus, has done a great many miracles in favour of the fleets and seafaring people.

Madresfield, Worcestershire, N. of Malvern-Chace.

MADRID, the capital of Spain, in New Castile, situated on the Manzanares, the banks banks of which, in the environs, afford an agreeable shade, coolness, and verdure. It was formerly an obscure place, belonging to the archbishop of Toledo, but the purity of the air engaged Charles V. and his successors, to chuse it for their residence. It is seated in a large plain, surrounded by high mountains, but has no wall, rampart, or ditch. The houses are all built with brick, and the streets are long, broad, and straight, and adorned at proper distances with handsome fountains. There are above 100 towers, or steeples, in different places, which contribute greatly to the embellishment of the city. The royal palace is built on an eminence, at the extremity of the city. The finest square in Madrid is the Placa Mayor, which is spacious and regular, surrounded with 136 houses, five stories high, and of an equal height. Every stage is adorned with a handsome balcony, and the fronts are supported by columns, forming a piazza round the square. Here the market is held, and here they had their famous bull-fights. However, it is observable, that the very finest houses have no glass-windows, they being only lattices. The Prado, which is the public airing place, is shaded with regular rows of poplar trees, and is watered with 23 fountains. Here the stately Spaniards make the most brilliant display of their finery. Philip II. built a large and magnificent bridge over the river, which river being exceedingly small, has occasioned a great many jokes. The city of Madrid contains 15 gates, 18 parishes, 35 convents of monks, and 31 of nuns, 39 colleges, hospitals, or houses of charity, 7398 dwelling houses, and about 160,000 inhabitants. There are four academies in Madrid: the Academy of Belles Lettres; the Academy of Spanish Historical Monuments; the Academy of the fine Arts, painting, sculpture, and architecture; and the Academy of Medicine; which last is held in no great esteem. Lat. 40. 25. N. lon. 3. 30. W.

MADRID NEW, a town of N. America, in Louisiana, intended as the capital of a new settlement. It is likely to become the great emporium of the western country, as the immense quantities of produce that will be borne down the Illinois, the Mississippi, the Ohio, and their various branches will naturally centre here. It is situated on the western side of the river Mississippi, 1040 miles from the mouth, and opposite the mouth of the river Ohio. Lat. 30. 36. N. lon. 89. 50. W.

MADRIGAL, two towns in Old Castile; the latter is 30 miles S. of Valladolid.

MADRIGAL, a town of Popayan.

MADROGAM, or BANANATAPA, a large town of Africa, capital of Monomotapa, with a spacious palace, where the king resides. The upper part of the houses are in the shape of bells. Lat. 18. O. S. lon. 31. 40. E.

MADURA, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a province of the same name, about 60 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. It is fortified with square towers and parapets, well furnished with cannon, and is situated on the coast of Coromandel, 80 miles SSW. of Tanjore. Lat. 9. 55. N. lon. 78. 12. E.

MADURA, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 75 miles in length, and from 9 to 15 in breadth. Two provinces are under the Dutch; the third is governed by a native king. It is exceedingly fertile in rice, for which article it is one of the granaries of India. Madura, the capital, is situated on the S. coast, in lat. 7. 5. S. lon. 112. 49. E.

MAELER, a beautiful lake of Sweden, situated between the provinces of Westmanland and Sudermanland, and communicating with Stockholm. It is said to contain 120 islands, great and small. Its length is about 80 miles from E. to W. the breadth is various.

MAELLA, a small town of Arragon.

MAELSTRAND. See MARSTRAND.

MAELSTROM, a very extraordinary and dangerous whirlpool on the coast of Norway, in lat. 68 deg. N. Of the situation of this whirlpool we have the following account from Jonas Ramus: "The mountain of Hellekken, in Lofoden, lies a league from the Island Ver, and betwixt these two runs that large and dreadful stream, called Moskoestrom, from the island Moskoe, which is in the middle of it, together with several circumjacent isles, as Ambaaren, half a quarter of a league northward, Iflesen, Hoeholm, Kieldholm, Suarven, and Buckholm. Moskoe lies about half a quarter of a mile south of the Island of Ver, and betwixt them, these small islands, Otterholm, Flimem, Sandflesen, and Stockholm. Betwixt Lofoden and Moskoe, the depth of the water is between 36 and 40 fathoms; but on the other side, toward Ver, the depth decreases so as not to afford a convenient passage for a vessel, without the risk of splitting on the rocks, which happens even in the calmest weather. When it is flood, the stream runs up the country between Lofoden and Moskoe with a boisterous rapidity; but the roar of its impetuous ebb to the sea is scarce equalled by the loudest and and most dreadful cataracts; the noise being heard several leagues off, and the vortices or pits are of such extent and depth, that if a ship comes within its attraction, it is inevitably absorbed and carried down to the bottom, and there beat to pieces against the rocks; and when the water relaxes, the fragments thereof are thrown up again. But these intervals of tranquillity are only at the turn of the ebb and flood, and calm weather, and last but a quarter of an hour, its violence gradually returning. When the stream is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a storm, it is dangerous to come within a Norway mile of it; boats, ships, and yachts having been carried away, by not guarding against it before they were within its reach. It likewise happens frequently, that whales come too near the stream, and are overpowered by its violence; and then it is impossible to describe their howlings and bellowings in their fruitless struggles to disengage themselves. A bear once, attempting to swim from Lofoden to Moskoe, with a design of preying upon the sheep at pasture in the island, afforded the like spectacle to the people; the stream caught him, and bore him down, while he roared terribly, so as to be heard on shore. Large stocks of firs and pine trees, after being absorbed by the current, rise again, broken and torn to such a degree as if bristles grew on them. This plainly shows the bottom to consist of craggy rocks, among which they are whirled to and fro. This stream is regulated by the flux and reflux of the sea; it being constantly high and low water every 6 hours. In the year 1645, early in the morning of Sexagesima Sunday, it raged with so much noise and impetuosity, that on the Island of Moskoe, the very stones of the houses fell to the ground."

Maenclochog, Pembrokehire, S. Wales.
Maer, Staffordshire, between Drayton in Shropshire and Whitmore.

MAESE, or MEUSE, a large river which rises in France, near the village of Meuse, in the dept. of Upper Marne. It waters Verdun, Sedan, &c. and entering the Netherlands at Giver, it flows to Charlemont, Namur, Liege, Maestricht, Venlo, Grave, Battenburg, and Voorn, where it is joined by the Waal. At Dort, it receives the Merwe, and enters the German Ocean by several channels, through the islands of Holland and Zealand.

MAESLAND SLUYS, a town in S. Holland, the inhabitants of which are principally engaged in the herring and whale fisheries. It is situated on a canal which forms a communication between Delft and the Maese, 17 miles S. of Delft, and 10 W. of Rotterdam.

MAESTRICHT, a large, ancient town of the Netherlands, formerly belonging to the duchy of Lorrain. It is now united to the duchy of Brabant, although insulated in the bishoprick of Liege. The town-house and other public buildings are handsome, and the place is so well defended by detached bastions, horn-works, intrenchments, numerous redoubts, ravelins, a good covered way, &c. that it is justly reckoned one of the strongest fortresses in Europe. Near it are large stone quarries, in which are subterraneous passages of great extent. It is seated on the river Maese, which separates it from Wyck, and with which it communicates by a handsome bridge, 15 miles N. of Liege, and 46 E. of Brussels.

MAESYEK, a town of Liege, situated on the Meuse, 30 miles NNE. of Liege.

MAFFRA, a town of Estremadura, in Portugal, famous for a convent of extraordinary magnificence, founded, in pursuance of a vow, by king John V. on the spot where formerly stood the poorest friary in the kingdom. This, on enquiry, was found to be at Maffra, where 12 Franciscans lived together in a poor hut. The draught of this building was procured from Rome. It is 5 miles NW. of Lisbon.

MAGADOXA, or MOLDOSCHO, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Africa, on the coast of the Indian Sea; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, with a good harbour. The country of Magadoxa extends from the river Juboo, near the equator, to beyond the fifth degree of N. lat. how far it extends to the westward is but little known. The inhabitants are mostly Mahometans, who came and settled here in the time of the caliphs. Mixed with them are the Bedwin Arabs, who still follow their old pagan superstitions, and a still greater number of Abyssinian Christians. All speak the Arabic tongue. The inhabitants are warlike, and use poisoned arrows and lances. The city of Magadoxa is a place of great commerce, foreign merchants from Aden, and other parts, exchanging cotton, silk, cloth, spices, drugs, &c. for gold, ivory, wax, and other commodities. Lat. 2. 30. N. lon. 44. 0. E.

MAGDALENE'S CAVE, a cave in Carinthia, 10 miles E. of Gortz. It appears like like a chasm in a rock, and at the entrance, torches are lighted to conduct travellers. It is divided into several apartments, with a vast number of pillars formed by nature, which give it a beautiful appearance, they being as white as snow, and almost transparent. The bottom is of the same substance, insomuch that a person may fancy himself to be walking among the ruins of an enchanted castle, surrounded by magnificent pillars, some entire, and others broken.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS, in the gulf of St. Lawrence. The largest, which gives name to the rest, is situated in lat. 47. 25. N. and lon. 61. 20. W.

MAGDEBURG, a large, well-built and trading town of Lower Saxony, capital of a duchy of the same name. Among the public buildings are the king's palace, anciently the residence of the bishops, the armoury, the governor's house, and the guild-hall, where the regency and consistory are held. In the cathedral is a superb mausoleum of Otho the Great. The cathedral square is ornamented with large elegant houses, and its area is well paved. Here are different manufactories of cotton and linen goods, stockings, hats, beautiful leather gloves, tobacco, and snuff; but the principal are those of woollen and silk. It is happily situated for trade, having an easy communication with Hamburg by the Elbe, and lying on the road between Upper and Lower Germany. It was taken by storm, in 1631, by the imperial general Tilly, who burnt the town and massacred the inhabitants, of whom only 800 escaped out of 40,000; and many young women plunged into the Elbe to escape violation. It is strongly fortified, having among other works, a citadel seated on an island in the river Elbe, and is 52 miles WSW. of Potsdam. Lat. 52. 11. N. lon. 11. 45. E.

MAGDEBURG, a duchy in Lower Saxony, about 60 miles in length and 30 in breadth, subject to the king of Prussia. In 1703, it contained 35 towns and 431 villages. The States consist of the prelates, the nobility, and the cities. It produces fine cattle, and a considerable quantity of corn; those parts, which are not marshy and overgrown with wood, being very fertile. The country affords several mines of pit-coal; and the salt springs are so rich, that they are able to supply all Germany with that commodity.

MAGDELAINE, a small island near the southern extremity of the island of Corsica.

MAGDELANA, a large river of S. America, which rises under the equator, and running N. through Terra-Firma, unites with the Cance, is then called Rio Grande, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, below Madre de Popa, 20 leagues W. of St. Martha.

MAGEE, an island on the coast of Antrim, Ulster, 6 miles long and 2 broad, situated N. of Carrickfergus-Bay.

MAGELLAN, a famous strait of South America, discovered in 1520 by Ferdinando Magellan, a Portuguese, in the service of Spain. It has many safe harbours in it, with narrow entrances, and vast large bays sheltered so closely on all sides by high mountains, that ships may ride safely in them without the least anchor. The Spaniards call the country to the N. of the strait, Tierra Magellanica, and reckon it a part of Chili. They had a fort and garrison upon this strait, but the men all perished through cold and want of provisions.

MAGGEROE, a large island near the coast of Norway. Lat. 71. N.

Magestan, Dorset. near Gillingham.

MAGGIA. See MADIA.

MAGGIORE, or LOCARNO, a lake in Italy, about 46 miles long and 6 or 8 broad, lying between the Swiss bailiwicks and the Milanese. The lake abounds with trout, perch, and other fish, and the water is clear, but greenish.

Maghen, Monmouth. W. of Newport.

Maghera, in Derry, Ulster, 92, miles from Dublin. Maghera, in Down, Ulster, Magheracreegan, in Tyrone, Ulster, Magherafell, in Londonderry, Ulster, with a considerable linen manufacture; 30 miles SE. of Londonderry. Magheralin, in Armagh, Ulster, pleasantly situated on the river Lagan; there are several bleach-yards and manufactories about it. Magheredroll i. e. The Field of Difficulties; a name given to the country about Bal-linehinch, in Down, Ulster, on account of its being full of rocks and mountains.

Magbaree, or Seven Hogs, a cluster of small islands on the W. coast of Ireland, at the S. side of the entrance into Tralee Bay.

MAGHARIES BAY, in Kerry, Munster, between Brandon-Head and the Magheries Islands. It is a dangerous place for mariners, being full of sunken rocks, and exposed to frequent squalls from the mountains.

Magherelin, or Maxalin, in Down, Ulster. The linen manufacture is carried on extensively here. Magheredoly, in Fermanagh, Ulster. Magbery, in Armagh, Ulster, Magherybeg, in Kerry, Munster, Magbremore, Magbrenmore, in Donegal, Ulster; also a bay on the coast of Wicklow, Munster, 5 miles S. of Wicklow Head. Magilla, in Cork, Munster. Magillagan-Point, a cape in Derry, Ulster.

MAGLIANO, a town of the pope's territories, in Sabina, 28 miles N. of Rome.

MAGNAVACCA, a fort in the Ferrarese, situated on a canal which runs from the Adriatic to Comachio.

MAGNISA, anciently MAGNESIA, a town of Natolia, once the seat of the Ottoman empire, and still large, populous, and rich. It is seated on the Sarabat, 60 miles N. of Smyrna. Lat. 38. 50. N. lon. 27. 25. E.

MAGNY, a town in the dept. of Seine and Oise, 12 miles N. of Mantes; and a town in the depart. of Nievre, 8 miles S. of Nevers.

Magor, Monm. SW. of Caldicot.

MAGRA, or MAGORA, a river of Italy, which rises in the Appenine Mountains, on the borders of Modena, Tuscany and Genoa, and passing through the Valley of Magra, falls into the Mediterranean, 5. miles S. of Sarzana, in the territory of Genoa.

MAGUELONE, a lake in the dept. of Herault, near a town of the same name, seated on the coast of the Mediterranean.

Maguniby, in Kerry, Munster. Maguire's Bridge, in Fermanagh, Ulster.

Mahallagh, in Cork, Munster, on the Lee, 5 miles E. of Macroomp.

MAHANADA, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in Berar, crosses the country of Orissa, and falls, by several mouths, into the Bay of Bengal, 40 miles ESE. of Catrack.

Mahon, a river in Waterford, Munster, which runs into the sea, 11 miles E. of Dungarvan.

MAHRATTAS, the name of two large states of India, which derive their name from Marhat, an ancient province of the Deccan. They are called the Poonah, or Western Mahrattas; and the Berar, or Eastern. Collectively, they occupy all the southern part of Hindoostan Proper, with a large proportion of the Deccan. Malwa, Candeish, Visapour, and part of Orissa; the principal parts of Berar, Guzerat, and Agimere; and a small part of Dowlatabad, Agra, and Allahabad, are comprised within their extensive empire, which extends nearly from sea to sea, across the widest part of the peninsula; and from the confines of Agra northward to the river Kistna southward; forming a tract of about 1000 miles long and 700 broad. The western state, the capital of which is Poonah, is divided among a number of chiefs, or princes, whose obedience to the paishwah, or head, like that of the German princes to the emperor, is merely nominal at any time; and, in some cases, an opposition of interests begets wars, not only between the members of the empire themselves, but also between the members and the head. Nagpour is the capital of the eastern Mahrattas. Both these states, with the Nizam of the Deccan, were in alliance with the English East India Company, in the late war against Tippoo Sultan, from whose territories, on the termination of the war, they gained some considerable acquisitions.

Maiden Bower, Bedfordsh. a very large Danish camp of a circular form, surrounded with a great rampart and ditch; near Dunstable.

Maiden-Bradley, Wilts, 5 miles from Frome and Warminster. Maiden Castle, Dorset. a Roman encampment in the parish of Winterborn, St. Martin, the largest and most complete of any in the W. of England, and the summer station of the Durotriges garrison. It consists of a treble ditch and rampart, the inner ones very deep and high. The form is oval, with two entrances, the one on the E. the other on the W. The ends of the ramparts lap over each other, so as to make the entrances winding and intricate. The whole area is 30 acres, and, including all the ramparts and ditches, makes 120 acres. Near the S. entrance is the mouth of a cave, formed by art, the W. division of which could contain 1800 men; its use is unknown. Maiden-Cross, Herts. near Hitchin.

* MAIDENHEAD, anciently, SOUTH EALINGTON, a town in Berkshire, seated on the river Thames, on the great western road, carrying on a great trade in malt, meal, and timber, in their barges to London. It is 12 miles E. by N. of Reading, and 26 W. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Maiden-Heath, Lanc. near Blackburn.

MAIDEN NEWTON a town of Dorsetsh. 3 miles NW. of Frampton. Market disused.

Maiden Oak, Suffex, near the road from Petersfield to London.

Maiden-Way, extends from Maiden Castle, on Stainmore, York, N. Riding, by Kirby Thore, in Westmoreland, and Whitley, to Caer Voran in Northumberland, passing by a chain of stations of the Romans. It is near six yards wide; the sides are formed by lines of very large pebbles, and where the road lies down steep steep descents, the pavement is formed of flat, thin stones, placed on their edges, and laid transversely.

Maidens, or Whillans, rocks so called between the mouths of Larne and Glenarm Bays, in Down, Ulster.

Maidford, Northamp. NW. of Towcester. Maidhurst, Sussex, NW. of Arundel. Maidsmorton, N. of Buckingham.

* MAIDSTONE, a considerable borough of Kent, which contains above 6000 inhabitants. It is a large place, consisting of 4 principal streets, which intersect each other at the market cross, with a jail and county-hall. In the ancient Britons' time, it was reckoned their third chief city, having been a station of the Romans. By means of the Medway, it enjoys a brisk trade in exporting timber, flour, apples, nuts, and other commodities of the county, particularly hops, of which there are numerous plantations around it, as well as orchards of cherries. Here are likewise some capital paper-mills, and a manufactory of linen thread, originally introduced by the Flemings. The tide flows quite up to the town, and brings up barges of 50 or 60 tons. It is seated on the river Medway, a branch of which runs through the town, in a very plentiful county, 9 miles S. of Rochester, 20 W. of Canterbury, and 35 SE. by E. of London. Market on Thursday, and another market on the second Tuesday in every month.

Maidwell, Linc. near Burwell. Maidwell, Northamptonsh. near Harborough. Maies, Sussex, near Selmsdon.

MAILLEZAIS, a town in the dept. of Vendee, 6 miles S. of Fontenay.

Maimbead, Devon. W. of Exmouth.

MAIN, a province of North America, which belongs to the state of Massachusetts. It is about 180 miles in length, and 110 in breadth, and is bounded on the N. and NW. by Canada; on the NE. by New Brunswick; on the SE. by the Atlantic Ocean; and on the W. by Vermont and New Hampshire. It is divided into three counties. Lincoln, which is the easternmost, Cumberland, and York. Portland is the county town of Cumberland, and capital of the whole territory. The heat in summer is intense, and the cold in winter equally extreme; all the fresh water lakes, ponds, and rivers are usually passable on ice for near three months in the winter. The climate is very healthful; many of the inhabitants living 90 years, their present number is about 100,000.

MAINA, a country in the Morea, lying between two chains of mountains, which advance into the sea. The inhabitants were never yet subdued by the Turks. They maintain their independence in the fastnesses of their mountains, and traffick in slaves, which they take indifferently from the Turks and the Christians. They have a harbour and a town of the same name, 30 miles SW. of Mistra.

Main-Broad, Dorsetshire, 3 miles N. of Owen-Main.

MAINE, a river of Germany, which rises in the marquisate of Culmbach, on the confines of Bohemia, and running westward, falls into the Rhine, a little above Mentz. It runs by Bamberg, Wirtzburg, Aschaffenburg, Hanau, and Frankfurt.

MAINE, a ci-devant division of France, now principally forming the departments of the Mayenne and Sarthe.

MAINLAND, ORKNEY, or POMONA, the principal of the Orkney Islands, is 24 miles long and 9 broad. The general appearance of the country is not very different from the Mainland of Shetland. The soil, however, is more fertile, and, in some parts, better cultivated. Kirkwall is the capital. See ORCADES.

MAINLAND, the principal of the Shetland isles, is 60 miles long from N. to S. its breadth, which varies greatly, seldom exceeds 6 miles. The face of the country exhibits a prospect of black, craggy mountains, and marshy plains, interspersed with some verdant spots, which appear smooth and fertile. Neither tree nor shrub is to be seen, except the juniper and the heath. The mountains abound with various kinds of game. Lofly cliffs, impending over the ocean, are the haunts of eagles, falcons, and ravens. The deep caverns underneath shelter seals and otters; and to the winding bays resort the swans, geese, scarfs, and other aquatic birds. The seas abound with fish, such as the cod, turbot, and haddock; but, particularly, at certain seasons, with shoals of herrings of incredible extent; and they are visited, at the same time, by whales and other voracious fishes. Lobsters, oysters, muscles, &c. are also plentiful. The hills are covered with sheep of a small breed, and of a shaggy appearance; but their fleece is commonly very soft, and often extremely fine. From their wool, stockings of such a fine texture have been made, that, although of a large size, a pair was capable of passing through a common gold ring. Their horses are of

of a diminutive size, but remarkably strong and handsome, and are well known by the name of Shelties, from the name of the country. Many rivulets, and considerable lakes, abound with salmon, trout, &c. A mine of copper, and another of iron, have lately been opened near the S. extremity of this island. They are in the hands of the Anglesey Company, and are said to be extremely productive. There is an inexhaustible store of peat, but no coal. Lerwick is the capital.

MAINUNGEN, a town of Henneburg, Franconia.

MAJORCA, an island belonging to Spain, in the Mediterranean Sea, between Ivica and Minorca, the largest of those anciently called Baleares, about 50 miles in length and 35 in breadth. It is mountainous in the N. and W. parts, but fertile, producing corn, oil, honey, saffron, cattle, fish, rabbits, partridges, deer, wild fowl, horses, &c. The whole island is encompassed with watch towers. It is temperate and wholesome, but the excessive heat frequently occasions a scarcity. It has no considerable rivers, though there are a great many fine fountains and wells, and several good harbours. The inhabitants are robust, lively, and good sailors. The capital, MAJORCA, anciently PALMA, is a large and rich town, situated in a bay on the SW. coast of the island, with a good harbour. It has large and broad streets, spacious squares, stately stone houses, built in the antique manner, a large and magnificent cathedral, and 22 churches, besides chapels and oratories. The inhabitants are computed at 10,000. The university is more ancient than celebrated. Lat. 39. 34. N. lon. 2. 25. E.

MAIRE, LE, a strait of S. America, lying between Staten Land and Terra del Fuego, so called from the navigator, who discovered it, in 1616. Lat. 55. 0. S.

MAKKAN. See MACKERAN.

MALABAR, the name of the western coast of the peninsula of Hindoostan, extending from Cape Comorin to about 100 miles S. of Goa.

MALACCA, called by the ancients the GOLDEN CHERSONNESUS, a large peninsula in Asia, bounded on the N. by Siam; and on all other sides by the ocean; about 500 miles in length, and from 60 to 150 in breadth. It produces few commodities for trade, except tin and elephants' teeth; but there are a great many excellent fruits and roots, which yield good refreshment for strangers that call here. The pine-apple is the best in the world, and the manjostain is a delicious fruit, in the shape of an apple, whose skin is thick and red. The rambutan is of the size of a walnut, with a very agreeable pulp; and the durian, though it has not a pleasant smell, yet has a very delicious taste. They have plenty of cocoa nuts, whose shells will hold an English quart; beside lemons, oranges limes, sugar-canes, and mangoes. There is but little corn, and sheep and bullocks are scarce; but pork, poultry, and fish are pretty plentiful. The religion of the natives is a mixture of Mahometanism. Their language is peculiarly soft, and is as common in the Indies as the French is in Europe, being very easily acquired, because it has no inflections either in nouns or verbs. The interior inhabitants, who are, for the most part, savages, have abandoned themselves, with desperation, to the most ferocious habits, taking delight in doing mischief to their neighbours. The Dutch have been masters of the town of Malacca, situated on the SW. coast, since 1640, when they took it from the Portuguese, after a six months siege. While in possession of the latter, it was famous all over India and Europe, being, after Goa and Ormuz, by far the richest city in the Indies, and a great market for all the different commodities produced in Japan, China, Formosa, Tonquin, Cochinchina, Giam, Lucon, Amboyna, &c. During the present war, it has been attacked and taken by the English, and is now in their possession, Lat. 2. 11. N. lon. 101. 11. E.

MALACCA, STRAIT OF, the narrow sea between the Island of Sumatra and the SW. coast of Malacca.

Maladar, Cornwall, N. of Grampound.

MALAGA, a considerable sea port of Granada;

Granada, with a good harbour, built by the Phenicians, who called it Malacha, several centuries before Christ. Strabo speaks of it as a Carthaginian colony, very commercial, and famous for its salted provisions. The inhabitants export to the amount of two millions and a half of piaſtres, in wines, brandy, fruits, ſhumach, pickled anchovies, oil, &c. and only import to about one million and a half; Malaga, however, has little navigation of its own, the ſhips which arrive there being chiefly Engliſh and Dutch. It is ſeated on the Mediterranean, 15 miles S. of Cordova, and 235 S. of Madrid. Lat. 36. 44. N. lon. 4. 25. W.

MALAHIDE, a town and bay of Dublin, 6 miles from the metropolis. A cotton manuſacture is eſtabliſhed here, the works of which are carried on by water.

Malchway, a river in Rednorſ. which runs into the Wye, near Llanſtevan. Malden, Kent, in Sheppey Iſle. Malden, Surry, 5 miles from Kingſton.

MALDEN, anciently CAMELODUNUM, a populous town of Eſſex, the firſt Roman colony in Britain, and the ſeat of ſome of the old Britiſh kings, ſituated near the confluence of the Chelmer with the Blackwater. Veſſels of 400 tons burden come up to the haven to unload; the colliers, however, lie in deep water below the town, and the coals are fetched up in lighters. Malden carries on a conſiderable trade in corn, coals, iron, wine, brandy, rum, deals, and chalk rubbiſh. The cuſtom of Borough Engliſh is kept up here. It is ſituated near the confluence of the river Blackwater, called alſo Malden Water and the Chelmer, 10 miles E. of Chelmsford, and 37 NE. of London. Market on Saturday.

Malden Jenkins, Eſſex, two miles from Malden.

MALDIVE ISLANDS, a cluster of Iſlands ſaid to be 1000 in number, SW. of Cape Comorin, in the Indian Sea. The northernmoſt is in lat. 7. 6. N. lon. 73. 4. E. The principal of them, called MALE, about a league and a half in circumference, is the moſt fertile, and the reſidence of the prince. It is ſituated nearly in the centre. Theſe iſlands are moſtly ſmall, and uninhabited. The inhabitants are a mixture of Arabs and Indians of Malabar. They ſupply veſſels with ſails and cordage, cocoa-nuts, oil, honey, dry fiſh, tortoiſe ſhell, and eſpecially cowries.

Mallersſtang-Foreſt, Weſtmoreland.

MALLICOLLO, an iſland, one of the largeſt of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, about 18 leagues long, and from 5 to 7 wide. Its inland mountains are moderately high, and clad with foreſts. The ſoil is a rich and fertile mould, in general, however, inferior to that of the Friendly Iſlands. Its vegetable productions are luxuriant, and in great variety; cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, bananas, ſugar-canes, yams, eddoes, turmeric, and oranges.—Hogs, and common poultry, are their domeſtic animals. They had no dogs, for which reaſon, Captain Cook, who viſited the iſland in 1774, left them a dog and a bitch. The inhabitants, in their form, language, and manners, are widely different from thoſe of the Friendly and Society Iſlands. They correſpond in many particulars with the natives of New Guinea and Papua, particularly in their black colour and woolly hair. Both men and women are very dark coloured, ill-proportioned, and ugly, with long heads, flat faces, and monkey countenances; and the latter paint their heads, faces, and ſhoulders red. They are of a ſlender make, and tie a rope ſo faſt round their belly, that the ſhape of their bodies reſembles that of an overgrown piſmire. The climate of Mallicollo is very warm, and the inhabitants feel little inconvenience in going almoſt naked, either from heat or cold. Their keeping their bodies entirely free from punctures, is one particular, particular, that remarkably distinguishes them from the other tribes of the S. Sea. Lat. 16. 15. S. lon. 167. 45. E

MALLING, WEST, a town of Kent, seated near Compherst Wood, on a brook, that runs into the Medway, 6 miles W. of Maidstone, and 30 E. by S. of London. This parish was anciently taxed to contribute towards the repair of the third arch, or pier, of Rochester-bridge. Market on Saturday.

* MALLOW, a considerable town of Cork, in Munster. Here is a fine spring, of moderately tepid water, resembling in its qualities the hot-well waters of Bristol. It is seated on the river Blackwater, 14 miles N. of Cork.

Mallocks, or Matlocks, Herts, on the river Ash, near Hunsdon.

MALMEDY, a town of Liege, which, however, in spiritualities, is under the Archbishop of Cologne. The principal trade is making of cloth and dressing leather.

MALMO, a sea-port of Schonen, seated on the Sound, 9 miles SW. of Lund.

MALMSBURY, originally MADULPHSBURG, and, by corruption, Malmsbury; in an ancient manuscript, however, called Aldhelmshirig, an ancient town in Wiltshire, which drives a considerable trade in the woollen manufacture. It was long famous for its abbey, which flourished in great wealth, exceeding all in the county in bigness, revenues, and honour. Its Abbot was mitred, and sat in parliament. The memory of Aldhelm, its first Abbot, the favourite of the great Saxon King Athelstan, and whom he procured to be canonized after his death, is still kept up by a meadow near this town, called Aldhelm's Mead. King Athelstan amply endowed the abbey, granted the town large immunities, and chose it for his burying place: he was buried accordingly under the high altar of the church, and his monument still remains in the nave of it. It is pleasantly situated on the river Avon, which almost surrounds it, and over which it has 6 bridges, 26 miles E. by N. of Bristol, and 95 W. of London. Market on Saturday.

Malmeton, Linc. N. of Kirton, in Lindsey. Malmsborn, Westm. SW. of Appleby.

MALO, ST. a sea-port in the department of Ille and Vilaine, on a small island, united to the main land by a narrow mole or causeway, 6 or 700 yards in length: it has a large, well-frequented harbour, but difficult of access, on account of the rocks that surround it; and is a rich trading place, strong by nature and art towards the sea, and defended by a citadel. It is 206 miles NW. of Paris. Lat. 48. 39. N. lon. 1. 57. W.

Malora, a town of Genoa.

MALPARTIDA, a town of Spanish Estremadura, 14 miles SSW. of Placentia.

MALPAS, a town of Cheshire, called in Latin Mala Platea, and by the Normans Mal Pas, according to Camden, from its narrow, steep, intricate way. It contains three streets, an hospital, and a grammar-school, and the benefice is rich enough to support two rectors, who officiate alternately. It is seated on a high eminence, near the river Dee, 15 miles SE. of Chester, and 166 NW. of London. Market on Monday.

Malperton, Dorset. near Charborough.

MALPLAQUET, a village of the late Austrian Hainault, famous for a dearly-purchased victory, gained Sept. 11, 1709, by the allies under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, over the French, commanded by the Marshals Villars and Boufflers. The confederates took 40 colours and standards, 16 pieces of artillery, and a good number of prisoners. It is 8 miles SE. of Mons.

MALTA, an island of the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily, 20 miles in length, and 12 in its greatest breadth. It was anciently little else than a barren rock; but such quantities of soil have been brought from Africa and Sicily, that it is now become fertile. It has excellent vines, lemons, fruits, cotton, plenty of honey, good pastures, considerable fisheries, sea salt, and a profitable coral fishery. However, they sow but little corn, because they can purchase it cheap in Sicily, and the island is deficient in wood. The number of inhabitants is variously estimated at from 60 to 90,000, who speak a corrupt Arabic, and, in the towns, Italian. After the taking of Rhodes, the emperor Charles V. gave this island to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. It was attacked by the Turks in 1566, who, after many dreadful assaults, were obliged to abandon the enterprise, with the loss of 30,000 men. The whole island is extremely well fortified. The knights of Malta formerly consisted of 8 nations; but they have long been only 7, because the English have forsaken them. They are obliged to suppress all pirates, are at perpetual war with the Turks and other Mahometans, and are all under a vow of celibacy and chastity. It is about 60 miles SSW. of Cape Passaro, in Sicily.

* MALTON, a town in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, seated on the river Derwent, which was made navigable to the Ouse, by an act in the 1st of Queen Anne. It is composed of two towns, the New and the Old, and is well inhabited. It is 18 miles NE. of York, and 216 N. by W. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday, and fairs on Saturday before Palm Sunday, the Saturday before Whitsunday, and October 10 and 11.

Maltravil, near Montgomery, North Wales, a poor village, but formerly a large place, and the residence of the princes of Powysland.

MALVASIA, anciently EPIDAUROS, a small promontory of Turkey in Europe, almost surrounded by the sea, on the eastern coast of the Morea. The rich wine, formerly so much valued under the title of Malmsey, is brought hence. It is 40 miles ESE. of Mistra. Lat. 36. 57. N. lon. 23. 22. E.

Malvern Hills, hills in the SW. part of Worcestershire, which may be seen at a great distance. They extend about 10 miles in length, in a direction N. and S. the N. extremity about 7 miles SSW. of Worcester. In these hills is a spring of uncommon purity, much resorted to in scrofulous and scorbutic cases.

MALWA, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the W. by Guzerat; on the N. by Agimere and Agra; on the E. by Allahabad and Orissa; and on the S. by Candeish. It is situated nearly under the tropic of Cancer, and is one of the most extensive, elevated, and diversified tracts in Hindoostan, and is divided between the paishwah of the western Mahrattas, and two of the inferior chiefs, Sindia and Holkar. Ougein is the capital of Sindia, and Indore of Holkar.

Malwater, Yorkshire, NE. of Settle. Malwood Castle, and Lodge, Hampshire, near Beaulieu. Manarabty, mountains of Mayo, in Connaught, 13 miles WNW. of Castlebar.

MAMERS, a town in the department of Sarte, 12 miles SE. of Alençon.

Mamble, Worcestershire, near Lindridge. Mambledy, Monmouthshire, W. of Usk. Mamhead, Devonshire. Here is one of the finest seats in the county, commanding, full, various, and beautiful prospects of the river Ex, the sea, and the country, stretching away beyond Exmouth, Lymington, &c. to the Dorsetshire and Somersetshire hills. Mam Tor, a mountain of Derbyshire, with lead mines in it, in the Peak, near Castleton.

* MAN, an island in the Irish Sea, W. of the coast of Cumberland, about 30 miles in length, and from 8 to 15 in breadth. It contains 17 parishes, called kirks, and the chief towns are Ruthen, Douglas, and Peel. The soil varies in different tracts, yet produces more corn than is sufficient to maintain the natives. The air, which is sharp and cold in winter, is healthy, and the inhabitants live to a very great age. The commodities of this island are black cattle, wool, fine and coarse linen, hides, skins, honey, tallow, and herrings. The frosts here are short, and the snow, especially in lands near the sea, lies not long on the ground. Their cattle and horses are small, and they have badgers, foxes, eagles, and mottled hawks. Here are several quarries of stone and thin blue slate, and some mines of lead, copper, and iron. Thin oat cakes are the common bread of the inhabitants. About the rocks of the island breed an incredible number of all sorts of sea-fowl, and especially on the Calf of Man, an island 3 miles in circuit, before the S. promontory of Man, and separated from it by a channel 2 furlongs broad. On this little island 5000 young puffins are generally taken every year. The bishop is nominated by the Duke of Athol, as heir of the eldest branch of the Stanleys, Earls of Derby; but the sovereignty of the island was purchased by the English government in 1765, whereby a free trade was permitted with England, and an entire stop put to the clandestine trade which they carried on, with prodigious success, with England and Ireland. He was formerly reckoned a baron, but does not sit in the house of Peers, although he is allowed the highest seat in the lower house of convocation. The language is a dialect of the Erse. In its civil government, the island is divided into 6 sheedings, each having its proper coroner, who is intrusted with the peace of his district, and acts in the nature of a sheriff. Of their laws, the Lord Chief Justice Coke observes, "that they are such as are scarce to be found any where else."

Man or Maun, a river in Nottinghamshire, which falls into the Meden at Houghton. Manacha, Cornw. SE. of Helston, Helston. Manacles, Cornwall, rocky points in the English Channel, E. of the Lizard Point.

MANAR, an island of Asia, on the NW. coast of the island of Ceylon. It gives the name of Gulf to the Sea which lies to the S. The Portuguese got possession of it in 1560; but the Dutch took it from them in 1658. Lat. 9. 0. N. lon. 79. 58. E.

MANCHA, LA, a mountainous territory in New Castile, having Murcia on the E. and Murcia and Jaen to the S. This is the most cheerful country of Spain. The inhabitants are affable, and great lovers of music and dancing. Their songs, or seguidillas, are peculiar to that part of the kingdom. The women are tall, well-made, and have handsome features; while seeing a pretty woman dance the menco, a certain rapid movement, with voluptuous postures, and steps languishing, graceful, varied and just, even a philosopher would find his wisdom troublesome. A late traveller says, "There is no labourer or young female peasant, who is not well acquainted with Don Quixote and Sancho."

MANCHA, a town of Jaen in Spain, 7 miles E. of Jaen.

MANCHE LA, or THE CHANNEL, a department in the western part of the cidevant Normandy, forming nearly a peninsula, on the N. coast. Manchi La coast. It is bounded on the N. and W. by the English channel, and on the S. by the departments of Ille and Vilaine, and the Mayenne. Coutances is the capital.

* MANCHESTER, anciently a Roman station called MANCIPIUM, a large, populous, and flourishing town in Lancashire, and a place of great antiquity. It was famous for its population, market, and manufactures of stuffs in Camden's time, but it is now principally conspicuous as the centre of the cotton trade, an immense business, extending, in some or other of its operations, from Furness (where great cotton spinning-mills have been established) to Derby N. and S. and from Halifax to Liverpool E. and W. The labours of a very populous neighbourhood are recollected at Manchester, whence they are sent to London, Liverpool, Hull, &c. These consist of a great variety of cotton, silk, linen, and mixed goods, fitted for all sorts of markets, both at home and abroad, spreading over a great part of Europe, America, and the coast of Guinea, and bringing back vast profits to this country. The manufacture of ticking, tapes, filleting and other small wares, of silk goods, and of hats, is also carried on at Manchester; from which various sources of wealth, it has attained greater opulence than almost any of the trading towns in England. Its buildings, especially the more modern ones, are on a proportional scale of size and elegance. Its chief ornaments are the college, the market-place, the exchange, the collegiate church, and the infirmary. Manchester contains 600 streets and 14 churches, besides other places of worship; the number of inhabitants is estimated at 70,000. By the river Irwell, over which it has an ancient and lofty stone bridge, it has a communication with the Merley, and all the late various extensions of inland navigation. It is situated at the confluence of the above river and the Irk, 67 miles WSW. of York, and 182 NNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

MANFREDONIA, a sea-port of Capitanata, Naples, built in the year 1256; by King Manfred, on the ruins of the ancient Sipontium. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, in the Adriatic, in lat. 41. 35. N. and lon. 16. 12. E.

MANGALORE, a sea-port in Hindoostan, in the Canary country, on the coast of Malabar. It has an excellent road for ships ships to anchor in, while the rainy season lasts. On their festival days, the Hindoo inhabitants carry their idols in triumph, being placed in a waggon, adorned on all sides with flowers. There are several sharp, crooked, iron hoops fastened to the wheels, upon which the mad devotees throw themselves, and are crushed to pieces. It is the greatest place for trade of any in the kingdom; and the Portuguese have a factory here for rice, and a pretty large church, frequented by black converts. The houses are meanly built along the sides of the rivers. Lat. 12. 50. N. lon. 74. 44. E.

MANGEEA, an island in the S. Sea, about 4 leagues in circumference. The coast is guarded by a reef of coral rocks, against which a heavy surf is continually breaking. In the interior parts it rises into small hills, whence there is an easy descent to the shore. They have neither hogs nor dogs; but they have plantains, taro, and bread-fruit. Captain Cook represents this as a very fine island; but the hostile appearance of its inhabitants obliged him to leave it (in the year 1777) without making any stay. Lat. 21. 27. S. lon. 158. 13. W.

MANILLA, town or city, capital of the Island of Luconia, as well as the Philippine Islands, situated on a bay on the SW. coast. It contains about 8000 inhabitants, exclusive of as many Chinese, who live in the suburbs, and about as many more throughout the islands. There are 15 other suburbs, inhabited by Japanese and nations of various mixtures. The streets are broad, but frequent earthquakes have spoiled their uniformity. The citadel is in the shape of a triangle, having one bastion towards the sea, another towards the river, and a third at the W. point, to cover the port, which is only fit for small vessels, and there are good out-works. In 1762, Manilla was taken by the English under Rear Admiral Cornish, and Colonel Sir William Drapier, and, to save it from destruction, it was agreed to pay a million sterling for its ransom; but this agreement was ungenerously disowned by the Spanish court.

MANTUA, THE DUCHY OF, a country of Italy, lying along the river Po, which divides it into parts, having the Veronese and Bressan to the N. and the Cremonese to the W. It is about 50 miles in length, and 35 in breadth; is fruitful in corn, pasture, flax, leguminous plants, fruits, and excellent wine, and abounds with good horses. The house of Austria has been in possession of this duchy since the death of the last duke, Charles IV. in 1708, having annexed it to the government of Milan. It now, however, maintains a French garrison, and forms a part of the new Cisalpine Republic. The principal rivers are the Po, Oglio, Mincio, and Secchia; and the principal town is of the same name.

MANTUA, the capital city of the duchy of the same name, in Italy, is seated on an island in the midst of a lake, and is very strong by situation as well as art, as there is no coming at it, except by two causeways which cross the lake. It is very large, having 8 gates, 4 collegiate churches, 21 parochial, 14 other churches and alms-houses, 11 oratories, 40 convents and nunneries, and without the city, 3 parish churches, 2 other churches, and 7 convents; also a quarter for the Jews to live in, and above 16,000 inhabitants. The streets are broad and straight, and the houses well built. It was greatly noted for its silk, and other manufactures; but they are now inconsiderable, and the air in the summer-time is unwholesome. It is seated on the river Mincio, and has a university; 35 miles NE. of Parma, 22 SW. of Verona, and 220 N. by W. of Rome. Lat. 45. 10. N. Lon. 10. 50. E.

MARQUESAS, a group of islands in the South Sea, first discovered by Mendana, a Spaniard, in 1595. They are 5 in number, and named St. Christina, Magdalen, Dominica, St. Pedro, and Hood. Captain Cook lay some time at the first of these, in 1774. The natives are of a tawny complexion, but look almost black, from being punctured over the whole body. They go almost naked, having only a small piece of cloth, perfectly resembling that made by the people of Otaheite round their waist and loins. Their beard and hair are of a fine jet black, like those of the other natives of the torrid zone. The island, though high and steep, has many valleys, which widen toward the sea, and are covered with fine forests to the summits of the interior mountains. The products of these islands are bread fruit, bannas, plantains, cocoa-nuts, scarlet beans, paper-mulberries, of the bark of which their cloth is made, casuarinas, with other tropical plants and trees, and hogs and fowls. They have also plenty of fish. Capt. Foster says, he never saw a single man deformed, or even ill proportioned among the natives: all were strong, tall, well-limbed, and active in the highest degree. Their arms were clubs and spears, and their government, like that of the Society Islands, monarchical. But they were not quite so cleanly as the inhabitants of the Society Isles, who, in that respect, surpass, perhaps, any other people in the world. The drink of the Marquesians is purely water, cocoa nuts being rather scarce. Their music, musical instruments, dances, and canoes, resemble those of Otaheite. Indeed, the inhabitants of the Marquesas, Society, and Friendly Islands, Easter Island, and New Zealand, seem to have all the same origin; their language, manners, customs, &c. bearing a great affinity in many respects. Lat. 9. 55. S. lon. 139. 9. W.

MARSAL, a town in the department of Meurthe, remarkable for its salt-works. It is 17 miles ENE. of Nancy.

Marscough, with its Chace, Lancashire, near Garstang. Marsden Chapel, Yorkshire, SW. of Almondbury. Marsden Rocks, Northumberland, a little way from the shore, are sometimes visited by parties on pleasure from Tynemouth. They have some large caverns in them, and are perforated, in several places, as to give a free passage to boats.

MARSEILLES, a flourishing sea-port in the dept. of the Mouths of the Rhone, lately an episcopal see. It was to celebrated in the time of the Romans, that Cicero styled it the Athens of Gaul, and Pliny called it the Mistress of Education. It is seated on the Mediterranean, at the upper end of a gulph, covered and defended by many small islands, and is divided into the Old Town or the City, and the New Town. The first appears like an amphitheatre to the vessels which enter the port; but the houses are mean, and the streets dirty, narrow, and steep. In the latter the streets are straight and broad, and adorned with handsome edifices. In this part is the principal church built by the Goths, on the ruins of the temple of Diana. This place was considered as endowed with an invaluable privilege confirmed by different popes; namely, that it should be forever exempt from an interdict. The armoury is the finest in the kingdom, and contains arms for 40,000 men. Here is also a large arsenal, well stored with all the implements for building and fitting out the galleys. The harbour is not deep enough for men of war. Gold and silver stuffs are made here. The inhabitants are estimated at 90,000. With respect to commerce, Marseilles has been eminent, since the days of antiquity, and it is now sometimes called Europe in Miniature, on account of the variety of dresses and languages. In 1649, the plague raged with great violence in Marseilles, and with still greater in 1720, 1721, and 1722, when it carried off 50,000 of the inhabitants. During this last dreadful visitation, M. de Belfunce, (the "Marseilles good Bishop," celebrated by Pope) the cannon Bourgeret, the magistrate Moustier, and the commandant Langeron, by their intrepid and indefatigable humanity, did the most signal honour to themselves and to human nature. Marseilles is 18 miles NW. of Toulon, and 362 S. by E. of Paris, Lat. 43. 18. N. lon. 5. 27. E.

MARSTRAND, a rocky island of W. Gothland, in the Cattegat, about 2 miles in circumference. The town, which lies on the eastern side, consists of about 200 ruinous and almost uninhabited houses.

The harbour is spacious, deep, secure, and commodious, but of difficult entrance.

The inhabitants subsist chiefly by the herring fishery; by the number of ships which in rough weather take refuge in the harbour, and by a contraband trade. It is 18 miles NW. of Gotheborg.

MARTABAN, a town and province of Pegu, on the Gulf of Bengal, a long time an independent kingdom. The soil is fertile in rice, fruits and wines of all kinds. Its capital was a rich trading place before ships were sunk at the entrance of the harbour to choke it up, (by the king of Ava) which it has done effectually. The chief trade is now in earthen ware and fish. The whole country, moreover, is now subject to the king of Ava, who in 1754, subdued the kingdom of Pegu, and rendered it a dependent province. The town of Martaban is situated on a bog or large river, 80 miles SE. of Pegu. Lat. 16.38. N. lon. 97. 3. E.

MARTANO, a town of Otranto, Naples

MARTEL, a town in the department of Lot, situated near the Dordogne, 28 miles NNE. of Cahors.

MARTHA, ST. a province of S. America, on the coast of Terra Firma. It is about 300 miles in length, and 200 in breadth, and is mostly a mountainous country, having Venezuela on the E. and Carthagera on the W. It is extremely hot and sultry on the sea-coast, but within cold, on account of the mountains. It abounds with fruit proper to the climates, and there are mines of gold and precious stones, and salt-works. The Spaniards possess but one part of this province, in which they have built St. Martha, the capital. The air about the town is wholesome, and it is seated near the sea, at the mouth of the River Guayra, having a harbour surrounded by high mountains. It was formerly very considerable, when the Spanish galleons were sent thither, but is now come almost to nothing. Lat. 11. 27. N. lon. 74. 0. W.

MARTINICO, a considerable island of the West-Indies, about 44 miles in length and 120 in circumference. There are 3 high mountains, with numberless hills of a conical form, and several rivers and fertile valleys, but they will not bear either wheat or vines; however, the former is not much wanted, for those that are born here, prefer cassava to wheat bread. It possesses many natural advantages, and in particular, its harbours afford a certain shelter from the hurricanes. It exports sugar, cocoa, cassia, ginger, cotton, indigo, chocolate, aloes, pimento, tobacco, yarn, plantains, molasses, preserved fruits, &c. is extremely populous, and has several safe and commodious harbours. The principal places are Fort-Royal, Fort St. Peter, Fort-Trinity, and Foot-de-Mouillage; There are still some of the ancient inhabitants remaining. In 1769, France imported from Martinico, in 202 trading vessels, merchandise to the amount of 536,631 l. sterling. In Feb. 3, 1794, this island was attacked by the English, under Sir John Jervis and Sir Charles Gray, and the conquest was completed on March 16th. Fort Royal is in lat. 14. 44. N. lon. 61. 16. W.

MARYLAND, one of the United States of America, lying about the N. end of Chesapeake Bay, which divides it into two parts, called the eastern and western shores: bounded on the N. by Pennsylvania, on the E. by the state of Delaware, on the SE. and S. by the sea and Virginia, and on the W. by the interior country of America. It is 174 miles long, and 110 broad. It is divided into 18 counties, 10 of which are on the western and 8 on the eastern shore of the Chesapeake. The exports are wheat and tobacco, which are the staple commodities; timber, hemp, flax, and barrelled pork; there being vast numbers of swine, which run wild in the woods, feeding on the mast or nuts of various kinds of trees. —The number of inhabitants is about 260,000. The chief towns are Annapolis and Baltimore. The climate of this province, which in most respects resembles Virginia, is generally mild and agreeable.

MARYPORT, a town in Cumberland, situated at the mouth of the Ellen. It has 80 or 90 sail of shipping, from 50 to 300 tons burden; some of which sail up the Baltic for timber, flax, iron, &c. The coal and coasting-trade and ship-building are carried on pretty extensively, and lately an extensive cotton manufactory has been erected. Here is a furnace for cast-iron, and one of the finest glass-houses in the British dominions. By a late survey, the number of inhabitants amounted to 2625. It is 7 miles NW. of Cocker-mouth, and 307 NNW. of London. Market on Friday.

Masbrook, Upper and Lower, Shropf. near Oswestry. Masbrough, a flourishing village of Yorkshire, near Rotherham. Here is a considerable iron manufactory, with furnaces for smelting the iron out of the ore, forges for making it malleable, and mills for flattening the tin plates, which are also tinned here. Great quantities of goods of hammered iron are made here for exportation; and they also convert iron into steel, and cast all kinds of vessels, &c. in the same metal.

MASCATE, the principal town of Oman, on the coast of Arabia, beside a small gulf encompassed with steep rocks, and forming forming an excellent harbour, in which the largest vessels may find shelter. Arrian calls it Mosca, and speaks of it as being in his time, a great eporium of the trade of Arabia, Persia, and India; an advantage which it has ever enjoyed and still possesses. The Portuguese conquered it about the year 1508, but the Arabs took it from them in 1658, and put all the garrison to the sword, except 18, who turned Mahometans. The cathedral built by the Portuguese, is now the palace of the wali or governor, acting for the scheik or iman, and their other church is a magazine. There are neither trees, shrubs, nor grass to be seen on the coast near it, and only a few date-trees in a valley at the back of the town, though they have all things in plenty. The bazars, or market-places, are covered with the leaves of date trees, laid on beams, which reach from the house-tops on one side to those on the other. The horses, cattle, and sheep are accustomed to eat roasted fish; notwithstanding which, the beef and mutton are both good. Their religion is Mahometanism, and yet they suffer any one to go into their mosques contrary to the custom of the Turks. There are about 1200 Banians in this city, who are permitted to bring their wives here, set up idols in their chambers, and burn their dead, &c. The products of the country are horses, dates, fine brimstone, coffee, and ruinos, a root that dyes red. Lat. 24. 0. N. lon. 57. 26. E.

Mawling, Suffex, N. of Lewes. Mawm-bury, or Maunbury, the name by which the neighbouring inhabitants call the amphitheatre, a celebrated monument of Roman antiquity, the first discovery of which we owe to Sir Christopher Wren. It is situated on a plain about a quarter of a mile SW. of Dorchester, on a gentle descent all the way to it, close by the Roman road which runs thence to Weymouth. On the highest part is a terrace 12 feet broad, beside the parapet, outwardly 5 feet broad and 4 high. There are three ways leading up to the terrace. A walk, 8 feet broad, gradually ascends to the top, from the ends, upon the longest diameter, to its greatest elevation in the middle, upon the short diameter, where it reaches halfway up the whole series of seats. The receptacle of wild beasts was at the upper end, where are still vaults, under the body of the work. The area, which has been much deeper, is still below the surface of the field. It consists of about an acre of ground, and originally was about 140 feet in diameter, the shortest way, and 220 the longest. The greatest perpendicular height of the rampart is 30 feet. It is capable of containing 129,600 persons, and is said to have been constructed by Agricola. Coins of the Emperor in 240, have been dug up within it. Mawnam, Cornw. near the mouth of Helford-haven. Mawfis, Yorks. MAY, or MAYO, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, lying in the Atlantic Ocean, about 21 miles in circumference, its form oval, with a variety of sharp rocks and points projecting into the sea about a mile. The soil consists of sand, or a loose, crumbling stone, without rivulets, springs, or any natural moisture, except the dews in the night, and showers in the wet season; however, they have plenty of hives, goats, and asses; as also, some corn, yams, potatoes, plantains, figs, water-melons, citrons, oranges, pompions, and calavanas, or a species of bean. In the whole island is but one spring, which rises in the centre, and runs off in a small stream through a valley confined by the hills. Here are no large trees; what few they have are on the side of the hills. Here is a large salt-pond, 2 miles in length, and half a mile in breadth: with this commodity many English ships are loaded in the summer time. The sea is plentifully stocked with a variety of fish. The inhabitants are negroes, who speak the Portuguese language, and are stout, lusty, and plump. There are only three villages, the principal of which is Pinofa, with a church, and about 200 inhabitants, many of whom go naked. Lat. 15. 10. N. lon. 22. 25. W.

MAYO, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 49 miles in length, and 44 in breadth. MECCA, a city of Hedias, in Arabia, seated on a barren spot in a valley, surrounded by little hills, about a day's journey from the Red Sea. It has neither walls nor gates, but the buildings are better here, than in any other town of Arabia. What chiefly supports it, is the annual resort of a great many thousand pilgrims at a certain season of the year; for at other times, the shops are scarcely open. The inhabitants are poor, very thin, lean, and swarthy. The hills about the town are numerous; all consist of a blackish rock; and some of them are half a mile in circumference. The town has plenty of water, and yet little garden-stuff; but there are several sorts of good fruit, as grapes, melons, water-melons, and cucumbers. Numbers of sheep are brought hither to be sold to the pilgrims. Mecca stands in a very hot climate, and the inhabitants usually sleep on the tops of their houses, for the sake of coolness. Among its edifices, the most remarkable is the famous Kaba, or house of God, held in high veneration by the Arghars, even before the days of Mahomet, and said to have been Abraham's house of prayer. The Kaba is a square tower, covered on the top with a piece of black, gold embroidered silk stuff. It has 42 doors, and resembles, in its form, the Royal Exchange, but is near ten times as large. The ground in the middle, or area, is mostly covered with gravel. There are cloisters all round, and in the sides are cells for those who live a monastic life. The arcades around the square are said to be magnificent, and are illuminated with a vast number of lamps, and candlesticks of gold and silver. In the Kaba is a singular relic, the famous black stone, said to have been brought from heaven, by the Angel Gabriel, which every Mussulman must kiss, or at least touch, every time he goes round the Kaba. Here also is the well of Zemzen, said to have been that where Hagar quenched the thirst of Ismael. Lat. 21. 45. N. lon. 40. 55. E.

MECHLIN, or MALINES, a town and district of the late Austrian Brabant. It consists of several small islands, made by artificial canals, over which are a great many bridges. Here is a very large house, in which are brought up 800 or 1000 young girls, and a great foundry for ordnance of all kinds. It is famous for its manufactures, in bed-quilts, thread, and particularly in fine lace, and they brew a sort of beer, which is sent into the neighbouring provinces. It is seated on the river Dyle, 10 miles NNE. of Brussels.

MECHOACAN, or VALLADOLID, a province of Mexico, on the South Sea, bounded on the N. by part of Guasteca, and the provinces of Zacatecas and Guadalupe, and on the S. by Mexico Proper, and the South Sea. It extends about 70 leagues along the coast, and still farther inland; the soil is remarkably fertile and the climate good. It is very rich, and abounds in excellent horses, honey, wax, and all the necessaries of life. It has also mines of silver and copper, and great plenty of cocoa-nuts, beside a great deal of silk. The capital of the same name, is about 70 miles from Mexico, in lat. 20. 5. N. lon. 103. 37. W.

MEDINA, a city of Hedjas, in Arabia Felix, celebrated for being the burial place of Mahomet. It is of moderate extent, is walled round, and has a large mosque, but nothing like the temple at Mecca. In one corner is a place, 14 paces square, with great windows, and brass gates, and in the middle the tomb of Mahomet, inclosed within iron rails, hung with curtains, and surrounded by a vast number of lamps. The tomb is not exposed to any, except the 40 eunuchs who guard it, and light the lamps. It is placed between two other tombs, in which rest the ashes of the two first Caliphs. The story of its being suspended in the air by a loadstone is now well known to be a fable. Provisions are brought to this place out of Nubia, across the Red Sea, in odd sort of vessels, whose sails are made of mats. It is called the city of the Prophet, because here he was protected by the inhabitants when he fled from Mecca; and here he was first invested with regal power. The time of his death was in 637; but the Mahometan epoch begins in 622, from the time of his flight. It is seated on a sandy plain, abounding in palm-trees, 176 miles NNW. of Mecca. Lat. 24. 20. N. lon. 39. 33. E.

MEDWAY; a river rising in Surry, in four different branches, which unite in Kent, where it waters Tunbridge, and from Maidstone is navigable to Rochester; below which, at Chatham, it is a station for the royal navy. It falls into the Thames at the Nore. From Rochester Bridge to Sheerness, the distance is about 17 miles. In this part of the river, the channel is so deep, the banks so soft, and the reaches so short, that it is one of the best and safest harbours in the world. The forts of Upnor and Gillingham, erected on opposite shores of the river, are well furnished with cannon, and defend all the ships which ride between them and the bridge. There is also a platform of guns at the Swam, and another at Cockhamwood. But the principal defence of this river is the castle and works at Sheerness. On the 22d. of June, 1667, the Dutch squadron sailed boldly up to Blackstakes, and 7 of their largest ships went as far as Upnor, where they burnt the London, and several other men of war, damaged most most of the ships within reach of their cannon, and carried off the Royal Charles, a first rate of 100 guns.

MENTZ, a large populous city in the circle of the Lower Rhine, capital of the electorate of Mentz, with an university, and an archbishop's see. The archbishop is an elector of the empire, archchancellor of the empire, keeper of the archives and director of the general and particular assemblies. He also convokes the electoral colleges, and is the first state of the empire, after the emperor and the king. The chapter consists of 5 prelates; and 19 capitulars. This city is finely situated, built, however, in an irregular manner, with narrow streets and old fashioned houses, and containing, besides the parish churches, 6 monasteries, 5 nunneries, and 6 hospitals. The cathedral is a gloomy fabric. Here are manufactures of stockings and stuffs. Many of the public buildings, and private houses, have been destroyed, or greatly injured, during the late sieges. Mentz is seated on the Rhine, (soon after its confluence with the Maine) over which is a bridge of boats communicating with Cassel. It is 20 miles N. of Worms. Lat. 49. 59. N. lon. 8. 20. E.

MEQUINEZ, a city of Fez, in Morocco, rocco, 26 miles SW. of Fez, the residence of the emperor, and the capital of the whole empire. Hither the bashaws and alcajds resort with the tribute and presents every two or three years. In the middle of the city the Jews have a place to themselves, walled in and guarded, with an alcajd to protect them. It is death for them to curse, or lift up a hand against a Moor, inasmuch that the boys kick them about at their pleasure. They are obliged to wear black clothes and caps, and to pull off their shoes whenever they pass by a mosque. Close by Mequinez, on the NW. side, stands a large negro town, which takes up as much ground as the city, but the houses are not so high, nor so well built. The palace stands on the S. side, and is guarded by several hundreds of black eunuchs, who are armed with knives and scimiters, covered with wrought silver. It is an extensive building, and includes several gardens. The streets are exceedingly narrow, with hardly any of the windows to be seen, except little holes to look out at. The houses are flat at the top, so that, in many places, they can walk a great way upon them. The women live in the upper apartments, and often visit each other from the tops of the houses. When they go abroad, they have their heads covered with their outward garment, which comes down close to their eyes; and underneath they tie a piece of white cloth, to hide the lower part of their faces. They are quite covered all over, except their legs, which are generally naked; but within doors they appear in their hair, and have only a single fillet over their foreheads. Here, as well as at Morocco, is a hospital or convent of Spanish Recollects, founded by the Kings of Spain, for the benefit of Christian captives, the fathers of both which, supply the poor with medicines gratis. It is seated in a plain, surrounded with fertile well-watered valleys and eminences, 26 miles SW. of Fez, and 165 NE. of Morocco. Lat. 33. 56. N. lon. 6. 6. W.

MESSA, a town of Morocco, seated at the foot of Mount Atlas, on the river Sus, near the Atlantic, 165 miles SW. of Morocco.

MESSINA, a city of Sicily, in the valley of Demona, about five miles in circumference, with four large suburbs. The public buildings and monasteries, which are very numerous, are magnificent and well endowed, and it contains about 20,000 inhabitants. The harbour, whose quay is above a mile in length, is one of the safest in the Mediterranean, and in the form of a half-moon. It is five miles in circumference, extremely deep, and defended by a citadel and other works. The viceroy viceroys of Sicily resides here six months in the year; and it is a place of great trade in silk, oil, fruit, corn, and excellent wine, especially since it has been declared a free port. This place, in 1783, suffered much by an earthquake, which shook great part of Calabria and Sicily to their foundations, overturned many rich and populous towns, and buried thousands in their ruins. It is seated on the sea-side, 104 miles E. of Palermo. Lat. 38. 10. N. lon. 15. 50. E.

It is situated near a large lake, called Rakemat, 100 miles in circumference, which communicates by a canal with the Euphrates, 130 miles S. of Bagdad.

MEXAT-OCHEM, a considerable town in Irac-Arabia, which takes its name from a mosque, dedicated to Ochem, the son of Ali. It is seated on a canal, which passes from the Euphrates, to the lake Rakemat, 75 miles SSW. of Bagdad.

Mexborough, Yorkf. N. of Rotherham.

MEXICO, a city of North America, capital of the province of that name.

It was a flourishing place before the Spaniards entered the country, and is seated on several islands, in a salt-water lake, to which there is no entrance, but by five causeways, three of which are about two miles in length. It formerly contained 80,000 houses, with several large temples, full of rich idols, and three palaces, where the emperor of Mexico resided. Mexico was taken by Ferdinand Cortez, in 1521, after a siege of three months. As the Mexicans defended themselves from street to street, it was almost ruined, but afterwards rebuilt by the Spaniards. It now contains about 35,000 houses built of stone and brick, with a suburb of 3000 houses, inhabited by the native Americans, 29 churches, and 22 monasteries and nunneries. It is the usual residence of the viceroy, whose employment continues 3 years, and has a royal audience, a university, and the tribunal of the inquisition. All the streets are straight, and exactly disposed in point of regularity, and it is remarkable for having neither gates, walls, nor artillery. The revenue of the cathedral amounts to nearly 80,000*l.* a year, out of which the archbishop receives annually 15,000*l.* besides vast sums that arise by perquisites. The inhabitants are immensely wealthy, and a vast abundance of silver, gold, and jewels, is exposed in plate and toys in the streets, by the goldsmiths and shopkeepers. Mexico enjoys a prodigious commerce, being the centre of all the trade carried on between Spanish America and Europe, and Spanish America and the E. Indies. An incredible number of horses and mules are employed in transporting goods from Acapulco to Vera Cruz, and from Vera Cruz to Acapulco. Hither all the gold and silver is brought to be coined; here the king's fifth is deposited; and all that immense quantity of plate wrought which is annually sent to Europe. This place was overflowed by an inundation in October, 1629, in which 40,000 persons were drowned. This obliged the Spaniards to make a great conduit through a mountain, in order to empty the lake; which being done, part of the town became seated on dry land. Mexico is supplied with fresh water by an aqueduct of three miles in length. The Spaniards do not make a tenth part of the inhabitants, the others being negroes, mulattoes, native Americans, and a mixture of them all. It is 130 miles W. by N. of Vera Cruz, and 250 NE. by N. of Acapulco. Lat. 19. 54. N. lon. 100. 0. W.

MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN, a country of N. America, including, in its largest sense, all that extensive peninsula situated between Louisiana and unknown countries on the N. and Terra Firma, in S. America, on the S. but the audience of Mexico contains only the provinces of Mexico Proper, Mecnoacan, Guasteca, Tlascala, Guaxaca, Tabasco, and Yucatan. It is washed on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the S. and W. by the S. Sea, and is above 2000 miles in length, and from 60 to 600 in breadth. It is divided into 23 districts or provinces, the principal of which is that of Mexico Proper, and contains mines of gold and silver, of the latter of which they count above a thousand, besides, mines of iron, copper, lead, alum, crystal, vitriol, precious stones, marble, &c. The soil produces Indian corn, cabbage-trees, cocoa-nuts, vanillas, plantains, pine-apples, cochineal, cotton, and several other fruits, gums, and drugs, proper to the climate. Before the Spaniards came here, they had a sort of dogs that did not bark, but howled like wolves; grey lions, less formidable than those of Africa; and also small tigers, bears, though uncommon, elks, or moose-deer, pecaries, warres, beavers, opossums, armadillos, guanoes, flying squirrels, racoons, crocodiles, manattes, or sea-cows, monkeys, parrots, macaws, pelicans, cormorants, and a great variety of other birds, snakes, scorpions, and other insects. The Spanish clergy are very numerous, and there are a great number of convents. In general, it is a mountainous country, intermixed with many rich valleys: but the highest mountains are near the coast of the South Sea, many of which are volcanoes. The eastern shore is a flat, level country, full of bogs and morasses, overflowed in the rainy season, which is at the same time as our summer. The hills between the mountains, and the flat country, are best inhabited, because there the air is most temperate. This province is vastly populous, and the original natives, in general, pass their lives in easy circumstances. In some places, the collection of the public revenue, and the exercise of the police, are deposited in the hands of their chiefs, while the laws of the Spanish government, upon the whole, have a tendency to make them good subjects, rather than miserable and discontented slaves. Among the inferior orders of Indians, many are admitted to offices in the church, army, magistracy, and in all the principal Spanish towns, they are invited to a full incorporation with the natives of Spain. The revenues of the crown, which are great, arise from a fifth part of the the gold and silver, and from the duties and customs, as well as from the lands held of the crown.

MEXICO, NEW, a large country of N. America, bounded on the W. by the Gulf of California; its other limits are uncertain. The soil and climate are as rich, plentiful, and temperate as any country of America, or any other part of the world. It is inhabited by a great number of people, whose languages and customs are very different; some wander about, and others dwell in towns and villages. The chief divisions are New Mexico Proper, New Leon, New Navarre, and California; the principal Spanish colonies are St. Barbe, and Santa Fé, the capital town.

MEXICO, a large gulf of N. America, lying between the S. coast of E. Florida and the NE. point of Yucatan.

MIDDLESEX, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Hertfordshire; on the E. by Essex; on the S. by Surry, and a corner of Kent; and on the W. by Buckinghamshire. It is one of the least counties of England, being only about 22 miles in length and 14 in breadth, but is much the richest and most populous, and pays more taxes than any ten beside. It contains 7 market towns, and about 200 parishes, without including those in London and Westminster. The air is healthy; but the soil, in general, being of a lean gravel, it is naturally a district of little fertility; though, by means of the vicinity to the metropolis, many parts of it are converted into rich beds of manure, clothed with almost perpetual verdure. There are still, however, very extensive tracts of uncultivated heath. Besides the Thames, the Lea, and the Coln, Middlesex is watered by several small streams; one of which, called the New River, is artificially brought from Amwell, in Herts, for the purpose of supplying London with water. Indeed, the whole county may be confidered as a demesne to the metropolis, the land being laid out in gardens, pastures, and inclosures of all sorts for its convenience and support.

MILAN, a city of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name. It was the ancient capital of Lombardy, and is the largest city of Italy, except Rome; but, although it is thought rather to exceed Naples in size, it does not contain above one half the number of inhabitants. It is seated in a pleasant plain, between the rivers Adda and Tefin. It is about 10 miles in circumference, and called by the Italians, Milan the Great. Here are 22 gates, 230 churches, 90 convents, 100 religious fraternities, 120 schools, and about 250,000 inhabitants. Broad and straight streets are but few in comparison of the narrow and crooked; and the many paper windows, or glass and paper panes intermixed, even in the finest palaces, have a mean appearance. The governor's palace, or the old regency-house, is the most stately and spacious. The cathedral is a grand structure, being 500 feet long, 200 broad, and 400 high. It stands in the centre of the city, and, next to St. Peter's at Rome, is the largest in Italy. This vast fabric is entirely built of solid white marble, and is supported by 50 columns, said to be 84 feet high. The 4 pillars under the cupola are 28 feet in circumference. The college of St. Ambrose has a library, which, beside some thousands of manuscripts, contains 45000 printed volumes. In it is an academy of painting. The most considerable commerce of the inhabitants is in grain (especially rice), cattle, and cheese, which they export; and they have manufactures of silk and velvet stuffs, stockings, handkerchiefs, ribbons, gold, and silver laces, and embroideries, woollen and linen cloths, glass, and earthen ware, in imitation of China. Here are several rivers and many canals. It is 65 miles N. of Genoa, 145 NNW. of Florence, and 270 NW. of Rome. Lat. 45. 28. N. lon. 9. 16. E.

MILAN, THE DUCHY OF, a considerable country of Italy, bounded on the N. by Switzerland, and the country of the Grison's; on the E. by the ci-devant state of Venice, and the duchies of Parma and Mantua; on the S. by Parma and Piedmont; and on the W. by Piedmont and Savoy, being about 108 miles in length and 96 in breadth. The soil is as fertile as that of any country in Europe, in corn, wine, fruits, rice, olives, and vegetables; and the district of Lodi breeds vast herds of cattle. The rivers are, the Secchia, Tefin, Adda, and Oglio. There are likewise several lakes, the three principal of which are those of Maggiore, Como, and Lugano. This duchy, including the Milanese Proper, the dukedom of Mantua, the territories of Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Cremona, has been, since the beginning of this century, subject to the house of Austria, but in the present war it has been overrun by French troops, and now forms a principal part of the new Cisalpine Republic.

MILBORN-PORT, a borough of Somersetshire, surrounded in a manner by Dorsetshire. The inhabitants are about 1100. It is no market town, though it appears in Domesday book to have had a market once, and 56 burghesses. It is seated on a branch of the river Parret, 2 miles from Sherborn in Dorsetshire.

MILFORD, a town of N. America, in the state of Delaware, and county of Sussex, of which it is the emporium. It is situated 15 miles from the Bay of Delaware, and 150 S. of Philadelphia; also a town of Massachusetts, and two towns of Connecticut.

MILFORD, a town of Pembrokehire, situated on the N. coast of Milford Haven, 6 miles WNW. of Pembroke, and 6SSW. of Haverfordwest. A new quay has been lately built here, and a considerable number of new buildings erected, by a commercial company of quakers from America.

MILFORD HAVEN, a deep inlet of the Irish Sea, on the coast of Pembrokehire, universally allowed to be the best harbour in Great Britain, and as safe and spacious as any in Europe. It has 16 deep and safe creeks, 5 bays, and 3 roads, all distinguished by their several names, in which 1000 sail of ships may ride in perfect security, and at sufficient distance from each other. There is no danger in sailing in or out with the tide, by day or night, from whatever point the wind may happen to blow; and if a ship in distress comes in, without either anchor or cable, she may run on shore on soft ooze, and there lie in safety till she is refitted. The spring tide rises in this harbour 36 feet, so that ships may at any time be laid ashore. Dale Harbour is a ready outlet for small vessels, where they may ride in 2 or 3 fathoms at low water. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, before the Spanish invasion, two forts were begun at the entrance of the haven, one on each side, called Nangle and Dale Blockhouses, but they were not finished. In the middle of the entrance between Nangle and Dale, the Stack Rock rises above water. The breadth of the entrance, between rock and rock, is but 200 yards at high water, and 112 at low water. One great advantage attending this harbour is, that a ship may be in or out of it in an hour's time, and in 8 or 10 hours may be on the coast of Ireland, or off the Land's End; they may also get out to the W. much sooner than from either Plymouth or Falmouth. The parliament, on April 14th, 1759, granted 10,000l. for fortifying this harbour, all of which was expended on the fort at Neyland, which, however, still remains unfinished.

MILO, an island of the Archipelago, about 50 miles in circumference, with one of the best and largest harbours in the Mediterranean. All its productions are of incomparable excellence. The earth, constantly heated by subterraneous fires, produces, almost without intermission, wheat, barley, cotton exquisite wines, and delicious melons. The cattle, especially goats, are very good, and here are mines of iron and sulphur. In the spring, the fields are enamelled with anemones, of all sorts. The inhabitants, who are all Greeks, except the cadi, are good sailors. A sort of plumous alum is found here, in large lumps, composed of threads as fine as the softest silk, silvered over, and shining very prettily; it has the same taste as rock alum. Here is a waiwode, who is a Greek, and 3 consuls, who can depose the cadi when he fails in his duty; here are likewise 2 bishops; one of the Greek, and the other of the Latin church. There is a town of the same name, in the eastern part of the island, which is a poor dirty place. The whole island, which in the time of Tournefort, in 1700, had upwards of 20,000 inhabitants, from the pestilence, and the oppression of the Turks, does not now contain above 700. Lat. 36. 41. MINDANAO, one of the Philippine Islands, and next to Luconia in point of size, being 180 miles in length and 120 in breadth. It is intersected with so many points running out into the sea, and deep bays, that a man may go across it in any where in a day and a half. It is generally a mountainous country, full of hills and valleys; but the mould is deep, black, and fruitful. There are many lofty trees, of kinds not known in Europe, and the valleys are well watered with rivulets. The inhabitants find very good gold, by digging deep in the ground, as also in the rivers, making trenches before the floods. The libby-trees produce the sago, of which, when reduced into meal, the poor people make bread and biscuits. Here are all the various sorts of fruits proper to the climate, besides plenty of rice. The cinnamon-tree grows here, on the mountains, without culture, and has no owner but him that finds it. They have horses, bees, buffaloes, goats, deer, monkeys, guanoes, bats of a large size, lizards, and snakes; but they have neither lions nor tigers. Their hogs are accounted very ugly creatures, they have all great nohs growing over their eyes; their flesh, however, is sweet. Their fowls are, ducks, hens, pigeons, parrots, paroquets, and turtle-doves, beside many small birds. The air is temperate, they having sea-breezes by day, and cooling land-winds at night. The inhabitants are of a mean, low stature, with small limbs, and little heads. They have flat foreheads, black small eyes, short low noses, and pretty large mouths. Their hair is black and straight, and their complexion tawny, but more inclined to yellow than that of other Indians. The chief trades are goldsmiths, blacksmiths, and carpenters; they build pretty good vessels for the sea, and easily collect sulphur enough for all sorts of use, from the several burning mountains. Polygamy is practised here, and the sultan has a queen, beside 20 other women: for their religion is Mahometanism. Their houses are built on posts, from 14 to 20 feet high: and they have ladders to go up out of the streets. They have but one floor, which is divided into several rooms, and the roofs are covered with palmetto leaves.

MINDELHEIM, a town and small territory of Suabia, about 8 miles square, 22 miles SW. of Augsburg.

MINORCA, a considerable island of the Mediterranean, lying 24 miles NE. of Majorca. It is about 30 miles in length and 12 in breadth, and chiefly valuable for the excellent harbour of Port-Mahon. It is a mountainous country, with some fruitful valleys, where there are excellent mules. Rabbits are in great plenty, and here are plantations of palm-trees, which bear no fruit, vines, olives, cotton, and capers. The peasants are very dexterous with their slings, and command their cattle with them. The houses on the island are computed at 3089, and the inhabitants at 27,000. It was taken by the English in 1708, and kept by them till 1756, when the French took it. It was restored to the English by the treaty of 1763, and retaken by the Spaniards in the American war, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1783. MOCHA, a considerable town, with a harbour, of Yemen, in Arabia, built about 400 years ago; it is surrounded by walls, consisting of half stone and half earth; and several towers, guarded by soldiers. The women, except a small number of the common sort, never appear in the streets streets in the day-time, but visit each other in the evening. Over their other dress, they wear a large veil of painted calico, that they can see through without being seen. They have also little buffkins of Morocco leather: some of the women of rank are handsome, and not browner than the Spanish women. Mocha was the last city in Yemen of which the Turks retained possession. It has now no other master than the Iman. The inhabitants are computed at 10,000 without comprehending the Armenians, or the Jews, who inhabit the suburbs. Here are about 700 Banians, Rajaputs, and other Indians, who, when they have made a small fortune, commonly return to India. The English engross, almost exclusively, the trade of this place, which consists (the Arabs having scarcely any other article for exportation) in exporting coffee, and importing iron, (of which a great quantity is sold in Arabia), purchased chiefly from the Danes; and they often gain considerably by carrying money to India, with which the Arabian merchants intrust them. It is seated in a dry, sandy country, abounding in date-trees, near the Straits of Babelmandel. Lat. 18. 19. N. lon. 43. 23. E.

The principal rivers are the Pruth, Moldan, Bardalach, and Sereth. The soil is rich, and it abounds in good pastures, which feed a great number of horses, oxen, and sheep; it also produces corn, pulse, honey, wax, fruits, with plenty of game, fish, and fowls. The inhabitants are Christians of the Greek church. The Turks oblige the hospodar, or waiwode, to pay an annual tribute, and to raise a large body of troops at his own expence, in time of war. Jassy is the capital.

Molefworth, Chef. in Delamere Forest.

MOLE, a mountain in the department of Mount Blanc, which, from its height and fine sloping peak, is an object of great beauty, when seen from the Lake of Geneva.

Mole, in ancient deeds called Emley, a river in Surry, which is supposed to run under ground from Boxhill, near Darking, till it appears again near Leatherhead; it afterwards enters the Thames opposite Hampton Court. Perhaps it is rather absorbed, especially in dry seasons, by a tract of soft ground, called the Swallows, near two miles in length, and by caverns in the sides of the banks: yet not so far as to prevent a constant stream from taking its course in an open channel above ground, winding in the valleys from Darking to Letherhead, except in a very dry summer; in such seasons, at Burford bridge, beyond Mickleham, its channel is sometimes dry. Mole, Kent, N. of Tunbridge. Mole-Hall, Essex, near Tendring. Mole, or Moad-Hall, Essex, near Bardfield. Molecop, or Mowcop, Staffordsh. on the borders of Cheshire, towards Congleton. Molefworth, Huntingdonsh. The principal are Ternate, Amboyna, Tydore, Machian, Timor, or Motyr, Bachian, Bourso, and Ceram. They are situated to the E. and S. of Celebes. Their coasts are rendered very dangerous by sands and shelves. They

They produce neither corn, rice, nor cattle, except goats; but they have oranges, lemons, coarse tobacco, and other fruits; and are most remarkable for spices, especially nutmegs and cloves. Here are parrots of extraordinary beauty, and many birds of paradise. They have large snakes, which are not venomous, but very dangerous lizards, or land crocodiles. The Dutch, who drove out the Spaniards and Portuguese, keep out all other European nations, being jealous of their spice trade. The natives are Pagans, but there are many Mahometans. All the particular kings of these islands are subject to the king of Ternate, who is in alliance with the Dutch. Most, if not all of them, have been reduced by the English, since the commencement of the present war.

MOLWITZ, a town of Brieg, Silesia.

MOMBABA, or MONBABA, a town and country of Africa, on the eastern coast, in Zanguebar, S. of Melinda. The soil is fruitful, producing rice, millet, and other grain, variety of fruit-trees, vegetables, and esculents. Here is also plenty of cattle and poultry, and the country abounds with springs of fresh water. The climate is temperate, and the air healthy. The city was held some time by the Portuguese, but they were driven out in 1681 by an Arabian scheik, and their converts are mostly turned Mahometans. Lat. 3. 45. S. lon. 89. O. E.

They assume to be of the same original as those who accompanied Tamerlane in the conquests of India, Persia, and other countries, and called, in most histories, Moguls. The country is very little known, except that part of it which the caravans pass through in travelling from Russia to China. The Monguls dwell in tents, or little moveable houses, and live entirely on the produce of their cattle, which are horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They exchange their commodities for rice, sugar, tea, tobacco, cotton, cloth, and several sorts of household utensils; not having the use of money. The religion of the Monguls of the W. is that of the Dalay Lama, which is full of ceremonies, not unlike Popery.

MONMOUTH, the county town of Monmouthshire, pleasantly seated at the confluence of the rivers Wye, Munnow, and Frothy, which almost surround it. It is a large handsome town, and carries on a considerable trade with Bristol by the Wye. In its once stately castle, the remains of which show it to have been very strong, Henry V. from hence called Henry of Monmouth, the conqueror of France, was born. It is 21 miles W. by S. of Gloucester, and 128 W. by N. of London. A plentiful market for corn and provisions on Saturday. Fairs on Whitsun Tuesday, September 4th, and November 22d.

MONMOUTH, a town of New Jerzey.

MONMOUTHSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Herefordsh. and Brecknockshire, on the E. by Gloucestershire, on the SE. by the mouth of the Severn, and on the W. by the counties of Brecknock and Glamorgan. Its extent from N. to S. is about 28 miles, and from E. to W. 20. It is divided into 6 hundreds, and contains 7 market towns, 127 parishes, about 5,660 houses, and 33,960 inhabitants. The air is temperate and healthy, and the soil fruitful, though mountainous and woody. The hills feed sheep, goats, and horned cattle; and the valleys produce plenty of grass and corn. Beside the Wye, the Mynnow, and the Rhyney, or Rumney, this county has almost peculiar to itself the river Usk, which divides it into two unequal portions, the eastern, and largest part of which is a tract, fertile, on the whole, in corn and pasture, and well wooded. It abounds with limestone which is burnt on the spot, for the general manure of the country. The smaller western portion is mountainous, and, in great part, unfavourable for cultivation; whence it is devoted to the feeding of sheep. It has several long, narrow valleys, watered by streams that fall into the Bristol Channel. All the rivers above mentioned, particularly the Wye and Usk, abound with fish, especially salmon and trout. Monmouthshire was formerly reckoned one of the counties of Wales; and, from the names of its towns and villages, its mountainous, rugged surface, as well as its situation beyond the Wye, which seems to form a natural boundary between England and Wales in this part; it certainly partakes most of the character of the latter country, though, since the reign of Charles II. when it was added to the Oxford circuit, it has been considered as an English county. The people use the Welsh language, but the English tongue is coming into use. The manufacture of this county is flannels.

MONOEMUGI, or NIMAAMA, a kingdom of Africa, lying near the equator, said to be bounded by Abyssinia on the N.; Mongallo, Mozambique, and other states of Zanguebar on the E.; Monomotapa on the S.; and Congo and Angola on the W.; but the real limits are unknown. The sovereign, however, is rich and powerful, having subdued most of the petty kings around. His subjects carry on a commerce with Abyssinia and the eastern coasts in gold, and vast quantities of ivory teeth, as elephants are very numerous here, which they exchange for European and Indian commodities. This is all we can find concerning this unknown empire.

MONOMOTAPA, a country of Africa, extending from the Indian Sea to a considerable distance from it, between lat. 15. O. and 23. O. S. and between lon. 24. and 35. E. The climate is temperate, the air is clear and healthy, and the soil fertile, well watered, and abounding with pasture grounds. Sugar-canes grow here without cultivation. There are a great many ostriches, and vast herds of elephants; their forests swarm with wild beasts and game, and on their pasture-grounds are bred vast multitudes of cattle. Their rivers abound with gold as well as fish, and they have mines of silver. They exchange their gold and silver with the Portuguese for cotton-cloth, and other merchandise, and trinkets brought from India and Europe. The houses in Benematapa, the metropolis, called by some Medrogan, are whitewashed within and without, and adorned with beautiful cloths of cotton, finely wrought and dyed. The palace is a large spacious fabric of wood, well flanked with towers, and with four avenues or stately gates, continually kept by a numerous guard. The natives are all black, with woolly hair, notwithstanding their distance from the equator. They believe in one God that created the world, and admit of polygamy. The metropolis is about 20 miles W. of Sofala.

MONOPOLI, a town of Bari, Naples, situated on the Adriatic.

MONS, called by the Flemings BERGHEn in HANEGOW, a city of the late Austrian Hainault, having manufactures of fays, grograms, &c. and a good trade. It was taken by the Duke of Luxembourg in 1691, and by the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, Oct. 20, 1709. MONTPELLIER, a large, rich, and beautiful city, in the depart. of Herault. Before the revolution, here was a university, with a celebrated school of medicine, founded by physicians, who were expelled from Spain in the year 1180. The scarlet gown of that witty philosopher, Rabelais, with which doctors of physic are, or were, invested here, at taking their degrees, has long since ceased to be an original, the students having, from time to time, cut off little slips, so that the robe now, or lately used, is, at least, the third or fourth substitute: also a botanic garden, the first established in Europe, and an academy of sciences. The town-house is remarkable for its halls, which are embellished with fine paintings. It has many fine houses, and several stately edifices, but the streets are very narrow. The number of inhabitants is computed at 50,000, who trade in verdigrease, which is the principal manufacture, wool, wine, aqua-vitæ, Hungary-water, cinnamon-water, capillaire, essence of bergamot, lemons, &c. also in woollen carpets, dimities, fustians, and silk stockings. These commodities are sent, by the canal, to Cette, which is the sea-port of Montpellier. The air is extremely healthy, and a great number of persons flock hither, from all parts, to recover their health. Montpellier is pleasantly seated upon a hill, by the river Lez, 5 miles from the Mediterranean, 27 SW. of Nîmes, and 212 S. by E. of Paris.

MONTREAL, an isle of N. America, in the river St. Lawrence, about 30 miles in length, and 12 in breadth. The soil is very fertile, and the air wholesome. It was surrendered by the French, in 1760, to the English, by a capitulation, by which all Canada was likewise ceded. It has a town of the same name, with wide, open streets, built on the side of the river, whence there is a gradual, easy ascent to what is called the Upper Town. It is pretty strongly fortified by a citadel, wall, bastions, &c. and has suffered much by fires, since it has been in the possession of the English. The only staple commodity is furs, and the skins of foxes, racoons, deer, and other peltry, produced by their trade with the Indians, together with corn and lumber to the W. Indies. Montreal is now the capital of the province of Upper Canada, and is 120 miles SW. of Quebec, and 110 N. of Albany. Lat. 45. 38. N. lon. 73. W.

*MONTROSE, a town of Angusshire, containing, in 1790, about 6,194 inhabitants. At high water it is almost surrounded by the sea. The harbour is a fine semicircular basin, with a handsome stone pier; and a great number of trading vessels belong to this port. The buildings are neat, and many of them in the modern taste. The most remarkable are the town-house, the presbyterian church, and an elegant episcopal chapel. A great quantity of malt is made here; and there are manufactures of sail-cloth, linen, coloured and white thread, brown sheeting, Osnaburgs, and cotton stockings, as also a tannery and rope-works. The salmon fisheries on the N. and S. Esk form a valuable branch of commerce. Montrose is seated on a gentle eminence, in a peninsula, formed by the estuary of S. Esk (over which a new bridge has been lately erected) and the German Ocean, 48 miles NE. of Edinburgh.

MONTSERRAT, a singular mountain in Catalonia, on which is a celebrated monastery and chapel, with hermitages, inhabited by monks of several nations, who entertain all that come out of devotion, or curiosity, for three days, gratis. This mountain is said to be 10 miles in circumference, and 5 high. From the top of it is a view of the country to the distance of 150 miles. It is 20 miles NW. of Barcelona.

MONTSERRAT, a well-watered fruitful island in the West Indies, discovered, in 1493, by Columbus, and so named by him from its resemblance to the above mentioned mountain in Spain. It is about 9 miles in length, and as much in breadth, and is divided into two parishes. The mountains are covered with cedar, cypress, the iron-tree, with other woods, and some odoriferous shrubs. As to soil, animals, and commerce, Montserrat is much the same as the other Caribbee Islands. It is possessed by the English, and is 30 miles SW. of Antigua. Lat. 16. 54. N. lon. 61. 34. W.

MORLACHIA, a mountainous country, chiefly in the N. part of Dalmatia, the inhabitants of which are called Morlacks, or Morlacchi; subject to the Emperor. They inhabit the pleasant valleys of Kotter, along the rivers Kerha, Cettina, Narenta, and among the inland mountains of Dalmatia. They are said, by some to be of Walachian extraction; but this is denied by Abbé Fortis, who thinks their origin involved in the darkness of barbarous ages. Among a variety of curious particulars respecting their manners and customs, he presents some very pleasing traits of character. "Friendship," he says, "is lasting among the Morlacchi. They have even made it a kind of religious point, and tie the sacred bond at the foot of the altar. The Slavonian ritual contains a particular benediction, for the solemn union of two male or two female friends, in the presence of the congregation. He was present at the union of two young women, who were made Posestre, in the church of Peruffich. The satisfaction," he continues, "that sparkled in their eyes, when the ceremony was performed, gave a convincing proof, that delicacy of sentiment can lodge in minds not formed, or rather not corrupted, by society, which we call civilized. The male friends, thus united, are called Pobratimi, and the females Posestre, which mean half-brothers and half-sisters. Friendships between those of different sexes are not bound with so much solemnity, though perhaps in more ancient and innocent ages it was also the custom. From these consecrated friendships among the Morlacchi, and other nations of the same origin, it should seem, that the sworn brothers arose, a denomination frequent enough among the common people in many parts of Europe. If discord happens to arise between two friends, among the Morlacchi, it is talked of, over all the country, as a scandalous novelty; and there have been some examples of it of late years, to the great affliction of the old Morlacchi, who attribute the depravity of their countrymen, to their intercourse with the Italians. Wine, and strong liquors, of which the nation is beginning to make daily abuse, after our example, will, of course, produce the same bad effects as among us."

MORLAIX, a considerable sea-port in the dept. of Finisterre, with a tide-harbour. The Notre-Dame church is a singular structure, and the hospital is very handsome; the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in linen, hemp, and tobacco. It is seated on a river of the same name, 30 miles NE. of Brest.

Morland, Westmorl. W. of Appleby. Morlas, a river in Carmarthen. Morley, 3 miles NE. of Derby. Morley, Devon. between Totness and Kingsbridge. Morley, St. Botolph's and St. Peter's, Norf. SW. of Windham. Morley, Yorkshire, SW. of Leeds. Morley-Hall, called also Hullingbury, Essex, near Birchinghanger. Morley-Nether, Northumberland, near Chipchase. Morlinch, Somersetshire, near Bridgewater. Morningthorp, Norfolk, S. of Saxlingham.

MOROCCO, an empire of Africa, comprehending a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by Algiers and Biledulgerid, on the N. by the Mediterranean, and on the S. by Zahara. Its greatest length is about 450 miles; and, where widest, about 390. The territories of Morocco are formed by the union of several small kingdoms, anciently limited to a single province, and perpetually at variance with each other, till, at last, they were all subdued, and united under one sovereign, by the sharifs. The S. part of the empire contains the kingdom of Suz, Tarudant, Morocco Proper, Tafiletz, and Segilmeffa; and the N. part, those of Fez, Mequinez, and Tremecen; but the latter having been conquered by the Turks of Algiers, is now a part of that regency. The air of this country is very pure, and pretty temperate, especially to the N. of Mount Atlas. The soil, though sandy and dry on the western coast, is exceedingly fertile; the land containing within itself salts sufficient to make it fruitful. The increase of corn is often as sixty to one. The fruits, such as vines, figs, melons, apricots, apples, pears, olives, and the prickly pear, or Barbary fig, the palm-tree, as well as the pastures, are excellent, but dates ripen with difficulty, and indeed the country, &c. is not properly cultivated, as two thirds of it, at least, lies waste. Acorns, which taste like chestnuts, salt and wax, abound here. The humidity of the atmosphere is so corrosive, that it quickly covers with rust, iron, steel, metals, and even the keys and scissars carried in the pocket. The Moors make food of the locusts; prodigious quantities of them are brought to market, salted and dried like red herrings. The inhabitants are Mahometans, of a tawny complexion, robust, and very skilful in managing a horse and wielding a lance. There are two sorts of inhabitants; the Arabs, who dwell in moveable villages, composed of about 100 tents, and the Breberies, or Brebes, who are the ancient inhabitants, and dwell in cities and towns. There are a great number of Christian slaves, and some merchants, upon the coast, beside a multitude of Jews, who carry on almost all the trade; especially by land with the negroes, to whom they send large caravans, who travel over vast deserts, almost destitute of water. They carry with them woollen manufactures, silk, salt, &c. and, in return, have slaves, gold, and elephants' teeth. Out of the slaves the emperor recruits his cavalry. They also send large caravans to Mecca every year, partly out of devotion, and partly for trade, consisting of several thousand camels, horses, and mules. Their commodities are woollen manufactures, Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, ostrich feathers, salt, and wax; in return for which they have silks, muslins, calicos, coffee, and drugs. In the deserts are lions, tigers, leopards, and serpents of several kinds. The fruits are dates, figs, grapes, almonds, lemons, oranges, melons, pomegranates, apples, pears, &c. They have also flax and hemp, but little timber. The naval force consists chiefly of rovers, who now and then take large prizes, especially those belonging to Sallee. The emperor is absolute, his will being a law, and he often exercises great cruelties. His usual taxes are, one tenth of the goods of his Mahometan subjects, and six crowns a year of the Jews; but he often breaks through these rules, and seizes what he pleases. He can bring 100,000 men into the field, half of which are foot, and half horse; but they are poorly armed, and know but little of the art of war.

MOROCCO, the capital of the kingdom of Morocco, seated in a beautiful plain, planted with palm-trees, formed by a chain of mountains on the N. having Mount Atlas, from which it is distant about 20 miles, on the S. and E. Though one of the capitals of the empire (for there are three, Morocco, Mequinez, and Fez) it has nothing to recommend it but its great extent, and the royal palace. It is inclosed by remarkably strong walls, built of tabby, the extent of which still exists entire, and supposes a city which might contain 300 000 souls: they are flanked by square towers, and surrounded by a wide and deep ditch. The mosques are more numerous than magnificent. The streets are narrow, dirty and irregular, and many of the houses uninhabited, and falling to ruin. Those which are decent are built of tabby, and inclosed in gardens; but the generality of them, which are not better than ruins of houses heaped one upon another, serve only to harbour thieves, who lurk among them, in order to rob passengers. M. Chenier doubts whether Morocco contains 30,000 inhabitants, even when the court is there. The Jews, who are pretty numerous here, have a separate town, walled in, and under the charge of an alcade, appointed by the emperor. They have a market of their own; and when they enter the Moorish town, market, or palace, they are compelled to be bare-footed. It has two gates, which are regularly shut every evening at nine o'clock, after which no person can enter or depart, till they are opened the next morning. The palace is a very extensive and solid building, with gates composed of Gothic arches, embellished with ornaments in the Arabian taste. Within the walls are various courts and gardens, elegantly laid out by European gardeners. Lat. 31. 12. N. lon. 6. 45. W.

MORON, a town in Seville, Andalusia; and a town in the department of Morbihan.

MOROTOI, one of the Sandwich Isles, about 7 miles WNW. of Mowee. Yams are its principal produce; yet it has but little wood. The coast, on the southern and western sides of the island, forms several bays, which promise a tolerable shelter from the trade winds. Lat. 21. 10. N. lon. 157. 14. W.

MOSAMBIQUE, a kingdom of Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar, so called from the capital of the same name, situated on an island, principal of 3 islands which form a part of the kingdom. This island is not more than 3 miles in length, and half as much in breadth, and is about 2 miles from the continent. It was seized by the Portuguese in 1497, and they have kept possession of it ever since. The town is large, well-built, and rich, with handsome churches and convents, and a fort or castle, the strongest and best contrived the Portuguese have on this coast. The soil, on the continent, is fat and fertile, and the country breeds numerous herds of cattle, and sheep with large tails. They also swarm with stags, wild boars, other wild beasts, and elephants so fierce and destructive, that the natives dare not stir far from their homes without lighted firebrands in their hands to frighten them away. The country has also rich mines of gold. The governor is changed every three years, and the Portuguese export gold, silver, copper, elephants' teeth, ebony, wax, rice, other provisions, slaves and cattle, in exchange for little bells, knives, scissars, razors, and other European goods. Their ships always call here in going to the East Indies; and the harbour is so commodious, that whole fleets may anchor here, and refit their vessels, as well as provide themselves with all necessaries; and they have a large hospital for sick sailors. Lat. 15. 5. S. lon. 40. 49. E.

Moscovy. See RUSSIA.

Moscow, one of the most ancient and conspicuous provinces of Russia, formerly a duchy, but now one of the 41 governments of that vast empire. Its capital is of the same name.

Moscow, a large city of the Russian empire, capital of the government of Moscow, and formerly of the whole empire. It may be considered as a town built upon the Asiatic model, but gradually becoming more and more European; exhibiting, in its present state, a motley mixture of discordant architecture. It is distributed into the following divisions. 1. Kremlin, which is the central and highest part of the city, surrounded by high walls of stone and brick, 2 miles in circumference. This division is not deformed by wooden houses. It contains the ancient palace of the czars, several churches, 2 convents the patriarchal palace, and the arsenal, now in ruins. 2. The Khitaigorod, or the Chinese town, which is much larger than the Kremlin: it contains the university, the printing-house, and many other public buildings, with all the tradesmen's shops. The houses are mostly stuccoed, or white-washed; and it has the only street in Moscow in which the houses stand close to each other, without any interval between them. 3. The Bielgorod, or White Town, which runs round the two preceding divisions: it takes its name from a white wall, by which it was formerly surrounded. 4. Semlainogorod, which environs all the other three quarters; and is so denominated from a circular rampart of earth by which it is encompassed. The two last-mentioned divisions exhibit a grotesque group of churches, convents, palaces, brick and wooden houses, and mean hovels. 5. The Sloboda, or suburbs, which form a vast exterior circle round all the parts already described, and are invested by a low rampart and ditch. These suburbs contain, besides buildings of all kinds, corn-fields, much open pasture, and some small lakes, which give rise to the Neglina. The Moskva, from which the city takes its name, flows through it in a winding channel; but, excepting in spring, is only navigable for rafts. It receives the Yausa in the Semlainogorod, and the Neglina at the western extremity of the Kremlin; but the beds of both these last-mentioned rivulets are, in summer, little better than dry channels. Moscow exhibits an astonishing degree of extent and variety, irregularity, and contrast. The streets, in general, general, are very long and broad. Some of them are paved; others, particularly in the suburbs, are formed with trunks of trees, or are boarded with planks like the floor of a room. Wretched hovels are blended with large palaces; cottages of one story stand next to the most stately mansions; many brick structures are covered with wooden tops; some of the wooden houses are painted; others have iron doors and roofs. Numerous churches appear in every quarter, built in a peculiar style of architecture; some with domes of copper, others of tin, gilt, or painted green, and many roofed with wood. In a wood, some parts of this vast city have the appearance of a sequestered desert; others, the quarters of a populous town; some of a poor village; others of a great capital. Moscow is certainly the largest town in Europe; its circumference, within the rampart that incloses the suburbs, being 26 miles; but it is built in such a straggling manner, that its population corresponds, in no degree, with its extent. It has, however, been pretty well ascertained: it contains, within the ramparts, 800,000 souls. It is still the most populous city in the empire, notwithstanding the residence of the court is at Petersburg. Here the chief nobles reside, who do not belong to the court: they here support a large number of retainers: gratify their taste for a ruder and more expensive magnificence in the ancient feudal style; and are not, as at Petersburg, eclipsed by the superior splendor of the court. The places of public worship in Moscow, including chapels, amount to above 1000; of these, 484 are public churches, 199 of which are of brick, stuccoed, or white washed: and the others of wood, painted red. Some of their bells are of a stupendous size: they hang in belfreys detached from the church, are fixed immovably to the beams, and are rung by a rope tied to the clapper. It has always been esteemed here a meritorious act of religion to present a church with bells; and the piety of the donor has been measured by their magnitude. Accordingly, Boris Godunof, who gave a bell of 288,000 pounds to the cathedral of Moscow, was the most pious sovereign of Russia, till he was surpassed by the empress Anne, who presented a bell that weighs 432,000 pounds, and is the largest in the known world. Among the public institutions in Moscow, is the Foundling Hospital, endowed, in 1764, by Catharine, and supported by voluntary contributions; to encourage which, she granted to all benefactors some valuable privileges, in proportion to the extent of their liberality; and, it is remarkable, that a private merchant, named Dimidof, has expended on this charity 200,000*l*. The gardens hereabouts yield the famous transparent apple, called by the Russians Naliwi, with variety of other fruits. Moscow is the centre of the inland commerce of Russia, particularly connecting the trade between Europe and Siberia. The navigation to this city is formed solely by the Moskva, which rises near Ruza, and falling into the Occa, near Colomna, communicates, by that river, with the Volga. But as the Moskva is navigable in the spring only, upon the melting of the snows, the principal merchandise is conveyed upon sledges in winter. This city is 460 miles SE. of Peterburgh, 1200 N. by E. of Constantinople. Lat. 55. 45. N. lon. 37. 31. E.

MOSQUITO SHORE, a country of Mexico, in N. America, lying on the Atlantic Ocean. It is bounded on the N. and E. by the sea, on the S. by Nicaragua, and on the W. by Honduras. In magnitude it exceeds the kingdom of Portugal; is well watered by navigable rivers and lakes; abounds in fish, game, and provisions of all sorts; furnishes every necessary for raising cattle and stock on plantations of every kind, and to any extent; and is clothed with woods, producing timber for every use and purpose at land or sea. The soil is superior to that of the West India Islands; the air and climate are more salubrious; and the destructive ravages of hurricanes and earthquakes have never been known here. The Spaniards have no settlements in the the Mosquito country, and reckon it a part of Honduras. When they first invaded this part of Mexico, they massacred most of the natives, which gave those that escaped into the inaccessible part of the country, an insuperable aversion to them; and they have always appeared ready to join Europeans that came upon their coasts, and particularly the English, who frequently came hither against the Spaniards. The Mosquitomen being excellent marksmen, the English long employed them in striking the maratee fish, &c. and many of the Mosquito Indians went to Jamaica, and sailed with the English in their voyages. They are so situated between morasses and inaccessible mountains, and a coast full of rocks and shoals, that no attempts against them by the Spaniards, whom they mortally hate, could ever succeed. The connection between the English and the Mosquitos no longer exists. By a convention with Spain, in 1786, the former, in consideration of certain cessions on the coast of Honduras, agreed to evacuate this country totally; and it is now a province of Spain. MOULTAN, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the N. by Lahore, on the E. by Delhi and Agimere, on the S. by Guzerat, and on the W. by Persia and Candahar. Its products are cotton, wine, sugar, opium, galls, brimstone, &c. It is, or has been subject to the seiks; but its capital, Moultan, has been garrisoned by the king of Candahar, ever since 1779.

MOULTAN, one of the most ancient cities in Hindoostan, capital of the province of the same name. Thevenot describes it as a city of small extent, for a capital, but strongly fortified, having a pagoda temple much revered. He mentions mentions the river that led to Moulton as having been partly choaked up in his time, (1665): and that this had greatly lessened its trade. He also takes notice of a particular sect of Hindoos in this city, called Catry; a tribe, which he elsewhere explains to mean Rajpoots, or warriors; that is the Katry tribe, which Rennel supposed to be the Catberi, or Cathei, with whom Alexander warred on the banks of the Malli. The king of Candahar keeps a garrison here. The country of Moulton has Lahore to the N. Delhi to the E. Agimere and Sindy to the S. and Persia to the W. Moulton had formerly considerable manufactures of cotton, and is seated on the Chunaub, 200 miles SW. of Lahore, and 800 miles from the sea by the course of the river. Lat. 29. 52. N. lon. 70. 40. MOURZOOK, a city, the capital of Fezzan, in Africa, situated on a small river, and supplied with water from a multitude of springs and wells. Being formerly built of stone, it still retains the appellation of a Christian town; and the medley which it presents to the eye, of the vast ruins of ancient buildings, and the humble cottages of earth and sand that form the dwellings of its present Arab inhabitants, is singularly grotesque and strange. It is surrounded by a high wall, which enables the government to collect, at its three gates, a tax on all goods (provisions excepted) that are brought for the supply of its people. A caravan sets out annually from Mesurata to this place; and hence, the Fezzaneers themselves dispatch, every year, a caravan to Cashna, and another to Bornou. Mourzook is 262 miles S. of Mesurata. Lat. 27. 20. N. lon 15. 5. E.

Moussball, Staffordshire, S. of Wolverhampton. Moussbole, Cornwall, on the W. side of Mountbay; here is a harbour for fishing-boats. Moussely, Leicestersh. NW. of Harborough.

MOUSUL, or MOSUL, a town of Turkey, in Asia, in Diarbek, seated on the W. bank of the river Tigris. It is a large place surrounded by high walls, and defended by a strong castle; but the houses are ill-built, and in several places gone to ruins. It is a place of great trade, particularly in cloth, and all sorts of cottons and silks. The inhabitants are a mixture of Arabians, Persians, Turks, Curds, Maronite and Armenian Christians. Here are considerable manufactures of cotton. Merchandise from India is brought hither by the way of Bassora, and European goods by the way of Aleppo. At Elkah, near this town, the Nestorian patriarch of Syria resides. It is 130 miles SE. of Diarbekir, and 190 NW. of Bagdad. Lat. 35. 40. N. lon. 41. 15. E.

MOUSTIERS, a town in the dept. of the Lower Alps, noted for a manufacture of fine porcelain. It is 5 miles NE. of Riez.

MOUTIER, or MONSTIER, anciently FORUM CLAUDII, and, in the succeeding ages, MONASTERTUM CENTRONUM, a town of the Tarentine, in the dept. of Mont Blanc, seated on the river Isere, at its confluence with the Doiron, 27 miles ESE. of Chambery. They procure excellent salt from the mountains and a spring in the neighbourhood. It is difficult of access, by reason of defiles on the sides of the torrents and precipices.

MOWEE, one of the Sandwich Islands, about 140 miles in circumference. A low isthmus divides it into two circular peninsulas, of which the eastern is double the size of the western. The mountains in both rise to a great height, and may be seen at the distance of more than 30 leagues. The northern shores, like those of Owyhee, afford no soundings, and the country presents the same appearance of verdure and fertility. Near the W. point of the smaller peninsula is a spacious bay, with a sandy beach shaded with cocoa-nut trees. The country behind has a romantic appearance, the hills rising almost perpendicularly in a great variety of peaked forms; and their steep sides, and the deep chasms between them, are covered with trees. The inhabitants are computed at 65,000. Lat. 20. 53. N. lon. 157. 56. W.

MULHAUSEN, an imperial city of Thuringia, Upper Saxony, seated in a fertile country, on the river Unstrutht, 15 miles NE. of Eisenach, and 45. E. by S. of Cassel.

MULHAUSEN, a town of Alsace, which though situated at the distance of some miles from the frontiers of Swisserland, and insulated by the French dept. of the Upper Rhine, is not only in alliance with the Helvetic confederacy, but is considered and respected as a part of it, and entitled to all the privileges enjoyed by that body. The walls of the town inclose a circumference of not more than two miles, and its whole territory is confined within a precinct of eight miles. This little republic maintained its privileges, which had been granted by the emperors in the feudal times, by contracting alliances, at different periods, with Basil, Strafburg, the towns of Alsace and Suabia, Bern, Friburg, and Soleure. In 1515, it was received into the Helvetic confederacy; which league has preserved its liberty and independence from the encroachments of the empire, on the one hand, and, on the other, from the attacks of France. The town contains about 6000 inhabitants, who are Protestants; and there are 2000 people in its adjacent adjacent villages. It owes its present flourishing state to its manufactures, which are chiefly of printed linens and cottons. The government is aristo-democratical. The supreme power resides in the great and little council, consisting together of 78 persons, and drawn from the burghers, whose number amounts to 700, distributed into 6 tribes. Mulhausen is 15 miles NW. of Basle.

MULHEIM, two towns of Berg, Westphalia; one on the Ruhr, and the other on the E. side of the Rhine, 3 miles N. of Cologne.

MULL, one of the Western Islands of Scotland, about 22 miles in length, and, in some places, of the same breadth, but towards the N. not more than 8 miles. There are many good natural harbours; but there is only one village, called Torbermorey, near the northern point, where a fishing station has been lately erected. The soil is unfavourable for corn, being, for the most part, rocky and barren. The mountains, however, abound with springs, and are covered with cattle, of which a great number are annually exported. These, with fish, and a considerable quantity of kelp, are the only articles of commerce.

Mullagheame, a mountain in Tyrone, Ulster, 12 miles SSE. of Strabane.

Mulle, a river in Montgomeryshire, which runs into the Severn at Castle Dolevern.

MUNICH, one of the most pleasant and handsome cities in Germany, capital of the duchy of Bavaria, and containing about 40,000 inhabitants. The houses are high, and the streets large and spacious, with canals in many of them. The palace of the late electors of Bavaria, which now belongs to the elector-palatine of the Rhine, as Duke of Bavaria, is a stupendous structure, magnificently adorned. The cabinet of curiosities, in which are 200 marble statues and busts of Roman emperors, and some other antiques, mostly brought brought from Italy, the museum, the library, and the ducal gardens, attract the attention of travellers. The cathedral contains 25 chapels, and 30 altars; but the two steeples, and the tomb of one of the emperors, of black marble, adorned with statues of bronze, are the most remarkable things belonging to it. There are many other fine buildings, both ecclesiastical and civil, in this city, and the streets are straight and broad. The market-place is very beautiful; and here are manufactures of silk, velvet, woollen-cloth, and tapestry. It is seated on the river Iler, 15 miles SE. of Augsburg, and 62 SSW. of Ratibon. Lat. 488. 10. N. lon. 11. 36. E.

MUNSTER-MEINFELT, a town of Treves, 12 miles WSW. of Coblentz.

MURANO, an island and town of Italy, about one mile N. of Venice, formerly a very flourishing place, as its great manufactures served all Europe with looking-glasses. Instead of being cast, as in England and France, the Murano mirrors are all blown in the manner of bottles.

MURCIA, a very mountainous province, formerly a kingdom of Spain, on the coast of the Mediterranean, about 115 miles in length, and 100 in breadth. Its principal rivers are the Segura, and the Guadalentin. The soil is dry, because it seldom rains here, and therefore produces little corn or wine; but there is plenty of oranges, citrons, lemons, olives, almonds, figs, mulberries, rice, pulse, sugar, silk, and medicinal plants. The air is very healthful, and the principal town is of the same name.

MURCIA, a large, handsome, and populous city of Spain, capital of a province of the same name; it was a Roman city, and from its delightful situation dedicated to Venus Myrta. It has a superb cathedral, the stairs of whose steeple are so contrived, that a man may ride up to the top either on horseback or in a coach. The inns here, like those in the most of the great roads, &c. of Spain, afford but wretched lodgings and accommodations, being generally kept by Gitanes, or Gipsies. It is seated on a plain, which abounds in fine gardens about the city, on the river Segura, 96 miles SSW. of Valencia, and 212 SE. of Madrid.

MYCENE, formerly the capital of a famous kingdom in the Morea, but now reduced to a small village.

MYCONI, an island of the Archipelago, about 21 miles in circumference. The harbour is very open, and deep enough for the largest ships, where they may ride secure from the N. wind. There are about 500 seafaring men in the island, who belong to about 150 vessels, and are accounted pretty good sailors. The soil is dry, and mountainous, but the mountains are of no great height. Water is very scarce in summer; but in the town there is a large well, which is the only one in the island. The island produces little wheat, but plenty of partridges, quails, woodcocks, turtle-doves, rabbits, and beccaficos; beside which there are excellent grapes and figs. The inhabitants, who are about 3000, are almost all Greeks, governed by a Cadi, have fifty churches, chapels, or monasteries. Two or three European nations have consuls here, and yet very few ships frequent it. Lat. 37. 28. N. lon. 25. 51. E.

MYSORE, a fortified town of Hindoostan, anciently the capital of the kingdom so called. It is situated about 10 miles S. from the river Cauvery, and as many S. of Seringapatam.

MYSORE, a kingdom in the peninsula of Hindoostan, subject to Tippoo Sultan, who styles himself regent of the country. It includes generally, beside the Mysore Proper, the countries of Bednore, Coimbertore, Canara, and Dindigul; beside the conquests of his late father, Hyder Ally, (who usurped the throne) to the northward; namely, Meritz, Soonida, Chitteldroog, Harponelly, Sanore, Bancapour, Roydroog, Gooty, Condanore, Canoul, and Cuddapah. The extent of Tippoo's territory, from N. to S. is near 500 miles; its breadth, in the widest place (the N. part of the peninsula) 330 miles, but proceeding to the S. it diminishes, till it ends in a point. By the peace of 1782, Hyder Ally was to relinquish all but his ancient possessions. How far his successor fulfilled the terms of that treaty, cannot easily be ascertained; but, on the termination of the late war, that prince agreed, besides paying a large sum of money, to cede one half of his dominions to the English East-India Company, and their allies, the Mahrattas, and the nizam of the Deccan. The country, in general, is dry, rugged, mountainous, and barren; inasmuch, that sustenance for men and animals cannot be raised upon it, but by the most persevering industry in its inhabitants. See SERINGAPATAM.

Myffse, Yorkshire, NW. of Rippon. Mythe, Gloucestershire, in Tewkesbury parish. Myton, Yorks. between Boroughbridge and Tenmile-Hill, where the Swale leaps into the Ure, as it were, from a precipice.

N A G

N A A S, the county-town, and alternately with Athy, the assize-town of Kildare, in Leinster. It was formerly the residence of the king of Leinster, and is situated on the great post road between Dublin and Munster, near the Grand Canal, 15 miles SW. of the metropolis.

Naborn, Yorkshire, in the E. Riding, E. of the Ouse, and S. of the city of York.

N A B U R G, a town of Bavaria, in the Upper Palatinate, situated on the Nab, a river which rises in Franconia, and runs into the Danube, 4 miles W. of Ratibson.

Naby, Yorkshire, near Barnard Castle. Nackington, a mile and a half SE. of Canterbury. Nacton, Suffolk, near Ipswich. Nadder, a river which rises in Dorsetshire, and joins the Willy, at Wilton, in Wiltshire.

Nadrid, in Cork, Munster.

NAERDEN, or NAARDEN, a town of N. Holland, capital of a country called Goyland, which includes Naerden, Muyden, and Wesep, with 16 other villages. It is seated on the Zuyder Zee, 14 miles N. of Utrecht, and 11 SSE. of Amsterdam.

NAEFELS, a town of Glaris, in Switzerland.

Nafferton, Yorks. SW. of Kilham. Nafford, Worces. near Eckington.

NAGIBANIA, a town of Hungary, seated on the river Zarud, 30 miles NE. of Zatmar. Near it there are gold and silver mines of great produce.

Nagle Mountains, in the S. of Cork, Munster.

NAGOLD, a town and river, in Wirtemberg, Suabia.

NAGPOUR, the capital of part of Berar, in Hindoostan, subject to Moodajee Boonslah, the chief of the Eastern Marhattas. It is a city of modern date; but, though extensive and populous, is poorly built; and, excepting a small citadel of no strength, is open and defenceless.

N A M

The country around it is fertile and well cultivated. It is 488 miles W. by S. of Calcutta. Lat. 21 8. N. lon. 79. 46. E.

NAHAR-MALEK, a town in Irac-Arabia, seated near the Euphrates. Lat. 31. N.

NAJERA, a town of Old Castile.

Nailby, Westmorl. near Kirby-Stephen. Nailesworth, Gloucestersh. near Minching Hampton.

NAIRNE, a small sea-port of Nairnshire, exporting fish, corn, and yarn. It is seated at the entrance of the Frith of Murray, 10 miles E. of Inverness, and 104 N. of Edinburgh. The river Nairne separates the county of Murray from Inverness, crosses Nairnshire, and runs into the Frith of Murray, near Nairne.

NAIRNESHIRE, a populous county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Frith of Murray, and inclosed on every other side by the counties of Inverness and Murray. Its extent from N. to S. is about 12 miles, and its breadth about 10. The soil, though rocky, is fertile, and, in general, well cultivated. It contains several lakes, which abound in fish, and some forests of firs. Nairne is the county town.

NAKSIVAN, a town of Persian Armenia, capital of a province of the same name, with an archbishop's see, some considerable bazars, caravanseras, public baths, and other buildings. It is supposed to have been the ancient Artaxata, and once contained 40,000 houses. In the last century, here were 2000 houses. It is 90 miles SE. of Erivan.

Nallers, Dorsetsh. in Alkerwel parish.

NAMPPIO. See NANPIO.

NAMPTWICH, a large, well-built town of Cheshire, with very regular streets, and manufactures of cotton, (lately established) and of shoes. It is seated on the river Weaver, near the Chester canal, which is finished here with a handsome broad basin, forming a kind of harbour. Here are salt-springs, which lie on the banks of a fresh-water stream, from which they make make great quantities of fine white salt. The principal dairies of Cheshire are about this town. It is a great thoroughfare to Ireland, and is 26 miles SE. of Chester, and 162 NW. of London. A large market on Saturday, for corn, cattle &c.

NAMUR, a city of the Netherlands, said to take its name from an ancient idol called Nam, supposed to be Neptune. It has, or had, a very strong castle, built on the opposite side of the Sambre, on a sharp rock, and defended by fort William, and many other considerable forts, so as to be supposed almost impregnable. In 1692, it was besieged by Louis XIV. and the Duke of Luxemburg, with an army of 120,000 men, and surrendered in sight of King William's army, after an obstinate defence. Vauban and Cohorn, the two greatest engineers Europe ever bred, exhausted the whole science of attack and defence in the siege of this place. Cohorn was dangerously wounded in the defence of Fort Cohorn. Namur was, however, retaken by King William, in 1695, after many desperate, bloody, and dreadful attacks. The trenches were opened on July 11, and the citadel surrendered on the first day of September. The garrison, consisting of 16,000 men, was commanded by Marshal Boufflers. It is seated at the confluence of the Maese and Sambre, 25 miles SW. of Liege. Lat. 50. 29. N. lon. 4. 50. E.

NAMUR, a county of the Netherlands, one of the ten catholic provinces, lying between the rivers Sambre and Maese. It is pretty fertile; has several forests, marble quarries, and mines of iron, lead, and coal, and is about 30 miles in length and 20 in breadth. Namur is the capital.

NANCEY, a large and handsome city, alternately capital with Luneville, of the department of Meurthe. It contains about 34,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the Old and New Town, which are separated by a canal. The first, though irregularly built, is rich and populous, and contains the palace of the ancient dukes of Lorraine. The New Town, whose streets are as straight as a line, was already one of the finest in Europe, before the magnificent works with which Stanislaus I. titular king of Poland, and duke of Lorraine, enriched it. Before the revolution, it had a university, an academy of sciences, and a medical college. It is 10 miles E. of Toul, and 20 S. of Metz. Lat. 48. 41. N. lon. 6. 17. E.

Naneby, Leicesters. NE. of Bosworth.

Naneby, S. of Lincoln. Nansworth, Westmorl. near Penrith.

NANFIO, an island of the Archipelago, a little to the N. of the island of Santorino, about 16 miles in circumference. It has no harbour; the mountains are nothing but bare rocks, and there are not springs sufficient to water the fields. The inhabitants are all Greeks, whose trade consists in onions, wax, and honey. There are vast numbers of partridges, whose eggs they endeavour to destroy every year, to preserve the corn, yet there are still great numbers of them. The ruins of the temple of Apollo are yet to be seen, and consist chiefly of marble columns. Lat. 36. 27. N. lon. 26. 10. E.

NANGASAKI, a town of Japan, situated on the W. coast of the Island of Ximo, with a well-frequented harbour. It is the only port of Japan open to foreigners. The inhabitants carry on a great trade with the Chinese and Dutch. The latter are never suffered to come into the city, unless when their ships arrive, and then they deliver up their guns, helms, and sails, as pledges of their good behaviour. Lat. 32. 32. N. lon. 130. 52. E.

NANKING, or KIANGNIN, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiangnan, and formerly the imperial city. It is the largest in China, being 17 miles in circumference, and about 8 miles distant from the great river Yang-tse-Chiang, from which canals are cut, so large, that vessels may enter the town. This place is greatly fallen from its ancient splendor; for it had a magnificent palace, not a vestige of which is now to be seen, as well as temples, tombs of the emperors, and other ancient monuments. A third part of the city is desolate, but the rest is extremely populous, well inhabited, and full of business. The streets are narrow, but handsome and well paved, and on each side are shops, neatly furnished. The public buildings are mean, except a few temples, the city gates, and the famous tower of porcelain, 200 feet high, and divided into 9 stories, by projections, &c. covered with green varnished tiles. They have several manufactures in silk and wool. The number of the inhabitants is said to be 1,000,000, without comprehending the garrison of 40,000 men. Here the physicians have their principal academy. It is seated near the river Yangtsekiang, 500 miles SSE. of Peking, Lat. 32. 4. lon. 119. 25. E.

Nans, Cornwall, W. of Redruth.

NANTES, an ancient and pretty large city in the dept. of Lower Loire. It is one of the most considerable places in the kingdom, and contains the richest merchants. The bridges over the river Loire, in which are some islands, are almost a league in length. The suburbs are so large, that they exceed the city. The inhabitants are computed at 80,000. Before the revolution, here was a university, a society of agriculture and arts, and a school of anatomy and surgery; the merchants, also, had commonly, on their own account, more than 120 ships for Guinea, the French West India islands, Spain, and the Spanish colonies; indeed this port, in respect to the slave trade, might, before that time, be considered as the Liverpool of France. Vessels were fitted out here for the cod-fishery in N. America; and Nantes had a considerable share in the commerce with the United States. A great quantity of salt is made in the territory of Nantes; both at the Bay of Bourgneuf, and in the salt-marshes of Guérande and Croisic. Large vessels can come no higher than Bainbœuf, which is some miles below Nantes. It is 37 miles SW. of Angers, and 217 SW. of Paris. Lat. 47. 18. N. lon. 1. 28. W.

NANTCHANG, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of the province of Kiangsi. It is 695 miles S. of Peking.

Nantenane, in Limerick, Munster.

Nantgiffel-Cove, Cornw. at the Land's End. Nantglin, Denbighsh. N. Wales.

NANTUA, a town in the dept. of Ain, situated at the extremity of a great lake of the same name, 18 miles SSE. of Bourg.

NANTUCKET, an island of N. America, in the state of Massachusetts, of which it is a county, containing about 23,000 acres. It lies to the S. of Cape Cod; and had once the most considerable whale fishery on the coast; but it was almost ruined by the American war. It has begun, however, to revive lately; the greatest part of the inhabitants being whalers and fishermen. As the island is low, sandy, and unproductive, it is calculated for such people only as are willing to depend almost entirely on the watery element for subsistence. It has one town, called Sherburne. The inhabitants are mostly quakers. Lat. 41. 0. N. lon. 70. 0. W.

NANYANG, a city of China, of the province of Honan, of the first rank. It is 462 miles SSW. of Peking.

NANYONG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quantong. It is 902 miles S. of Peking.

NANTWICH. See NAMPTWICH.

NAPAUL, a province of Hindoostan, between the NW. part of Bengal and the mountainous ridge of Himmaleh, N. of Mocampour; it is subject to Thibet. Catmandu is the capital.

NAPLES, an ancient, large, rich, and trading city of Lavoura, in Italy, one of the finest in the world, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a university. It is seated at the bottom of the Bay of Naples, and is built in the form of a vast amphitheatre, sloping from the hills to the sea. Although the style of architecture is inferior to what prevails at Rome, and it cannot vie with that city in the number or magnificence of the churches, palaces, and public buildings, the private houses, in general, are better built, and the streets are broader and better paved. No street in Rome equals in beauty the Strada di Toledo at Naples; nor can any of them be compared to the beautiful streets which lie open to the bay, and here the excessive heat of the sun is often tempered with the sea-breezes; and with gales wafting the perfumes of the Campagna Felice. The houses, in general, are five or six stories in height, and flat at the top; on which are placed numbers of flower-vases, or fruit-trees, in boxes of earth, producing a very gay and agreeable effect. On the mountain, St. Ermo, in a most pleasant situation, is a convent of Carthusians, on which much expence has been lavished, to render the building, the apartments, and the gardens, equal to the situation. Naples is admirably situated for commerce, and no kingdom produces the necessaries and luxuries of life in greater profusion; and yet trade is but in a languishing condition. The best silks come from Lyons, and the best woollen cloths from England. The articles exported are silk and silk stuffs, oil, sulphur, manna, rosemary, aniseed, resin, tarrar, figs, soap, essences, silk waistcoats, snuff-boxes of tortoise-shell, and of the lava of Mount Vesuvius; tables, and ornamental furniture, of marble. They are thought to embroider here better than in France; and their macaroni is preferred to that of any made in any part of Italy. They excel also in liquors and confections; particularly in one kind of confection called Diabolonis, which is sold at a very high price, and is of a very hot and stimulating nature. The inhabitants are computed to be 350,000, which is very probable; for though Naples is not one third of the size of London, yet many of the streets are here more crowded than the Strand; and a great proportion of the poorest sort are obliged to spend the night night in them, as well as the day, for want of habitations. There is not a city in the world, perhaps, with the same number of inhabitants, in which so few contribute to the wealth of the community by useful and productive labour, as Naples; the number of priests and monks, of whom there are 10,000; siddlers, lawyers, of whom there are 8000, footmen, and lazzaronies, is immense; and the last alone are computed at 40,000. The king, it is said, counts a hundred persons with the title of prince, and still a greater number with that of duke, among his subjects. Six or seven of them have estates from 10 to 18,000*l.* a year; a considerable number have possessions to about half that amount; and the annual revenue of many is not above one or two thousand pounds. The inferior order of nobility are much poorer; many counts and marquises not having above three or four hundred pounds a year paternal estate; many still less; and not a few enjoy the title without any estate whatever. Although the churches and convents of Naples are not to be compared with those of Rome in respect of magnificent architecture, or for good paintings, they surpass them in rich jewels, and the quantity of silver and golden crucifixes, vessels, and other ornaments. The cathedral is a grand Gothic edifice, and of all the palaces, that of the king is not only the most magnificent, but in the best style of architecture. The monasteries and convents of both sexes are computed at 149; besides which there are 84 houses for poor boys, girls, and women; 11 hospitals, 5 seminaries for ecclesiastics; four capital churches; 32 parish churches; 70 other churches and chapels; and about 130 oratories, or chapels of religious fraternities. The harbour, which is spacious, is protected by a mole; and the Bay of Naples is one of the finest in the world, being almost of a circular figure, about 30 miles in diameter, shut out from the Mediterranean by the Island of Caprea, and three parts of it sheltered by a circuit of woods and mountains. Naples is 110 miles SSE. of Rome. Lat 40. 55. N. lon. 14. 20. E.

NAPLES, a kingdom of Italy, bounded on the NW. by the pope's territories; on the S. and W. by the Mediterranean; and on the E. by the Adriatic. Its greatest length from NW. to SE. is upwards of 900 miles, and from NE. to SW. from 96 to 100; its breadth is variously estimated at from 90 to 30. It is divided into 12 provinces; namely, Terra di Lavoro, which was the ancient Campania Felix, and of which the city of Naples is the capital; Principato Citeriore and Ulteriore (hither and farther); Molise; Basilicata; Calabria Citeriore and Ulteriore; Abruzzo Citeriore and Ulteriore; Capitanata; Terra di Bari; and Terra di Otranto; the last three forming the ancient Apulia, (now called Puglia) on the E. side of the kingdom. The climate is extremely hot in summer; but the most disagreeable part of the climate is the siroc, or SE. wind, which is very common in spring, and is still more relaxing. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow except on the mountains. On account of its fertility, the country has been termed a terrestrial paradise: it abounds with all sorts of grain, the finest fruits, and vegetables of all kinds, with rice, flax, oil, wine, saffron, and manna; poultry, game, and fish are also plentiful and cheap. It affords also alum, vitriol, sulphur, rock-crystal, marble, and several sorts of minerals, together with fine wool and silk. Besides these products, and the manufactures spoken of in the account of the city of Naples, waistcoats, caps, stockings, and gloves are also made of the hair or filaments of a shell-fish, which are warmer than those of wool, and of a beautiful glossy green. The principal mountains are the Appenines, which traverse it from S. to N. and the celebrated volcano, Mount Vesuvius. One of the greatest inconveniences to which this kingdom is exposed is earthquakes (See CALABRIA) which the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius contribute in some measure to prevent. The established religion is the Romish; and the clergy and convents possess two thirds of the whole kingdom; but the Jews are allowed to settle here. The inhabitants of this country have, at all times, borne but an indifferent character among other nations; gluttony is here a predominant vice; while instances of ebriety are said to be comparatively rare. In the female sex the passion for finery is almost superior to any other; and chastity is not accounted the characteristic virtue of the country. The breach of the conjugal vow sometimes occasions quarrels and assassinations among people of an inferior rank; and, in the metropolis, assassinations are often perpetrated from much less cogent motives. These vices are attributed to the slavery and oppression under which they groan, and to a radical defect in the administration of justice. In 1734, the Spaniards made themselves masters of Naples and Sicily, for the Infant Don Carlos, and in 1796, the emperor, peror, by a formal instrument, ceded both these kingdoms to his heirs male and female, and in default thereof, to his younger brother and sisters.

NAPOLI DI MALVASIA, a sea-port of Turkey in Europe, in the Morea; seated on the promontory of Malvasia, at the entrance of the Gulf of Napoli-di-Romania. It has a fine harbour, and a long wooden bridge, which joins it to Terra-Firma, and was formerly noted for a temple of Esculapius.

NAPOLI DI ROMANIA, a sea port of Turkey in Europe, in the Morea; seated at the bottom of a bay of the same name. It has a good and spacious harbour, with a narrow mouth, through which one ship only can enter at a time, and defended by a strong castle. It is a large place, inhabited by Greeks, Turks, and Jews; and is 56 miles SW. of Setines. Lat. 37. 36. N. lon. 23. 4. E.

Nappay, Yorks. SE. of Settle. Nappay, Yorks. by the Ure, near Airedig. Napbury, Herts, near London-Colony.

NARBARTH, a town of Pembroke-sh. seated on the summit of a hill, 12 miles N. of Pembroke, and 229 W. by N. of London. It had formerly a castle, the ruins of which are still visible. Market on Wednesday.

NARBONNE, an ancient fortified city in the depart. of Aude. In the time of the Romans, it was the capital of that part of Gaul, called Gallia Narbonensis. Some Roman inscriptions, in different parts of the city, are still visible, and the canal, from the river Aude, through the city, to the Mediterranean, was cut by them. Narbonne is famous for its honey, wheat, much esteemed for seed corn and olives, and contains about 10,000 inhabitants. In the cathedral, which is remarkable for its noble choir, is the tomb of Philip the Bold, king of France. It is situated in a low plain, exposed to inundations from several adjoining rivers, 5 miles from the Mediterranean, and 75 E. by S. of Toulouse.

NARBOROUGH, a small island near the coast of Chili, discovered by Sir John Narborough. It affords wood and water, but is without inhabitants. Lat. 45. 12. S.

NARSINGAPATAM, a town of Hindoostan, situated in the territory of Cattack, near the coast of the Bay of Bengal, 45 miles S. of Cattack.

NARVA, a town of Ingria, in Russia, in the government of Revel. The houses are built of brick, stuccoed white; and it has more the appearance of a German than of a Russian town. In the suburbs, called Ivangorod, or John's Town, the stupendous remains of an ancient fortress, built by Ivan Vassilievitch the Great, impend, in a picturesque manner, over the steep banks of the river. The principal exports from it are hemp, flax, timber, and corn. Near it is the celebrated spot where Charles XII. of Sweden, in his 19th year, gained a complete victory over the Russian army in 1700. It is situated on the river Narova, 8 miles from its mouth, in the Gulf of Finland, 68 miles SW. of Petersburg. Lat. 59. 18. N. lon. 27. 52. E.

NARWAH, or NARWHA, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, seated near the river Cally Sinde, which falls below it, into the Chumbull, a branch of the Jumna. It is 98 miles S. of Agra.

NATOLIA, or ANADOLI, a country formerly called Asia Minor; the most western part of Turkey, in Asia; it is a large peninsula, extending from the river Euphrates, as far as the Archipelago, the Sea of Marmora, the Dardanelles, and the Strait of Constantinople, which separate it from Europe on the W. It is bounded on the N. by the Black Sea, and on the S. by the Mediterranean. In its modern division it comprehends the provinces of Anatolia, Caramania, Amasia, and Aladulia. Anciently it contained Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Galatia, Phrygia, Mysia, Eolia, Ionia, Lydia, Caria, Doris, Pisidia, Lycia, and Pamphelia. It is now governed by a beglerberg, who resides at Kiutaja, under whom are several sanjacks. The air is temperate and wholesome, the soil, in general, fertile, and the commerce considerable, particularly in carpets, leather, drugs, cotton, and silks. It is crossed by a chain of mountains, formerly called Taurus, from E. to W. and watered by a great number of rivers.

NAVARINO, a large and populous town of the Morea, with an excellent harbour, the best frequented in the whole peninsula, and defended by a citadel. It is situated on the W. coast, on the Gulf of Zonchio, 8 miles NE. of Modon, and 17 NW. of Coron.

NAVARRRE, a country of Europe, and formerly a kingdom, lying partly in France and partly in Spain, and divided into the Upper and Lower. The Upper, which belongs to Spain, extends about 54 miles in length and 45 in breadth. The air is more mild, temperate and wholesome, than in the neighbouring provinces of Spain; and, though a mountainous country, it is pretty fertile, abounding in good corn, excellent wine, venison, and wild fowl, good pastures, exceedingly well stocked with sheep and goats; and also in iron-mines. The inhabitants are polite, hardy, lively, and laborious. It is divided into five jurisdictions, whose capital towns are Pampluna, Estella, Tudela, Olita, and St. Guesca. Lower Navarre is subject to France, and now forms the department of the Lower Pyrenees. It is separated from Spanish Navarre by the Pyrenees, and is a mountainous, barren country, about 20 miles in length and 12 in breadth. In 1620, Louis XIII. son of Henry IV. annexed Lower Navarre and Bearn to the crown of France.

NAXOS, or NAXIA, the most fertile island in the Archipelago, about 50 miles in circumference. The whole island is covered with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, fig, and mulberry trees, and their wine still maintains its former excellence. It has no harbour, and yet they carry on a considerable trade in barley, wine, figs, cotton, silk, flax, cheese, salt, oxen, sheep, mules, and oil. They burn only oil of mastick, though olive-oil is exceedingly cheap. It is inhabited both by Greeks and Latins, and contains about 8000 inhabitants, and between 40 and 50 villages. They have here a mine of emery, which is so common, and so cheap, that the English often use it for ballast. The female dress of this island has something truly absurd in its appearance. The two wings of black velvet, which they fix behind to their shoulders, are altogether preposterous. The Greek women at Smyrna cover their breast with a single gauze; at Naxia they wear a heavy stomacher or breast-piece of velvet, covered with embroidery and small pearls; and they wear round their loins a sort of circular shelf, calculated to support the ends of a kind of laced lappets hanging down from their shoulders. They add to this cumbersome dress, all the coquetry of behaviour they can assume; they paint, blacken their eye-browe and eyelashes, and cover their face with patches, made of the leaves of a black, shining talc, which they find in the island; these patches, or pretended blotch-covers, they sometimes cut triangularly, sometimes like a star; but a patch like a crescent, placed between the eyes, is thought to be irresistibly beautiful. When they return out of the country to their town-houses, they will have perhaps 40 women in their train, some on asses, and some on foot; one of whom carries a napkin or two; a second a petticoat; a third a pair of stockings, and so on: all of which composes a very whimsical kind of procession to strangers.

NAXOS, or NAXIA, a considerable town, capital of the Isle Naxos, over against the Isle of Paros, with two archbishops' sees, the one Greek and the other Latin. It is one of the most beautiful places in the Grecian archipelago. Lat. 37. 8. N. lon. 25. 59. E.

NEGROLAND or NIGRITIA, called by the Arabs, SOUDAN, and by the natives AAPNOU, a vast extent, of country in Africa, through which the river Niger is supposed to run. It has a great desert, called Zahara on the N. and stretches far to the S. but little more is known of the inland parts than the names of some of the towns and kingdoms of which it is composed. However, the Europeans have many settlements on the coast, where they barter European goods for slaves, gold-dust, elephants' teeth, gums, and drugs.

NEGROPONT, an island of Turkey in Europe, near 100 miles long, and from 8 to 16 broad, with a harbour, which is commonly the station of the Turkish ships. It abounds exceedingly in corn, wine, oil, fruits, flesh, fish, and fowls, and provisions are very cheap. It has a Greek archbishop's see. The captain-bashaw resides here, who commands the whole island. The bridge reaches from the city to the continent, across the Strait of Negropont. This strait was formerly called Euripus, and was much celebrated for the stated irregularities of its motions. This irregularity has baffled the researches of both ancients and moderns, to account for it satisfactorily. In the first eight days of the month, viz. from the 14th to the 20, and also in the 3 last days, the tide is regular both in its ebb and in its flood, but on the other days the ebb and flood return 11, 12, 13, and even 14 times within 24 or 25 hours. It was taken from the Venetians in 1469, by the Turks, after a six months siege, at the cost of 40,000 men. The Venetians attempted to retake it in 1688, without effect. It is 30 miles NE. of of Setines, or Athens, and 260 SW. of Constantinople. Lat. 38. 30. N. lon. 24. 8. E.

NETHERLANDS, or the LOW COUNTRIES, in German, NIEDERLANDE, a large country of Europe, anciently called Gallia Belgica. In the fifth century the Franks, a people of Germany, coming to settle in Gaul, founded a new kingdom, to which they gave the name of France. In the 9th century, the sons of the emperor, Louis the Pious, having divided the dominions of their father, who possessed Germany, France, and Italy, a new kingdom was formed, comprehending Germany and France, which extended from the Mediterranean to the ocean, and contained a part of the Netherlands. It was called Lotharia, but did not long subsist, for it was soon divided into two; and that seated near the Mediterranean was called the kingdom of Burgundy; while the other, to the N. had the name of Austrasia. Neither did this last continue long, it being divided into small provinces, under different names, which still depended on the empire of Germany, and were called Lower Germany. In process of time, the house of Burgundy purchased many of them, and was about to form them with Burgundy, into a kingdom; kingdom; but Charles the Bold, the last duke of Burgundy, being killed by the Swiss in 1477, his part of the Netherlands devolved on his only child and heiress, Mary; by whose marriage with the emperor Maximilian, the Netherlands became an acquisition to the house of Austria. The emperor Charles V. king of Spain, in 1555, abdicated the sovereignty of the Netherlands, and, sometimes afterward, the Spanish crown, in favour of his son Philip. The tyranny of this cruel bigot, Philip II. who endeavoured to introduce the inquisition into the Low Countries, with the barbarities exercised by the duke of Alva, exasperated the people to such a degree, that they threw off the Spanish yoke, and under the conduct of William I. prince of Orange, formed the famous league of Utrecht, in 1579, which proved the foundation of the republic of the United Provinces. The provinces which compose this republic, are those of Holland, West Friesland, Guelderland, Utrecht, Overysel, and Groningen. After a long and bloody war, the Spaniards agreed to a truce of 12 years, with the United Provinces, the very first article of which acknowledged them to be free and independent states. The war was renewed in 1621, till at last, by the treaty of Westphalia, in 1648, Philip IV. of Spain expressly renounced all claim to sovereignty over the United Provinces. The other 10 provinces, however, returned under the dominion of Spain, but with very favourable stipulations, with respect to their ancient laws and liberties. On the death of Charles II. king of Spain, and the subsequent accession of a branch of the house of Bourbon, to that monarchy, it was stipulated, by the treaty of Baden, in 1714, that the Spanish Netherlands should return to the German branch of the house of Austria, in which they remained till the reign of Joseph II. but not without diminution and dismemberment; for some considerable parts were obtained by conquest, or cession, by the French and Dutch. The only territories that belonged entirely to Austria, were those of Namur and Mechlin. The Dutch had part of Brabant, Limburg, and Flanders. The French had Artois and the Cambresis, and they had likewise part of Luxemburg, Flanders, and Hainault. But on the other hand, part of Guelderland, one of the Seven United Provinces, belonged to Austria, and another to Prussia. The emperor, Charles VI. left the Austrian Netherlands to his daughter Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, who married Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, afterwards emperor. During her reign, no sovereign could be more beloved; no people more content and happy. But her son Joseph II. having projected many innovations in the constitution, both in church and state, and enforcing them with violence, a universal spirit of revolt broke out; an army of 40,000 men rose, as if by magic, to support the renunciation of all allegiance, which several of the provinces now openly made; a congress was formed from the different states, in whom the supreme government was vested; and by the end of 1790, the Austrian forces were entirely expelled from the Netherlands. The new government, however, was not of long duration. Leopold II. (the successor of the capricious Joseph, who died in the early part of 1790) partly by force of arms, partly by conciliatory measures, and partly by the mediation of the courts of London, Berlin, and the Hague, recovered the entire possession of his authority in these provinces, and that, apparently, to the satisfaction of the people; the ministers of the mediating courts having guaranteed the restoration of the ancient Belgic constitution, as enjoyed under the happy reign of the empress queen, Maria Theresa. But since the death of Leopold, his son Francis, having joined the conspiracy against the French, these countries have endured the horrors and ravages of war, and been alternately in the possession of the different parties. They are entirely in the possession of the French, who have reduced them into departments, and annexed them to their republic. The Netherlands, in general, are 360 miles long, and 260 broad; and are bounded on the W. the N. and NW. by the German Ocean, and the Dutch United States; on the E. by Germany; and on the S. by France. The principal rivers are the Scheldt, Rhine, Maese, Mosselle, Sambre, and Lis; and there are many fine navigable canals, which are of great advantage to the commerce of the country. The air is temperate; but the mouths of the rivers and harbours are frozen up in winter. The soil is extremely fertile in corn and pastures; and there are several fine manufactures of lace, lawns, cambrics, tapestry, &c.

NEUCHÂTEL, a territory of Switzerland, which, with that of Vallengin, forms one principality, that stretches from the Lake of Neuchâtel to the limits of the late province of French Comté in France, containing, in length, about 10 leagues, and 4 in breadth. By the death of the Dukes of Nemours, in 1707, the sovereignty of Neuchâtel and Vallengin was claimed by Frederic I. king of Prussia as heir to the Prince of Orange;

his right was acknowledged by the states of the country, and from him it descended to his great grandson, Frederick-William II. The constitution of this country is a kind of limited monarchy. The inhabitants are Protestants, except in the two districts of Landern and Cressier, where the Romish religion is predominant. In 1529, this populous principality entered into a strict alliance with the cantons of Bern, Friburg, Soleure, and Lucerne. The air is healthy and temperate, but the soil not every where equally fertile; however, there are large vineyards, which produce white and red wine, which last is excellent. The pastures on the mountains feed a great number of all sorts of cattle, and there are plenty of deer in the forest, beside large trouts, and other good fish, in the lakes and rivers. The people are ingenious, polite, active, and industrious.

NEUCHÂTEL, a lake of Switzerland, which stretches about 24 miles in length, from the town Yverdon to that of Neuchâtel, at which extremity it has a communication with the Lake of Bienné by a narrow outlet. Its shores, near Yverdon, are covered with country houses and cultivated farms.

Newendon, Essex, SE. of Billericay. Newern, a river in Pembrokeshire.

NEUCHÂTEL, a handsome town of Switzerland, capital of a principality of the same name; but it is a small place, containing not more than 3000 people. It lies partly on the little plain between the Lake of Neuchâtel and the Jura, and partly on the declivity of that mountain; and some of its streets, in course, are very steep. The chief article of exportation is wine produced from the neighbouring vineyards, and much esteemed. Manufactures also of painted linens and cottons have been established with success. Many public works have been lately executed at Neuchâtel, at an expence far exceeding the revenues of this little state; but for these they are indebted to a private citizen, Mr. David Pury, who, beside contributions in his life time, to the amount of 40 000l. left his country heir to a sum of 160,000l.; he himself having none but distant relations. Among these public works, are the new town-house, and the superb causeway leading toward the valley of St. Imier. Neuchâtel has a grand and little council; the first is composed of 40 persons; the second consists of 24 members, comprehending the mayor, who is president. These two councils assemble regularly every every month. The town is situated on the lake of the same name, 25 miles NNW. of Bern.

NEUFCHATEL, a town in the dept. of Lower Seine, noted for excellent cheese, and commodiously seated on the river Arques, 20 miles SE. of Dieppe, and 75 NW. of Paris.

Newil's Cross, near Durham; where, in 1346, David Bruce, king of Scots, was defeated and taken prisoner by the English.

NEVERS, a considerable town in the department of Nièvre, formerly capital of the Nivernois. It contains several fine buildings, particularly the ancient ducal palace, and has about 8000 inhabitants. The principal manufactures are china, glass, and works of enamel. It is seated on the river Loire, over which there is a handsome stone bridge, and at the end of it a fine large causeway, reaching to the town. It is 24 miles NNW. of Moulins.

NEUFCHATEAU, a town of Luxemburg.

NEUFCHATEAU, a populous, trading town in the department of Vosges, seated in a fertile soil, on the river Mouzon, 30 miles NNW. of Epinal, and 150 E. by S. of Paris; also a town in the department of the Aisne, and a town in the department of Lower Seine.

NEUHAUSEN, a town of Samland, in Prussia, and a town in the duchy of Courland.

NEVIN, or NEWIN, a very poor town of Carnarvonshire, seated on the Irish Channel, opposite to Pwllhelly. Here Edward I. in 1284, on the conquest of Wales, held a round table, in imitation of King Arthur, and celebrated it with a dance and tournament. The concourse was prodigious; not only the chief nobility of England, but numbers of others from foreign parts, graced the festival with their presence. It is 20 miles SW. of Carnarvon, and 249 NW. of London. Market on Saturday.

NEVIS, a small but very fruitful island of the West Indies, divided from the E. end of St. Christopher's by a narrow channel. It is a beautiful spot, little more than a single mountain, which is very high in the middle, and covered with large trees up to the top. Here are springs of fresh water and a hot bath, much of the same nature as those of Bath in England. It is divided into 5 parishes, and contains one town, Charles Town, which is fortified. It produces, on an average, one hoghead of sugar per acre, and about 4000 hogheads in the whole. The number of inhabitants is about 6000 whites, and about 10,000 negroes. It is subject to the English. Lat. 17. 14. N. lon. 62. 93. W.

*NEWBURY, a large, well-frequented town in Berks. with spacious streets and a large market-place. It was formerly eminent for the clothing manufacture, and still makes a considerable quantity of shalloons and druggets, and many of the poor are employed in spinning. They also send a great quantity of malt to London. In the reign of Henry VIII. Orman John Winchcomb, commonly called Jack of Newbury, employed 100 looms in his own house; and in the expedition against the Scots, marched to Floddenfield with 100 of his own men, all armed and clothed at his own expence; he also built all the W. part of the church. It is seated on the river Kennet, which abounds with excellent trout, eels, and cray-fish, on the great road between London and Bristol, 16 miles W. of Reading, and 56 W. of London. A well-supplied market on Thursday.

NEWCASTLE, a small town of Carmarthenshire, in S. Wales, seated on the river Tyvy, 17 miles NW. of Carmarthen, and 219 WNW. of London. Mark. on Frid.

*NEWCASTLE,

NEWCASTLE, or NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LINE, a considerable and well-built town in Staffordsh. with a manufactory of cloth, and a large one of hats, here being an incorporated company of felt-makers. In the neighbourhood are many manufactures of stone ware, the sale of which is supposed to average, annually, about 100,000*l*. It is seated on a branch of the Trent, 15 miles N. of Stafford, and 149 NW. of London.

NEWCASTLE, or NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, the largest and most populous town in Northumberland, situated among steep hills, on the Tyne, which is here a fine and deep river; so that ships of 3 or 400 tons burden may safely come up to the town, though the large colliers are stationed at Shields. It is so secure a haven, that vessels when they have passed Tynemouth Bar, are in no danger either from storms or shallows. It is defended by Clifford's Fort, which effectually commands all vessels that enter the river. The town may be considered as divided into two parts, of which Gateshead, on the Durham side, is one; and both were joined by a strong bridge, which had stood above 500 years. It originally consisted of 12 arches, but by the embankment of the river for the purpose of forming the quays on the N. side, they were reduced to nine. On this bridge were houses, which, in general, stood at some distance from each other. In 1771, a dreadful flood carried away four of these arches, with the houses that stood upon them. This part of the bridge was rebuilt in 1779. The town rises on the N. bank of the river, where the streets, upon the ascent, are exceedingly steep. Many of the houses are built of stone; but some of them are of timber, and the rest of brick. The castle, which is old and ruinous, overlooks the whole town. The exchange, churches, and other public buildings, are elegant; and the quay for landing goods is long and large. Here is a hall for the surgeons, a large hospital, built by the contribution of the keel-men, for the maintenance of the poor of their fraternity; and several charitable foundations. It is situated in the centre of the great collieries, which have for centuries supplied London, all the eastern, and most of the southern parts of the kingdom with coal. This trade has been the source of great opulence to Newcastle; which, besides, exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and grindstones; and imports wine and fruit from the S. of Europe, and timber, iron, hemp, &c. from the Baltic and Norway. Ships are sent hence to the Greenland fishery. It also possesses manufactories of steel, iron, and woollen cloth; and in the town and neighbourhood are several glass-houses. The streets in the old part of Newcastle are unsightly and narrow, and the buildings greatly crowded together; but some of the newer parts are handsome and commodious. The suburbs are chiefly inhabited by keel-men, a rough and sturdy race, employed in carrying the coal down the river in keels, or lighters, to the large ships. Newcastle was made a borough by William the Conqueror, and the first charter which was granted to the townsmen for digging coal was by Henry III. in 1239; but, in 1306, the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London, by royal proclamation, chiefly because it injured the sale of wood for fuel, great quantities of which were then growing about that city; but this interdiction did not long continue, and we may consider coal as having been dug and exported from this place for more than 400 years. The castle was built by Robert Courthoise, eldest son of William the Conqueror. Newcastle is 14 miles N. of Durham, 94 N. of York, and 271 N. by W. of London, on the great road to Edinburgh. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

NEWCASTLE, a town of N. America, in the state of Delaware, first settled by the Swedes, about the year 1627, and called Stockholm, but afterward taken by the Dutch, and called New Amsterdam. When it fell into the hands of the English, it was called Newcastle. It was the first town settled on the river Delaware, and was formerly the seat of government. It now contains about 60 houses, which have the aspect of decay, and is seated on the W. bank of the Delaware, 30 miles SSW. of Philadelphia.

NEW-FOREST, a forest in Hampshire, situated in that part of the county which is bounded on the E. by Southampton-Water, and on the S. by the English Channel. According to the plan taken of it in 1683 (the last on record,) it extends from Godshell on the NW. to the sea on the SE. about 20 miles, and from Hardley on the E. to Ringwood on the W. about 15 miles. It contains within those limits about 92,365 acres, statute measure. Of these, however, only 63,845 acres are woods and waste lands, the rest are inclosed lands, held by the master keepers and groom keepers, with their respective lodges, purprestures or incroachments, &c. There are nine walks in it, and a keeper to every one, under a lord warden, besides two rangers and a bow-bearer. King Henry VIII. built some castles in it, and it has now several pretty towns and villages. It has advantages of situation, with respect to conveyance by water carriage, and vicinage to Portsmouth dockyards, superior to every other forest, having, in its neighbourhood, several places for shipping timber. It was afforested by William the Conqueror, who expelled the inhabitants and laid waste the country for that purpose. His son, William Rufus, was killed in this forest by an arrow shot by Walter Tyrrel, a French knight, and which is said to have accidentally glanced against a tree.

NEWFOUNDLAND, a large island lying on the eastern coast of N. America, between 47 and 52 deg. N. lat. It is 350 miles in length from N. to S. and 200 in breadth, at the base, from E. to W. It is a mountainous, barren country, and is much colder than England, being covered with snow five months in the year. It seems to have no inhabitants of its own, but in the summer-time is visited by the Eskimaux Indians. About 500 English families, however, continue here all the year, besides the garrison of St. John's, Placentia, and other forts, or villages, eastward, towards Cape Raze, and from thence to Cape Bon Vista. The remainder, both of the country and coast, northward and westward, is entirely desert. The whole coast of the island is a succession of spacious and perfectly secure harbours, near each other; they all grow gradually narrower from the entrance, so that at the end there is scarcely room for a single vessel to anchor. In the fishing season it is resorted to, by, at least, 10,000 people, on account of the fishing-banks to the E. of this island, for here they cure the cod, which is carried, not only to England, but to all parts of Europe. There is great plenty of venison, fish, and fowls, but very little corn, fruit, or cattle; upon which account the inhabitants have not only their clothes and furniture, but likewise their provisions, from England. In 1785, 292 British fishing vessels, and 85 British trading ships, carried off from hence 591,276 quintals of fish for foreign markets. In 1787, 14,000 seamen were thought to be employed in these fisheries.

NEYLAND. See NAYLAND.

Neyland, Norfolk, near Wreningham. NIAGARA, a river of N. America, which forms the communication between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and runs from S. to N. about 30 miles. At the entrance of this river, on its eastern shore, on the S. side of Lake Ontario, is Fort Niagara, (in lat. 43. 14. N. and lon. 79. W.) about 18 miles N. from which are those remarkable falls which are reckoned among the greatest natural curiosities in the world. The waters which supply the river Niagara, rise near 2000 miles to the NW. and passing through the lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, and Erie, receiving, in their course, constant accumulations, rush, at last, with astonishing grandeur, down a stupendous precipice of 140 feet perpendicular; and in a strong rapid, rapid, that extends to the distance of about 9 miles below, fall nearly as much more. The river then loses itself in Lake Ontario. When the water strikes the bottom, it rebounds to a great height in the air, occasioning a thick cloud of vapours, on which the sun, when it shines, paints a beautiful rainbow.

NIBIANO, a town of Placenza, Italy.

Nibley, Gloucestershire, in Westerleigh parish. Nisley, Gloucestershire, 2 miles from Wotton-under Edge. Newthwaite, Lancash. in Furness Fells.

NICARAGUA, a maritime province of Mexico, in the audience of Guatemala, bounded on the N. by Honduras, on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the SE. by Costa Rica, and on the SW. by the S. Sea; being 400 miles in length from E. to W. and 120 in breadth from N. to S. It is considered as the garden of Mexico, and is well watered by lakes and rivers. The air is wholesome and temperate; and this country produces plenty of sugar, cochineal, and fine chocolate, but little wheat. It abounds in black cattle and hogs, but sheep are scarce. Leon de Nicaragua, the capital, is situated on the S. side of the lake so called, near the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 112. 2. N. lon. 85. 40. W.

NICARAGUA, a lake of New Spain, in the province of the same name, 200 miles in circumference. It has some islands in it, and stretching from the city of Leon NW. to SE. communicates with the Atlantic Ocean by the river St. Juan, called also Nicaragua. It is full of fish, but infested with crocodiles.

NICARIA, an island of the Archipelago, between Samos and Tine, 18 miles long, and 3 wide. It was anciently called Icaria, and is full of rocks; in the caverns of which the poor inhabitants make their abode. These people are of the Greek church, and about 3000 in number. They apply themselves to swimming and diving for sponges; and for goods lost by shipwreck. "The richest men in the island," says Thevenot "give their daughters to the best divers, who are tried before the maid and her father; and he who remains longest under water, wins her." "The women," he adds, "have the ascendancy; and as soon as the husband arrives from any place, in his boat, the wife goes to the sea-side, takes the oars, and carries them home; after which the husband can dispose of nothing without her permission." Lat. 37. N. lon. 26. 4. E.

NICASTRO, a town of Calabria Ultra.

NICE, a county of Italy, (but on the French side of the Alps,) bounded on the W. by the ci-devant Provence; on the N. by Piedmont; on the E. by Piedmont also, and the territories of Genoa; and on the S. by the Mediterranean. It is 36 miles long, 18 broad, and contains about 120,000 inhabitants.

NICE, an ancient and considerable sea-port, on the confines of France and Italy, capital of the county of the same name, lately under the protection of the king of Sardinia, but in 1792, united with the French republic. It is very agreeably situated, on a sharp rock, with a strong citadel, at the mouth of the river Pigliou, 4 miles from the river Var, 83 miles S. by W. of Turin, and 83 E. of Aix. Lat. 43. 42. N. lon. 7. 23. E.

NICE. See ISNIC.

NICHABURG, a town of Chorasan, Persia, famous for a mine of turquois stones near it, 30 miles S. of Meshed.

NICHOSBUR, a town of Brunn, Moravia, 22 miles S. of Brunn.

NICOBAR ISLANDS, situated to the NW. of Sumatra, at the entrance of the Gulf of Bengal. The natives are tall and active, with long faces, black eyes, black lank hair, and copper-coloured skins. They are excellent swimmers, and sometimes will overtake ships under sail. They have no corn, but a fruit which serves them instead of bread, and they catch plenty of fish. They are ready to supply the ships that stop there with provisions, for they have hogs and poultry enough; and, in return, they take iron, linen, and tobacco. The largest of these islands, which gives name to the rest, is about 40 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. Its south end is in Lat. 8. 0. N. lon. 94. 23. E.

NICOLAS, ST. one of the most considerable of the Cape-de-Verd Islands, lying between St. Lucia and St. John. It is of a triangular figure, and ab 90 miles in circumference. The centre is mountainous and stony, and the coasts are barren. The inhabitants, who are black or copper-coloured, under the direction of a Portuguese priest, are about 1500 in number. Lat. 16. 32. N. lon. 24. 6. W.

NICOLO, ST. the most considerable and best peopled of the Isles of Tremiti, in the Gulf of Venice, about 12 miles from the coast of Italy. It has a harbour, and is in lat. 42. 10. N. lon. 15. 37. E.

NICOMEDIA, a town of Natolia, now called Is Nikmid, or Schmit; supposed to be the ancient capital of Bithynia. It was formerly very large, as appears by the ruins, and now contains 30,000 inhabitants; who consist of Greeks, Armenians, and Turks. It is still a place of consequence, and carries on a trade in silk, cotton, glass, and earthen-ware. It is the see of a Greek archbishop, and is situated on a bay of the sea of Marmora, 45 miles ESE. of Constantinople.

NICOPOLI, a town of Bulgaria, 164 miles NW. of Adrianople.

NICOPOLI, or GLANICH, a town of Armenia, 15 miles S. of Erzerum.

NICOSIA, a town of Asia, capital of Cyprus, seated within a chain of mountains, which surround it on all sides, in the centre of the island. It is about 3 miles in circumference; and there are plantations of olives, almonds, lemons, oranges, mulberries, and cypress-trees, interspersed among the houses, which give the town a rural appearance. Under the family of the Lusignans, Nicosia was the royal residence, and an archiepiscopal see; it contained 300 churches, Greek and Latin, and a great number of palaces and public buildings, the ruinous remains of which attest its greatness in that and former ages. The church of St. Sophia is a beautiful Greek structure, which the Turks have turned into a mosque. Here the kings of Cyprus were formerly crowned. It is 100 miles SW. of Aleppo. Lat. 35. 12. N. lon. 34. 45. E.

NICOTERA, a town of Calabria Ultra.

NICOYA, a town of Costa Rica, Mexico, situated on the coast of the S. Sea, at the bottom of a bay, 45 miles SE. of Nicaragua. Lat. 10. 42. N. lon. 85. 7. W.

Nid, Yorkshire, W. Riding, near Ripley.

NIDAW, or NIDOW, a handsome town and bailiwick of Bern, Switzerland.

Niderdale, Yorksh. the valley through which the river Nid runs from the bottom of Craven Hills to Ripley; it afterwards passes by Knaresborough, and runs into the Ouse about 7 miles above York.

NIEUHAUS, a town of Bechin, in Bohemia; a town of Worms, Upper Rhine; and a town of Paderborn, in Westphalia.

NIEUPORT, a sea-port of the ci devant Austrian Flanders, situated on a branch of the Yperlec, 8 miles SSW. of Ostend. The harbour is dry at low water. The chief trade of the inhabitants, who are principally fishermen, is the making of nets and cordage for vessels.

NIGER, a river, supposed to be one of the largest in Africa. Its rise and termination are unknown; but its course is said to be from E. to W. running S. of the kingdom of Cashna toward Tombuctoo, in the sands of which country it is supposed to be lost; but others account the great rivers Senegal, Gambia, and Rio Grande, to be only so many branches or mouths, whereby this vast river discharges itself into the Atlantic. The Africans have two names for this river; namely, Neel il Abeed, or River of the Negroes, and Neel il Kibeer, or the Great River. They also term the Nile, Neel Shem; that is, the Egyptian River; so that the term Neel, whence our Nile is derived, is nothing more than the appellative of River, like Ganges, or Sindus. So great is the rapidity with which the Niger traverses the empire of Cashna, that no vessel can ascend the stream; and such is the want of skill, or of commercial inducements, among the inhabitants of its borders, that even with the current, neither vessels nor boats are seen to navigate. Even the food, which the bounty of the river would give, is in vain offered to their acceptance; for such is the want of skill, or such the settled dislike of the people to this sort of provisions, that the fish are never disturbed. In the rainy season, the Niger swells above its banks, floods the adjacent lands, and often sweeps before it the cattle and cottages of the short-sighted, or too-confident inhabitants.

Niger, a river in Norfolk, running into the sea at Clay. Nighton, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Nighton, St. Cornwall, SE. of Lestwithiel.

NIKOPING, a town of Denmark, capital of the island of Falster, or Hulsler, in the Baltic, 55 miles SSW. of Copenhagen.

NIKOPING, a town of Sweden, formerly the residence of the kings and princes of Sudermania, and now capital of that province. It has some manufactures of cloth and Morocco leather, a brass hammer-mill, and a considerable trade by sea. It is seated near the Baltic, 50 miles SW. of Stockholm.

Niland, Upper and Lower, Dorsetsh. near Great Kingston.

NILE, a great river of Africa, which rises in the mountains of Abyssinia, called the Mountains of the Moon, near the village of Geesh, in lat. 10. 59. N. lon. 36. 55. E. It runs first NE. afterward turns directly E. and enters the great lake Dambia or Dembia, running through it, and passing among the rocks, the sight of it is almost lost. Then it crosses the country of Nubia, and enters Egypt at Syene, which country it divides into two parts: a little below Cairo, it divides itself into two great branches, which, with the Mediterranean Sea, forms the island of Delta. The ancients reckoned eleven mouths of the Nile, of which seven were considerable; but at present there are only two that are navigable at all times; and these are at Rosetta and Damietta. In the middle of this river, between Old Cairo and Gize, is seated the Island of Raouda, which is almost as long as Old Cairo. It is 500 paces in breadth in the middle; and the front of the Mekias, or Nilometer, a work of the Saracens, takes up all the breadth of the southern part. Here they observe, every day, by means of a graduated column, (erected in the centre of a low chamber, its bottom being level with the bed of the Nile) the increase or decrease of the waters of that river, and thence the public criers regulate the proclamations they make of these events, at different hours, through the city. In some parts of this river there are rocks, whence the water falls several feet, and these are called the cataracts of the Nile. It overflows regularly every year, from the 15th of June to the 17th of September, when it begins to decrease. The fertility of Egypt depends upon the overflowing of the Nile; and they reckon it will be a bad year when it is less than 14 cubits; and above 18; but that 16 cubits is the proper height; and when this happens, they make public rejoicings throughout the Delta. This river affords plenty of fish, and breeds a great number of crocodiles, which are very large and dangerous. The Delta, or Lower Egypt, is always overflowed; and when the waters are almost gone off, they sow it with rice, which delights in watery grounds. During the inundation, the little towns, standing upon eminences, look like so many islands; and they go from one to the other by boats. In Cairo there is a canal called Khalis, which is opened when the water is high enough; thence it is conveyed into reservoirs and cisterns, and is afterward distributed into the fields and gardens, as occasion requires. This inundation of the Nile is caused by the periodical rains which fall every year between the tropics, and more particularly in Abyssinia. Off the mouth of this river, August 1; 1798, Rear Admiral Sir Horatio Nelson took, or destroyed, a French fleet of 13 sail of the line and 2 frigates. The British fleet consisted of thirteen 74-gun ships and one of 50 guns: in the French line of battle were 1 of 120 guns, the L'Orient, Admiral Brueys, burnt and blown up, 3 of 80 guns, 9 of 74, and four frigates. The French armament was directed against Egypt, where General Bonaparte had previously landed with a considerable military force.

NIMEGUEN, a town of the United Provinces, capital of Dutch Guelderland, and the chief town of the country of Beterwe. It has a magnificent town house, a citadel, and an ancient palace, and is noted for the peace concluded here, June 30, 1678, between France and the Emperor, Spain and the United Provinces. It is seated on the S. side of the river Wahal, 35 miles SE. of Utrecht.

Nim-Hall, Herts, near Bell-Bar. Nimpsfield, Gloucestersh. 4 miles NE. of Dursley.

NIMFO, or NINGPO, a sea-port of China, in the province of Chekiang. It is a city of the first rank, and is called by Europeans, Liampo. The streets are very narrow, and appear more so on account of penthouses over the shops. The Chinese merchants of Siam and Batavia go thither yearly to buy silks; and they have a great trade to Japan, it being but two days sail distant from it. It is situated in a plain, which resembles a garden garden for its levelness and cultivation: it is full of towns and houses, and divided by a great number of canals. Lat. 30. O. N. lon. 120. 20. E.

Nine-Churches, Westmoreland, on the river Elmot, NE. of Penrith.

Nine-Mile-House, in Tipperary, Munster. Nine-Mile-House, in Tyrone, Ulster, between Dungannon and Omagh.

Nineteen-Mile-House, in Kildare, Leinster.

Ninkenbolt, Hampsh. NW. of Whitchurch.

NINOVE, a town of Flanders county, situated on the Dender.

Ninwick, Northumb. in Simondsburn parish.

NIO, an island in the Archipelago, (anciently called Ino, Ios, and Dios.) S. of Naxia, about 30 miles in circumference. It is fertile in corn, but has very little wood or oil. "The regular manners and behaviour of these islanders, one among another," says the Count de Choisseul Gouffier, "with their kind treatment of strangers, revives an idea of the simplicity of primitive ages. Men, women, and children, appear eager to do any good offices for travellers, without permitting their servants to share in their endeavours. This benevolent disposition is without any mixture of impertinent curiosity or interest, but is the genuine remains of ancient hospitality. An ingenious gentleman, who was lately on the island, experienced the truth of this representation. He could not prevail on any of them to accept the least pecuniary recompence for their trouble; they only required an attestation of the welcome he received; their character in this respect seeming to be what these honest people chiefly prided themselves in. The island has some good harbours. Lat. 36. 43. N. lon. 25. 35. W.

NIORT, a considerable town in the department of the Two Sevres, with manufactures of druggets, ferges, and other coarse woollen goods. Their dry sweetmeats are much esteemed. It is 28 miles NE. of Rochelle.

NIPHON, or HIPHON, an island of Asia, and the largest of Japan, being 660 miles in length, and from 150 to 400 in breadth, containing 55 provinces. The principal cities in this island are Meaco, Jeddo, Olacca, Gurunga, and Saccai.

NISHNEI NOVOGOROD, or NISHGOROD, a populous town of Russia, with a considerable trade, capital of the government of the same name. As it was the appendage and place of residence of the ancient Russian princes, many of them lie buried here. It is seated at the confluence of the Volga and Occa, 220 miles E. by N. of Moscow. Lat. 56. 18. N. lon. 46. 30. E.

NISIBIN, a town of Diarbekir, situated on the Tigris, 78 mile, SSE. of Diarbek.

NISIDA, a small island in the Gulf of Naples, very fertile, (being a kind of large garden, laid out in slopes and terraces) and would be more so but for the great number of rabbits. It has a small harbour, called Porto Pavone, and on a neighbouring rock stands a lazaretto, where ships bound for Naples perform quarantine.

NISMES, an ancient, large, and flourishing town, capital of the dept. of Gard. There are several monuments of antiquity, a public fountain, a mausoleum, and an amphitheatre, built by the Romans. The maison-quarrée, or the square house, is a temple of the Corinthian order, in exquisite taste, raised by the inhabitants of Nismes, in the year of Rome 754, to the memory of Caius and Lucius, sons of Agrippa. The temple of Diana is, in part, gone to ruin. This city was taken by the English in 1417. Before the revolution, it was the see of a bishop, and contained a seminary, a college, an academy of ancient history and belles lettres, and about 40,000 inhabitants, of whom one third was supposed to be Protestants. It is seated in a fine plain, abounding in wine, oil, game, and cattle, 27 miles NE. of Montpellier.

NISSA, a town in Servia, situated on a river of the same name.

NITH, a river of Dumfriesshire, which rises in the mountains to the NW. (some say in Ayrshire) and gives the name of Nithsdale to that part of the country through which it flows. A little above Dumfries, it joins the Cairn, and their united streams form a fine estuary in Solway Frith.

NITRIA, a famous desert of Egypt, 37 miles in length, bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, on the E. by the Nile, on the S. by the Desert of Seta, and on the W. by St. Hilarion. It had formerly a great number of monasteries, which are now reduced to four; and it takes its name from a salt lake, out of which is got the natrum of the ancients, in which they carry on a great trade.

NIVELLE, a town of the late Austrian Brabant, having a good manufacture of cambricks. It is 15 miles S. of Brussels.

NIVERNIS,

NIVERNOIS, a ci-devant province of France. It is pretty fertile, contains mines of iron, and is watered by a great number of rivers, of which the Loire, Allier, and Yonne, are the principal. It is now chiefly in the depts. of Nièvre and Yonne.

NORDKIÖPING, a large inland town of East Gothland, Sweden, next to Stockholm in extent. It contains 5 churches, and about 10,000 inhabitants, but the houses are small and scattered. Its situation on the Morala is exceedingly picturesque. That river flows through the town, forms a series of cataracts, and is divided into four principal streams, which encircle several rocky islands, covered with houses and manufactories. At the extremity of the town is a new and commodious quay. Here are many fabrics of woollen cloth, some sugar-houses, one of snuff, several paper-mills, 50 mills for grinding corn, 2 copper-mills, and a hammer-mill for brass. Corn is exported hence in great quantities; and a salmon fishery gives employment and riches to many of the inhabitants. Nordkiöping is 76 miles SW. of Stockholm.

NORLAND, a large district of Sweden, containing 9 towns, and 7 provinces, viz. Gestricia, Helsingia, Medelpadia, Jemtnerland, Angermania, West Bothnia, and Herjedalia.

NORFOLK, a county of England, bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean; on the W. by Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, and the Wash; and on the S. and SE. by Suffolk. It extends about 60 miles from E. to W. and 40 from N. to S. It contains 33 hundreds, 1 city, 32 market-towns, 660 parishes, and about 220,000 inhabitants. The face of this county varies less than in most tracts of equal extent in England. Not one hill of any considerable height is to be seen in the whole county; yet, in most parts, its surface is broken into gentle swells and depressions. The soil, however, is more various than that of any other county, comprehending all the sorts that are to be found in the island; yet the worst of them are far from being unprofitable. At the western extremity, a considerable tract or flat, fenky land; and, on the east, a narrow tract of marshes runs from the sea, near Yarmouth, to some distance up the country. Several of the western hundreds, from Thetford northward, are open and bare, consisting of extensive heaths, the soil of which is a light sand, or hungry gravel. The rest of the county, in general, is arable land, varying in its degrees of fertility. To the NE. the soil is a light sandy loam, easy of tillage, and equal in value to the best parts of the Netherlands, to which it is similar. The SE. has a richer and deeper soil. The middle and south abound in clay; and various parts yield chalk and marl. The products of the county vary according to the soil and situation. The lighter arable lands produce barley in great plenty. Wheat is cultivated in the stronger soils; but turnips are more generally grown here than in any other part of the kingdom, and from the basis of the Norfolk husbandry. The peculiar excellence of this culture is, that the ground never lies fallow, as the turnips serve to prepare it for corn, beside fattening great numbers of cattle. Much buck-wheat is also grown in the light soils, and used for feeding swine and poultry. The fenky parts yield great quantities of butter, which is sent to London, under the name of Cambridge butter. The sheep are a hardy, small breed, much valued for their mutton. Turkeys are reared here to a larger size than elsewhere. Rabbits are extremely numerous on the sandy heaths; and there is likewise abundance of game, especially of pheasants. On the sea coast, herrings and mackarel are caught in great plenty; and Yarmouth in particular, is noted for the curing of red herrings. The air of this country is sharp and piercing, which throws the seasons more backward than in other counties under the same latitude: but is very wholesome, particularly in the inland parts. No county has a greater share of river and sea navigation. The manufactures of Norfolk are chiefly worsted, woollens, and silks. Its principal rivers are the Great Ouse, Nen, Little Ouse, Waveney, Yare, and Bure. Norwich is the capital.

NORFOLK ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, lying E. of New South Wales; and settled by a colony of convicts, subordinate to that government. The number of men, by the last advices, amounted to 44, the women only to 16. It is a fertile spot, and is very hilly. Some

Some of the valleys are tolerably large, but most of them are only deep hollows. Mount Pitt, the only remarkable hill, is 12,000 feet high. The whole island is covered with a very thick forest, choked with underwood. The timber trees are a sort of spruce pine, resembling the live oak, a yellow wood, a hard black wood, and a wood resembling beech. The spring is perceptible in our autumn, but the trees are in a constant succession of flowering and fruiting the whole year round. The flax-plant is more luxuriant here than in any part of New Zealand; but the chief produce is the pine, which grows in great abundance, and to a large size, many of the trees being as thick, breast high, as two men can fathom, and exceedingly straight and tall. It is very useful in building, and seems to be durable. The soil is rich and deep. In summer the heat is excessive. All the grain and European plants seed in December. From February to August may be called the rainy season. The winter, from April to July, is very pleasant: there is never any frost: but when the SW. wind blows, the air is raw and cold. This island is well supplied with many streams of good water, which abound with very fine eels. The cliffs round the coast are 240 feet high, and quite perpendicular. The want of a safe harbour is a great inconvenience; and the vast number of coral rocks render anchorage very insecure. The settlement is formed in Sydney-Bay, on the S. side of the island. NORMANDY, a ci-devant province of France, on the English Channel, about 150 miles in length, 80 in breadth, and 600 in circumference. It is one of the most fertile tracts in France, and abounds in all its productions except wine, but they supply that defect by cider and perry. It contains mines of iron and copper, and a great number of rivers and harbours. The Normans, a people of Denmark and Norway, having entered France, under Rollo, Charles the Simple ceded this country to them in 912, which, from that time, was called Normandy. Rollo the first duke, having been baptized, Charles gave him his daughter Gisle in marriage. He held Normandy as a fief of the crown of France, and several of his successors after him, till William, the seventh duke, conquered England in 1066, from which time it became a province of England, but was lost in the reign of King John, and reunited to the crown of France; the English, however, still keep the islands on the coast of Normandy. Rouen was the capital. It now forms the departments of Calvados, Eure, the Channel, Orne, Lower Seine, with a small part of Eure and Loire.

NORTHALLERTON, a well-built trading town in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, consisting of only one street, about half a mile long. It is situated in a district called Alvertonshire, on a small brook, which, a mile below, runs into the river Wisk. It is 30 miles NNW. of York, and 223 N. by W. of London. A good market on Wednesday for cattle, corn, corn, &c. Fairs on Jan. 2d, and on St. Bartholomew's Day.

Northam, Devon. between Barnstaple-Bay and Bideford.

NORTHAMPTON, the county town of Northamptonshire, seated on an eminence, gently sloping to the river Nen, which is joined here by another rivulet, and has been made navigable to Lynn. It contains about 1088 houses and 5200 inhabitants. Its principal manufacture is that of boots and shoes, of which many are made here, and in other parts of the country, for exportation. Some stockings and lace are also made here. The horse-fairs of this place are reckoned to exceed all others in the kingdom. It is a handsome, well-built town, and has a regular, spacious market-place, one of the finest in England, a good free-school, and a county infirmary and gaol. Within half a mile of Northampton is a fine Gothic structure, called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen Eleanor, who, at the hazard of her own life, had saved his, by sucking the poison from a wound which he received in the crusades. This town is a great thoroughfare, both in the N. and W. roads, and is 50 miles W. of Cambridge, 30 SE. of Coventry, and 66 N.W. by N. of London. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. Fairs on Feb. 20, April 15, May 4, August 5 and 26, September 19, November 28, and December 19.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the NW. by Leicestershire, and Rutlandshire, on the N. by Lincolnshire, on the E. by the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Bedford, on the S. by Bucks and Oxfordshire, and on the W. by that county and Warwickshire. It is divided into 20 hundreds, containing a city, 18 market-towns, 386 parishes, about 25,000 houses, and 150,000 inhabitants. The air of this county is very healthy, except in the NE. part near Peterborough, which being surrounded and intersected by rivers, is very liable to inundations, and forms the commencement of the fenny tract extending to the Lincolnshire Washes. With this single exception, Northamptonshire is, in a manner, proverbially regarded as a fine and pleasant county; an opinion, confirmed by the number of seats of the nobility and gentry which it contains. Its greatest defect is a scarcity of fuel: this is but scantily supplied by its woods, which, like those in all other parts of the kingdom, have been much diminished by agriculture; and though coal is brought into this county by the river Nen, it is at a very dear rate. Northamptonshire, however, possesses some considerable remains of its old forests, particularly those of Rockingham on the NW. and of Salcey and Whittlebury on the S. In this last, that fiercest of British animals of prey, the wild cat, is still found. There is but one piece of waste ground in this county, and that is a barren heath near Whittering. The products are, in general, the same with those of other farming countries. It is, indeed, peculiarly celebrated for grazing land; the tract especially, which lies from Northampton northward to the Leicestershire border. Horned cattle, and other animals, are here fed to extraordinary sizes; and many horses of the large black breed are reared. Woad for the dyers is cultivated in this part; but the county is not distinguished for manufactures, excepting some of serges, tam-mies, shaloons, boots and shoes; and the trifling one of bone lace. The principal rivers are the Nen and Welland; beside which, it is partly watered by the Ouse, Lean, Cherwell, and Avon. The county-town is Northampton.

North-Town, Staffordsh. near King's Bromley.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of England, receiving its name from being situated to the N. of the Humber. In the Saxon heptarchy it was a part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians, which contained not only the county now called Northumberland, but also Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmorland. It is seated on the extremity of England next to Scotland, and is bounded on the E. by the German Ocean, on the S. by the bishopric of Durham, on the W. and SW. by Cumberland, and on the NW. and N. by Scotland. It extends about 64 miles in length from N. to S. and 48 in breadth from E. to W. and is divided into 6 wards, which contain 13 towns, 460 parishes, and about 100,000 inhabitants. The air is not so cold as might be imagined from the latitude in which it lies; for its situation between two seas, in the narrowest part of England, gives it the advantage of having the cold moderated by the temperate breezes of each; and for this reason the snow seldom lies long in Northumberland, except on the top of high hills. The air is extremely healthful, and many of the inhabitants enjoy health to a great age. The soil is various; the eastern part being fruitful, having very good wheat, and most sorts of corn, with rich meadows on the banks of the rivers; but the western part is generally barren, it being mostly heathy and mountainous. The SE. part abounds with pit-coal; the SW. angle has very rich lead-mines, but very little wood. The rivers abound with salmon, trout, &c. and the coasts are rich in cod, ling, turbot, soles, &c. This county is well watered by rivers, the principal of which are the Tyne, Tweed, Coquet, and Alne. Alnwick is the county-town.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of Virginia, and a county and town of Pennsylvania, the last of which is situated on the N. side of the Susquehanna, opposite Sunbury.

Northway and Newton, Gloucester. near Ashchurch.

NORTHWICH, a handsome town of Cheshire, chiefly noted for its salt-mines, which were discovered in the beginning of the present century. Here are four deep brine-pits, from which immense quantities of salt are raised, partly to be purified on the spot by re-dissolving and boiling, and partly to be exported in its crude state. Most of the latter goes to Liverpool by the river Weaver. The salt-quarries here, (discovered within these few years, on the S. side of the town,) when a person is let down into them by a bucket, to the depth of 150 feet, afford a truly pleasing and picturesque appearance, looking very much like a subterraneous cathedral. They extend extend several acres, and are supported by rows of pillars, having a crystal roof, all of the same rock, and transparent and glittering from the numerous candles burnt there to light the workmen, who dig it away with steel pick-axes. The stratum of salt lies above 40 yards deep: above it is a bed of whitish clay. The clear annual duty received by government for Cheshire salt amounts to 200,000*l*. Here is also a large cotton manufacture. Northwich is seated on the river Weaver, near its conflux with the Dane, (by which it communicates with all the late inland navigations.) 20 miles NE. of Chester, and 173 NW. of London. Market on Friday.

NORWALK, a town of Connecticut.

NORWAY, a kingdom in the N. of Europe, the most westerly part of the ancient Scandinavia. It is formed naturally into two divisions; namely Northern and Southern or Proper Norway separated from each other by the small Swedish province of Herndahl. Northern Norway is a long and narrow slip of land, extending as far as Cape North, the most northern part of Europe, beyond 71. 0. deg. N. lat. and bounded on the W. and N. by the Northern Ocean, by Swedish and Russian Lapland on the E. and by Sweden on the S. It is divided into Nordland and Finmark, and comprehended in the government of Drontheim. Southern Norway is bounded on the E.

by Sweden, and on the S. and W. by the Northern Ocean. It is divided into the four governments of Aggerhuys or Christiania, Christianland, Berghen, and Drontheim. From its rocky soil and northern position, Norway is not populous in proportion to its extent. Mr. Coxe has calculated the number of inhabitants to be 750,000, who, like the Swiss mountaineers, are esteemed good soldiers, and are exceedingly attached to their country. The horses are small, but strong, active, and hardy. In Norway they have a particular code, called the Norway Law, compiled by Griffelsfeld, at the command of Christian V. the great legislator of this country. By this law, the palladium of Norway, peasants are free, a few only excepted, on some estates near Fredericstads. The benefits of this code are visible in the great difference, in their appearance, between the free peasants in Norway, and the enslaved vassals of Denmark, though both living under the same government. The Norwegian peasants possess much spirit and fire in their manner; are frank, open, and undaunted, yet not insolent; never fawning, yet paying proper respect. The same causes which afflict the population of Norway, operate likewise on the state of tillage; for, although in some places vegetation is so quick, that the corn is sown and cut in 6 or 7 weeks, yet the country does not produce sufficient corn for its own consumption. It is, however, exceedingly rich in pasture, and consequently produces much cattle. The fisheries, particularly on the western coast, procure employment and wealth to the natives. The principal fish, which, dried and salted, furnish a considerable article of exportation, are the cod, the ling, and the whiting; their livers also yield train oil, and the smallest are given as winter fodder to the cattle. The extensive forests of oak and pine produce timber spars, beams, and planks, beside charcoal, turpentine, bark, fuel, and even manure; and the birch (the bark of which is used as a covering for the roofs of houses) not only supplies fuel, but also a kind of wine, which is produced by boring a hole in the trunk, and the wine distils into a flask placed under it. The twigs of the birch also, as well as of the elder and aspen, are given to horses in scarcity of fodder. The general exports of Norway are tallow, butter, salt, dried fish, timber and planks, horses and horned cattle, silver, alum, Prussian blue, copper, and iron. Norway abounds in lakes and rivers: the former so large, that they appear like inlets of the sea; but the bays are so small, that they appear like lakes. It was formerly governed by its own hereditary sovereigns, but is now united to the crown of Denmark. The capital is Christiania.

*NORWICH, an ancient, large, and populous city of Norfolk, seated on the river Yare, which runs through it, and is navigable hence to Yarmouth, without locks. Although it is 6 miles in circuit, the population is not so great as might be expected from that circumstance, as it contains a number of gardens and orchards within the walls. It has a stately ancient castle, on a hill, which commands a fine view of the city: this castle is the shire-house for the county, and the county gaol; the assizes for the city being held at the Guildhall. Norwich has a good public library, a city and county hospital, a lofty market-house of free-stone, and a bridewell built of flints, remarkable for being beautifully cut into regular little squares, without any visible cement. It had formerly 53 parochial churches, besides monasteries; and has now 36 churches, beside the cathedral, chapels, and dissenting meeting-houses. It had also a flint-stone wall, now much decayed, about 3 miles in compass, which had 40 towers, and was finished in 1309. Here is a free-school, founded by Edward VI. and several other charitable foundations. Norwich long took the lead in point of commercial consequence among the inland towns. For this it was indebted to its great manufactures of crapes, bombazines, and stuffs of various kinds, which are still considerable, though somewhat declined, on account of the rivalry of the cotton branches, and in consequence of prohibitions in foreign countries. The manufacture is confined to the city, but the operations of spinning and preparing the wool, employ the poor of most of the small towns and villages in the county. It is computed that stuffs, such as damasks, camlets, black and white crapes, to the amount of 70,000l. have sometimes been manufactured here in a year. This city adds much to the trade of Yarmouth, by the vast cargoes of coals, and other heavy goods, which come to it from thence by the river Yare. Here are many good buildings, particularly a very spacious market-place; but the streets (that of St. Giles excepted) are narrow and ill-disposed. The market-place being on an ascent, is very clean, and has a fine effect. Norwich has 12 gates, 6 bridges over the Yare, about 7500 houses, and 45,000 inhabitants. It is well supplied with provisions, and is 48 miles N. of Ipswich, and 100 NE. by N. of London. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

NORWICH, a town of Connecticut, erected near the head of the river Thames, in a situation convenient for mills; at which place and Norwich the executive courts of law are held alternately. Here are considerable manufactories for paper, stockings, clocks, and watches, chaifes, buttons, stone and earthen ware, wire, oil, chocolate, bells, anchors, and all kinds of forge work. The number of houses is about 500. It is 12 miles N. of New London, and 66 SW. of Boston.

NORWICH, a town of Vermont.

Norwood, a village in Surry, situated on a fine hill, in the parishes of Croydon, Streatham, Lambeth, and Camberwell, 5 miles S. of London. It is a wildly-rural spot, bearing the marks of unimproved nature, and was, some years ago, a principal haunt of the gypsies. Norwood, Isle of Wight, in East Medina. Norwood, Kent, near Ramsgate. Norwood, Middlesex, a chapel of ease to Hayes. Norwood-Park, Nottinghamsh. near Southwell. Noseley, Leicestershire, NW. of Hallaton. Noshol-Hall, Yorksh. SE. of Wakefield. Nostrop, Yorkshire, near Leeds.

NOTEBURG, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, seated on an island in the Lake of Ladoga, at the place where the river Neva proceeds from this lake. It was the capital of the province of Ingria, before Petersburg was built, from which it is distant 25 miles E.

Notely, Black and White, Essex, near Braintree. Notgrove, Gloucest. 4 miles NW. of Northleach. Notley, Bucks, near Tame, in Oxfordshire.

NOTO, NUOVO, an ancient, large, and handsome town of Sicily, capital of the Val-di-Noto. It was entirely ruined by an earthquake in 1693, but the inhabitants built another town at some distance from it. It is 14 miles SW. of Syracuse.

Notown, Nottinghamsh. near Thurgarton and Blaseby. Nottar, Cornwall, NW. of Saltash.

NOTTINGHAM, the county-town of Nottinghamshire, takes its name from the Saxon, Snottengaham, or House of Dens, so called from the spacious vaults dug in the rock, in which the ancient Britons are supposed to have resided. It is pleasantly seated on a rocky eminence, above the meadows bordering the Trent; on the highest part of which stands the castle, a large, elegant, and noble palace, belonging to the Duke of Newcastle, with a most extensive prospect. It is a large, populous, and handsome town, with a spacious market-place, and considered as one of the principal seats of the stocking manufacture; particularly of the finer kinds, as those of silk and cotton. It has also a manufactory of glass and coarse earthen ware, and a considerable trade in malt. It is remarkable for its vaults or cellars, cut into the rock. Many of the houses in the market-place have their fronts supported by lofty stone columns, which make a very handsome appearance, and at the same time afford shelter in wet weather. The streets are well paved, and, from their situation on a rock, many of them are always clean. Heavy goods are brought hither from London by sea, and up the river Trent; and many coal pits, within 3 or 4 miles of the town, afford plenty of fuel at little expence. It is 16 miles E. of Derby, and 128 N. by W. of London. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. Fairs on Friday after January 13th, May 7th, Thursday before Easter, and October 2d.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, on the E. by the latter county, on the S. by Leicestershire, and on the W. by Derbyshire. Its greatest length is 48 miles; its greatest breadth above 20. It is divided into 8 hundreds, and contains 13 towns, 168 parishes, and about 150,300 inhabitants. Being agreeably situated between the mountainous country of Derbyshire on the one hand, and the flat of Lincolnshire on the other, it enjoys such a temperature of soil and climate, as to render it one of the most fertile and agreeable counties in England. The principal rivers are the Trent and Idle. Almost the whole of the middle and western parts of the county were formerly occupied by the extensive forest of Sherwood, which is the only royal forest N. of the Trent, but the wood has in many parts been cleared, and the extent of the forest much contracted. A canal from Chesterfield in Derbyshire passes across the northern part of this county, and joins the Trent just as that river ceases to be its boundary. The chief products of this county are corn, malt, pit-coal, of which there is great plenty; and a kind of stone somewhat like like alabaster, but not so hard, which, when burnt, makes a plaster harder than that of Paris, with which the inhabitants generally plaster the floors of their upper rooms, instead of boarding them. Their other commodities are malt, wool, liquorice, wood, fish, and fowl. Their manufactures chiefly consist of framework knitting, glass, and earthen ware. The principal town is Nottingham.

Nottingham, Dorsetsh. N. of Melcomb-Regis. Notton, Dorsetshire, near Crookston. Notton, Wilts, near Laycock and Corsham. Notwell Court, Devonsh. near Topsham.

NOVA SCOTIA, a peninsula of Acadia, about 240 miles in length, and from 20 to 60 in breadth, joined to the continent by a narrow isthmus at the NE. extremity of the Bay of Fundy. The whole province was formerly called Nova Scotia, or Acadia, but in 1784 it was divided into two governments, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Several new towns have been founded here, during and since the American war; and the country is in many parts cultivated and flourishing. The winter lasts here, with great severity, during, at least, 7 months in the year. The soil is tolerably fertile, though inferior to that in New England.

NOVOGORODECK, a large town and a palatinate (otherwise called Black Russia) of Lithuania.

NOVOGOROD, or NOVOGOROD, one of the most ancient cities of Russia, in the government of the same name. It was formerly called Great Novogorod, to distinguish it from other Russian towns of the same appellation. It was the great mart of trade between Russia and the Hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. Its territory extended to the N. as far as the frontiers of Livonia and Finland; comprising great part of the province of Archangel, and a large district beyond the NW. limits of Siberia. At this period its dominions were so extensive, its powers so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb, "Who can resist the gods and Great Novogorod?" But in 1477, this independent republic was obliged to submit to the arms of Ivan Vassilivitch I. grand duke of Russia. An enormous bell, denominated by the inhabitants eternal, and revered by them as the palladium of their liberty, was removed by their conqueror from Novogorod to Moscow. It continued, nevertheless, the largest and most commercial city in Russia, and contained, at least, 400,000 people. It was first desolated, in a manner, by the cruelties exercised here by Ivan Vassilivitch II. in 1570, but its splendour was not totally eclipsed until the Czar Peter built Petersburg, to which favourite capital he transferred all the commerce of the Baltic that had before centred here. It now contains scarce 7000 inhabitants; but a vast number of churches and convents stand melancholy monuments of its former magnificence. The town stretches on both sides of the Volchova, a beautiful river, of considerable depth and rapidity, which separates it into two divisions; namely, the Trading Part and the quarter of St. Sophia. The cathedral of St. Sophia is one of the most ancient in Russia: it was begun in 1044, by Vladimir Yaroslavitch, duke of Novogorod, and completed in 1051. Several princes of the ducal family of Russia are interred in this cathedral. Novogorod is situated near the Lake Ilmen, 92 miles SSE. of Petersburg. Lat. 58. 20. N. lon. 32. 45. E.

NOVOGOROD, once an independent republic, finally reduced by Ivan Vassilivitch II. in 1570, and united to the Russian empire, of which it now forms a government. It is bounded on the N. by the government of Olonetz, and on the SW. by the government of Pskov. The capital is of the same name.

NOVOGOROD, NISHNEI. See NISHNEI NOVOGOROD.

NOVOGOROD SEVERSKOI, a government of the Russian empire, comprising part of the Ukraine, or Little Russia. Its capital, which is of the same name, is 264 miles SSW. of Moscow.

NUBIA, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N. by Egypt, on the E. by the Red Sea, on the S. by Abyssinia, and on the W. by countries of Africa, of which hardly the names are known. The river Nile runs through it, on the banks of which, and those of the other rivers, it is uncommonly fertile, but in other places barren, sandy, and in want of water. Money is of no use in this country in the way of trade, it being all carried on by way of exchange. Their bread and drink is made of a small round seed, called doca, or seff, which is very ill tasted. Their houses have mud walls, being very low, and covered with reeds. The habit of the rich is a vest without sleeves, and they have no coverings for their heads, legs, and feet: others wrap a piece of linen cloth about them, and the children go quite naked. They profess to be Mahometans. Great part of the coast is under the power of the Turks, as well as the country between Egypt and Dungalá; the rest is composed of several kingdoms, little known. The exports of this country are gold, elephants' teeth, civet, sandalwood, and slaves. Millet grows in great abundance; and the sugar-cane is cultivated, but, for want of knowing well how to prepare it, the sugar is black. The principal districts known to the Europeans are Dungalá and Sennaar.

NUREMBURG, an imperial city, one of the most handsome and flourishing places in Germany, and capital of Franconia. It is seated in a sandy, barren soil, and yet the inhabitants are so industrious, that they have brought this republic into a very flourishing state. It is about 6 miles in circumference, surrounded by high walls, flanked with 365 towers, as also with a deep ditch. The river Pegnitz runs through the middle, and divides it into two parts; over it are 6 wooden bridges, and 6 others of stone. Among the public buildings, two of the churches, the arsenal, and the very magnificent council house, are greatly admired. The townsmen are divided into eight quarters, or parts, and 181 captainships. The government is aristocratical. The great council is composed of 200 persons, and the supreme council of 34 patricians, and of 8 of the most reputable tradesmen. The burgesses are very industrious, and fine workmen in the arts. Their maps, prints, paintings, and engravings are in high esteem, as well as their musical and mathematical instruments; nor are they less curious in clock-work, and in the several manufactures of metal, ivory, wood, and alabaster. The trade in toys made here, and sold in England by the name of Dutch toys, is considerable, though it does not bring in so much money to the town as formerly. Here is also a famous academy for painting. The anatomical theatre, and the public library, are also worth notice. Geography is much indebted to the celebrated shop for land charts, established here by John Baptist Homann. In the cleanness of their streets, and the neatness of their houses, they imitate the Dutch; and though they formerly kept to their old habits, they now follow the most fashionable modes. Their religion is the Lutheran; yet several Roman Catholic customs are still retained in their divine service. The building called the church of the Holy Ghost, has a variety of reliques, as also the imperial crown, the imperial sceptre, the globe of the empire, the sword of St. Maurice, the imperial mantle, the white robe of the emperors, called the Dalmatic, the golden surplice, the mantle of the choir, and the gloves, the slippers, and the hereditary crown of the emperor Rodolph II. All these rarities are placed in a chest, which is suspended by a rope in the dome, and they are never taken down but at the coronation of the emperor, or when any person of high distinction wants to see them. The ancient and superb castle, or palace, which the inhabitants bought of the burgraves, is still standing at the extremity of the city. It was partly burnt down in 1420, and contains at present a granary, a pentagonal tower, and a prison. Here are four Latin schools, beside a famous college, or university. This town has, in process of time, obtained a considerable circle of territory, about 30 miles in diameter, and 100 in circumference, and in which are two large forests. Their manufactures are conveyed all over Europe by the means of two large fairs. The houses are all built of free-stone, and are four or five stories high. It is seated almost in the centre of Germany, 55 miles NW. of Ratisbon, and 250 W. by N. of Vienna.

OHIO, in N. America, one of the most beautiful rivers in the world; it has its source in the Allegany Mountains, and is called the Allegany, till its junction with the Monongahela, at Fort Pitt, when it first receives the name of Ohio. It runs a course of near 1200 miles, in a SW. direction, till it joins the Mississippi, about 10 miles above New Madrid, forming the N. boundary of the state of Kentucky, and receiving in its course, numbers of large and small rivers. The only disadvantage this river has, is a rapid, one mile and a half long, and a mile and a quarter broad, called the Falls of Ohio, in latitude 38. 8. N. In this place the river runs over a rocky bottom, and the descent is so gradual, that the fall does not, probably, in the whole, exceed 20 feet. When the stream is low, empty boats only can pass and repass this rapid; their lading must be transported by land; but, when high, boats of any burden may pass in safety. Excepting this place, there is hardly a finer river in the world for navigation by boats. At a salt-spring, near this river, very large bones have been found, far surpassing the size of any species of animals now in America. The head appears to have been about three feet long, the ribs seven, and the thigh bones about four; one of which is deposited in the library at Philadelphia, and is said to weigh seventy-eight pounds. The tusks are above a foot in length, the grinders above five inches square, and eight inches long. Specimens of these bones have been sent to France and England, where they have been found, upon comparison, to be remains of the same species of animal that produce the fossil bones, which have been discovered in Tartary, Chili, and several other places, both of the old and new continent. What animal this is, and by what means its ruins are found in regions so widely different, and where none such exists at present, is a question of difficult decision. The bones bear a great resemblance to those of the elephant. There is no terrestrial animal now known, large enough to produce them. The tusks, with which they are equally furnished, equally produce true ivory. But, from the form of the teeth, it has been observed, that they must have belonged to a carnivorous animal, whereas the habits of the elephant are foreign to such sustenance, and his jaws totally unprovided with the teeth necessary for its use. From the whole, it has been concluded, to the satisfaction of naturalists, that these bones belonged to a quadruped, now unknown, and whose race is probably extinct, unless it may be found in the extensive continent of New Holland, whose recesses have not yet been pervaded by the curiosity or avidity of civilized man.

OODOOANNULLAH, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in Bengal, seated on the W. bank of the Ganges, which is high and bold, and at the foot of a chain of hills. The situation is esteemed unhealthy, on account of the forests in its vicinity. It was the seat of the government of Bengal, under the sultan Sujah, till he fell in the contest for empire with his brother Aurungzebe. The numerous ruins here and in the neighbourhood, evince his passion for building; and the great extent of many of them affords a proof of his magnificence. There still remains remains a part of the palace, which, in his time, was nearly destroyed by fire. Here is an elegant bridge over the Ganges, built by the same prince; and famous for the victory gained over Meer Cossim, in 1764, by the late Major Adams; 82 miles N. by W. of Moorshedabad. Lat. 24. 58. N. lon. 87. 55. E.

OONALASHKA, one of the islands of the Northern Archipelago, visited by Captain Cook in his last voyage. The native inhabitants of this island are, to all appearances, a very peaceable people, having been much polished by the Russians, who now keep them in a state of subjection. As the island furnishes them with subsistence, so it does, in some measure, with clothing, which is chiefly composed of skins. Fish, birds, roots, berries, and even sea-weed, compose their food. They dry quantities of fish during the summer, which they lay up in small huts for their use in winter. They did not appear to be very desirous of iron, nor to want any other instrument, except sewing needles, their own being formed of bone. With these they sew their canoes, and make their clothes, and also work very curious embroidery. They use, instead of thread, the fibres of plants, which they split to the thickness required. All sewing is performed by the females, who are shoemakers, taylor, and boat-builders. They manufacture mats, and baskets of grass, which are both strong and beautiful. Lat. 53. 5. N. lon. 165. 0. W.

OOSTBORCH, a town in the island of Cadland, 4 miles NE. of Sluys.

OOSTENBY, a town of Sweden, in the island of Oeland, 27 miles S. of Borkholm.

OPORTO, or PORTO, a handsome city and sea-port of Douró, in Portugal, with an excellent harbour. It is noted for its strong wines, upwards of 80,000 pipes of which are exported annually; whence all red wines that come from Spain or Portugal to England, are called Port wines. The road is spacious, and will contain a large fleet; that from Brazil sometimes rides here. Next to Lisbon, it is the richest, most populous, and most commercial town in the kingdom. Here is an arsenal for fitting out ships of war, which are built in the docks. It is seated on the declivity of a mountain, about 3 miles from the mouth of the Douro, and 147 N. by E. of Lisbon. Lat. 41. 10. N. lon. 8. 21. W.

OPPELN, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a fine hospital. The chief tribunal of justice, and the first consistory of Silesia, were settled here in 1742. The principality contains 27 towns, and but few villages. It is fortified in the ancient manner, and is seated on the river Oder, 35 miles SE. of Breslau.

ORACH, a town of Turkish Bosnia.

ORAN, or WARRAN, a town of Tremesen, in Barbary, with several forts, and an excellent harbour. It is seated partly on the side of a hill, and partly on a plain, almost opposite to Carthage, in Spain. It is about a mile and a half in circumference, and is subject to the Spaniards. On the 8th of October, 1790, this place was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, little but the exterior walls being left standing; and 2000 persons perished on this occasion. It is 160 miles W. by S. of Algiers. Lat. 36. 2. N. lon. 0. 8 W.

ORANGE, an ancient and considerable town in the department of Drome. It was an important place in the time of the Romans. The triumphal arch, visited by connoisseurs, and which is 200 paces from the town, was formerly within its limits. This arch, which was much damaged in 1707 and 1709, was erected by Caius Marius and Lucius Catulus, after the victory which they obtained over the Cimbri and the Teutones. Here are also the remains of a fine amphitheatre, and some aqueducts, which escaped the fury of the Goths and Saracens. The principality, which is about 10 miles long, and 7 broad, contains one city, two small towns, and nine villages. The sovereignty of it was lodged in the House of Nassau, from 1598 to 1702, when it reverted to Frederic William, king of Prussia, on the death of William III. king of England, and stadtholder of Holland. By the treaty of Utrecht, however, it was ceded to the house of Bourbon. Orange is seated in a fine plain, on the little river Aigues, 26 miles N. of Avignon.

ORANIENBURG, a town and palace in the Middle Marche, Brandenburg, seated on the river Havel.

Oranmore, in Galway, Connaught.

ORBASSAN, a town of Piedmont, 6 miles SW. of Turin.

ORBE, an ancient and handsome town, in the Pays de Vaud, capital of a bailiwick, whose sovereignty is divided between the cantons of Bern and Friburg. Its romantic situation, the boldness of the single-arched bridge projecting over the Orbe, the wild scenery on the banks of that river, its frequent cataracts, and the various picturesque views in the neighbourhood, are much admired by travellers. It is seated on a river of the same name, 24 miles SW. of Friburg.

ORBITELLO, a sea-port of Sienna, with a good harbour, and well fortified. It is subject, however, to Naples. Lat. 42.28. N.

ORBOE, a river of France, which rises in the mountains of the Cevennes, 8 miles NW. of Lodeve, waters Beziers, and falls into the Gulf of Lyons, 8 miles below that town.

Orby, Lincolnshire, NE. of Spilsby.

ORCADES, or ORKNEYS, a cluster of islands on the N. of Scotland, from which they are separated by a channel, 20 miles in length, and 6 in its nearest breadth. Their number has generally been reckoned 30, of which 26 are inhabited; the rest are called holms, and are used only for pasturage. The principal one, called the Main Land, or Pomona, greatly exceeds the others in extent. Beyond this island, to the NE. are seen, among others, Rowfay and Weitra, Shappinsha, and Edda, Stronsa, Sanda, and N. Ronalsha. To the S. appear the Isles of Hoy and S. Ronalsha, with others of inferior note. The currents and tides, which flow between these islands, are extremely rapid and dangerous; and near the small Isle of Swinna are two whirlpools, that have been known to snatch in boats and light vessels, which were instantly swallowed up. The strait, called Pentland Frith, which divides these islands from the county of Caithness, is likewise very dangerous to those who are not well acquainted with the tides and currents; especially in passing the Pentland Skerries, a cluster of rocks that lie in the E. entrance of the Frith. Springs of pure water are found in all the mountainous parts of these islands; and there are numerous lakes and rivulets abounding in fish. The heath on these mountains shelters grouse, plovers, snipes, &c. but here are neither partridges, hares, nor foxes. There are numbers of sheep and small black cattle. The products of the valleys and plains are bear (an inferior kind of barley) and oats, but no other sort of grain. The climate of these islands is unfavourable; although they do not suffer so much from frost and snow, as might be supposed from their northerly position. In general, the air is moist; and they are often visited by dreadful storms of wind, rain, and thunder. Their longest day is 19 hours and a half; their shortest four and a half. Thus, for about three weeks in midsummer they enjoy the sight of the sun, almost without intermission; but, for the same space in winter, that luminary hardly rises above the horizon, and is commonly obscured by clouds and mists. In this gloomy season, the absence of day is supplied partly by moon light. But the radiance of the Aurora Borealis contributes still more effectually to supply this want. The almost incessant corruscations of these meteors are, indeed, sublimely beautiful; and we, who only see the extremities of these northern phenomena, have but a faint idea of their splendour and their motions, in the higher latitudes. The inhabitants are robust and hardy; the inferior classes are active and industrious, while those of superior rank are distinguished for politeness and hospitality. The Teutonic, or Pictish, language, was in general use here till the last century; but, except in Foula, where a few words are still known by aged people, it is quite lost. The English language, with a Norwegian accent, is now generally spoken in these islands, although many of the inhabitants use the Norse. The principal trade of these islands is with Leith, Hamburg, and Bergen. Their chief exports are linen and woollen yarn, stockings, butter, dried fish, herrings, oils, feathers, with skins of various kinds, and kelp. The Orkneys contain about 23,000 inhabitants, who are divided into 3 presbyteries, and 18 ministeries.

ORLEANOIS, a ci-devant province of France, which, with the Blaisois and Chartrain, is divided into the three departments ments of Loir and Cher, Loiret, and Eure and Loir. It is divided by the river Loir into the Upper and Lower, and is a very plentiful country. Orleans is the capital.

ORLEANS, a large, ancient, and handsome city of France, capital of the dept. of Loiret. It is built in the form of an oval, and contains 6 principal gates, 22 parishes, and about 40,000 inhabitants. The streets are spacious, but the houses are generally ill-built. That of the Faux-bourg of Paris is of a prodigious length. The commerce consists in wine, brandy, corn, grocery, and particularly sugar, which is brought raw from Nantes and Rochelle. About 100,000 cwt. of loaf sugar are sent annually from Orleans; a great part of which is taken by the merchants of Paris. Sheep skins and stockings, both knit and woven, form also a considerable article of trade. This city has, or lately had, a society of natural philosophy, natural history, &c. and a public library. The environs are very pleasant; particularly the suburb of Olivet, on the left side of the Loire, which has a communication with the city by a bridge, the boldness and lightness of which are equally admired. It consists of 9 arches; the centre one of which is 100 feet wide. Orleans is seated on the river Loire, 30 miles NE. of Blois, and 60 SSW. of Paris. Lat. 47. 54. N. lon. 1. 59. E.

ORLEANS, CANAL OF, commences at the river Loire, about two leagues above Orleans, crosses the Forest of Orleans, and the plain which succeeds it, joins the canal of Briarie, near Montargis, and passing by Nemours, falls into the river-Seine. It was finished in 1682, and has 30 locks in its course, which is about 18 leagues in extent.

ORLEANS, FOREST OF, near the city of that name, contains 94,000 acres, planted with oak and other valuable trees. It is one of the most considerable of all France; and the sales of its timber and underwood produce annually about 100,000 livres.

ORLEANS, NEW, a city of N. America, capital of Louisiana, built in the time of the regency of the Duke of Orleans. In 1788, seven-eighths of it were destroyed by fire; but great progress has been since made in rebuilding it. Here are 2 convents, a parish church, magazines, forges, and some public buildings. The houses are chiefly of wood, on foundations of brick. It never contained above 1500 inhabitants, and is seated in a rich, fertile soil, and with an excellent climate, on the E. side of the Mississippi, 54 miles from its mouth. Lat. 30. 2. N. lon. 89. 53. W.

ORMUS, an island at the entrance of the Gulf of Persia, about 10 miles in circumference. Here is neither sweet water nor grass, it being, strictly speaking, no better than a rock of salt. The very dust of the country, within land, is white and pure, as well as pungent to the taste. It was formerly the greatest mart in the East, being visited by shipping from India, Africa, Egypt, and Arabia, as well as by caravans, who carried on a regular trade across the country, and brought with them immense quantities of the richest and most valuable commodities. At certain seasons of the year, there was a prodigious resort of merchants from all countries, beside factors who constantly resided here, particularly Venetians. The houses were then about 4000 in number, and contained 40,000 inhabitants. The Portuguese conquered this island in 1507, and kept it till 1622, when the Persians, by the assistance of an English squadron of 9 sail, took the place and demolished the houses. The trade was then transferred to Gambron. It is now almost deserted, yet is still the key of the Persian Gulf, on account of the commodiousness of its harbour. Lat. 27. 20. N. lon. 56. 25. E.

ORNANS a town in the department of Doubs. In its vicinity is a well, which, during OTAHA, one of the Society Islands in the S. Pacific Ocean. It lies N. of Ulitea; and is divided from it by a strait, which, in the narrowest part, is not more than 2 miles broad. This island is smaller than Ulitea, and not so fertile, but it has two very good harbours. Lat. 16. 33. S. lon. 151. 20. W.

OTAHITEE, one of the Society Islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 90 miles in circumference, supposed to have been first seen by Quiros in 1606. It was first discovered to the English by Captain Wallis, in 1767, who called it George the Third's Island. Bougainville next arrived at it in 1768, and staid 10 days. Captain Cook, in the Endeavour, came hither, in 1769, to observe the transit of Venus, sailed round the whole island in a boat, and staid here three months. It was afterwards visited twice by that celebrated navigator. It consists of two peninsulas, great part of which is covered with woods and forests, consisting partly of bread-fruit trees, palms, cocoa-nut-trees, plantains, bananas, mulberries, sugar-canes, and others peculiar to that climate, particularly of a kind of ananas, or pine-apple, casuarinas, and dragon trees. The people have mild features and a pleasing countenance. They are about the largest size of the Europeans, of a clear olive or brunette complexion, with fine black hair and eyes, and wear a piece of cloth round the middle, of their own manufacture, and another wrapped about the head, in various picturesque shapes, like a turban. The women, who are accounted very handsome, wear a piece of cloth, with a hole in the middle, through which they pass their heads, so that one part of the garment hangs down behind, and the other before, to the knees; a fine white cloth, like muslin, passes over this, in various elegant turns, round the body, a little below the breast, forming a kind of tunic, of which one turn sometimes falls gracefully across the shoulder. "This dress," says Mr. Forster, "appeared more advantageous to the human figure, than any modern fashion we had hitherto seen. Both sexes are adorned, or rather disfigured by those black stains, occasioned by puncturing the skin, and rubbing a black colour into the wounds. This operation is performed upon the youth of both sexes, when about twelve or fourteen years of age. No language seemed easier to acquire than theirs, every harsh and sibilant consonant being banished from it, and almost every word ending in a vowel. The only requisite is a nice ear to distinguish the numerous modifications of their vowels." The houses of the natives consist only of a roof, thatched with the long prickly leaves of the palm nut tree, and supported by a few pillars made of the bread-fruit tree. As a roof is sufficient to shelter the natives from rains and nightly dews, and as the climate of this island is one of the finest in the world, the houses have seldom any walls, but are open on all sides. Various little birds are found among the shrubs and trees, that had a very agreeable note, though common report among the Europeans, has denied the powers of harmony to the birds of warm climates. The birds most common are two sorts of paroquets, one of a beautiful sappharine blue, another of a greenish colour, with a few red spots; a king's fisher, of a dark green, with a collar of the same hue round his white throat; a large cuckoo; several sorts of pigeons or doves, herons, and ducks. The cloth of the natives is made of the fibrous bark of the mulberry tree, which is beaten with a kind of mallet; and a glue made of the hibiscus esculentus, is employed to make the pieces of bark cohere together. Some of these pieces are 2 or 3 yards wide, and 50 yards long. The colours with which they dye this cloth are principally red and yellow. The red is exceedingly beautiful, and of a brighter and more delicate colour than any known in Europe. Their matting is also finer and better in every respect, than any we have in Europe. They are also exceedingly neat in making basket and wicker work. Their fishing lines are also the best in the world, made of a kind of nettle which grows in the mountains, holding the strongest and most active fish, such as bonnettas and albicores. It is remarkable, that though the natives of this island far excel most of the Americans in the knowledge and practice of the arts of ingenuity, yet they have not invented any method of boiling water; and, having no vessel that could bear the fire, they had no more idea that water could be made hot, than that it could be made solid. The only quadrupeds found upon the island, are hogs, domestic dogs, and rats, which the inhabitants suffer to run about at pleasure, without ever trying to destroy them. The sea supplies them with a variety of excellent fish. Long nails on the fingers are a mark of distinction among the natives, as among the Chinese. The two sexes here eat separately, as in many other countries. Their burying places, called Morai, are built of several ranges of stones, like steps, each about three feet and a half in height, and covered with grasses, ferns, and small shrubs. At a little distance is an oblong inclosure round it, made of stone, about three feet high. The provisions of the Otaheiteans are chiefly fish, pork, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit and bananas. Their pork is exceedingly delicious, and entirely free from that luscious richness which makes it resist the stomach so soon in Europe. They are, indeed, much cleaner than the European hogs, and have not their custom of wallowing in the mire. They are of the small breed, which is commonly called the Chinese, but they have the pendulous ears of ours. Mr. Forster is lavish in his praises of the gentleness, good nature, and hospitality of this people; and also of the beauty, elegance, and gracefulness of the air, features, and persons of many of them, particularly those of the better sort. On the coast are several excellent bays and harbours, with room and depth of water sufficient for the largest ships. The whole island could furnish about 6780 fighting men. The sea affords them a great variety of fish, in every expedient for taking which they are exceedingly ingenious.

OUDE, a foubah, or province of Hindoostan, subject to a nabob, whose dominions lie on both sides of the Ganges, occupying (with the exception of the district of Rampour) all the flat country between that river and the mountains of Thibet, as well as the principal part of that fertile tract, lying between the Ganges and Jumna, known by the name of Doobah, to within 40 miles of the city of Delhi. The dimensions of Oude and its dependencies are estimated, by Major Rennel, at 360 miles in length from E. to W. and in breadth from 150 to 180. The capital is Lucknow. The nabob is in alliance with the British power, and a brigade of the Bengal army is constantly stationed on the western frontier, covering Oude as well as Bengal, and keeping the western states in awe. The whole expence of this establishment is paid by the nabob of Oude, under the name of a subsidy.

OUDE, an ancient city of Hindoostan Proper, in the foubah of Oude, the remains of which are seated on the Ganges, nearly adjoining Fyzabad. It is said to have been the first imperial city of Hindoostan, and to have been built by their hero Krishen. In Colonel Dow's translation of Feritsha's history, it is mentioned as the capital of a great kingdom, 1209 years before the Christian era; and it is frequently mentioned in the Mahabharat, the famous Hindoo work in Sanscrit, (the learned language of the Bramins) under the name of Ajudia. But whatever may have been its former magnificence, scarcely any traces of it are left. It is considered as a place of sanctity; and the Hindoos frequently come hither, in pilgrimage, from all quarters of India.

UDENARD, a rich and strong town of Flanders, with a manufacture of very fine linen, and of curious tapestry. This town was besieged by the French in 1708, but they were compelled to raise the siege by the Duke of Marlborough, who entirely routed their army, (commanded by the Dukes of Burgundy and Vendome) and took 5000 prisoners. It is seated on the river Scheldt, 12 miles S. of Ghent.

OVERYSSEL, one the Seven United Provinces, bounded on the E. by the bishopric of Munster; on the N. by West Friesland and Groningen; on the W. by the river Yssel, and part of the Zuyder Zee; and on the S. by the county of Zutphen and the bishopric of Munster. It is divided into three distinct parts, which are, the territories of Drente, Twente, and Salland. There are many morasses in this province, and but few inhabitants, in comparison with the rest. Its greatest riches consists in turf, which is dug up here, and sent to the neighbouring provinces, particularly Holland.

OUGEIN, a town of Malwa, in Hindoostan, the capital city of Madajee, Sindia, one of the Western Mahratta chiefs. It is a place of great antiquity, 200 miles SE. by S. of Agimere. Lat. 23. 26. N. lon. 75. 56. E.

Ousby, Cumberland, near Kirk Oswald.

OUSE, a river of Sussex, rising from two branches, one of which has its spring in St. Leonard's Forest, near the source of the Arun; the other, in the Forest of Worth; but they soon unite to the S. by Lewes, into one stream, which entering the English Channel, forms the harbour of Newhaven.

OUSE, GREAT, a river which rises near Brackley, in Northamptonshire, waters Buckingham, Stony-Stratford, Newport-Pagnel, Olney, and Bedford, where it is navigable. Thence it proceeds to St. Neots, Huntingdon, St. Ives, Ely, and Lynn, below which it enters the Lincolnshire Washes, or German Ocean.

OUSE, LITTLE, a river which rises in the S. part of Norfolk, and divides that county from Suffolk, as it flows westward. It becomes navigable at Thetford, and falls into the Great Ouse near Downham.

OUSE NORTHERN, a river of Yorkshire, formed by the junction of the Ure and Swale, which rise near each other in the romantic tract, called Richmondshire. These, after collecting all the rills from this mountainous region, unite at Aldborough, and thence take the name of the Ouse, which now forms a large river. It flows through York, where it is navigable for considerable vessels, and afterward, receiving the Wharfe from the NW. the Derwen, from the NE. and the Aire, formed by the united Aire and Calder, from the W. and joined, near its termination in the Ouse, by the Dun from the SW. it falls into the Humber.

Ousgress, Northumb. S. of Alnwick.

Ousley Bridge, Staff. over the Stow, E. of Cank Wood.

Ousfern, Warwicksh. near Merevale-Abbey.

Ouston, Yorksh. N. of Easingwold.

OWERRA, OVEIRO, or ORESE, a territory of Guinea, dependant on Benin, with a town of the same name, situated on the river Formosa. The air is unwholesome, and the soil dry and lean; however, there are several kinds of fruits, such as bananas and cocoa-nuts.

Owersby, Linc. NW. of Market-Raisin. Owers Rocks, E. of the Isle of Wight. Owghton Head, Herts, the source of that river, near Hitchin.

OWHYHEE, the easternmost and by much the largest of the Sandwich Islands, of a triangular shape. Its greatest length, from N. to S. is 28 leagues, and its breadth 24. It is divided into six districts, two of which, on the NE. side, are separated by a mountain, that rises in three peaks, perpetually covered with snow, and may be seen clearly at 40 leagues distance. To the N. of this mountain, the coast consists of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful cascades; and the whole country is covered with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. The peaks of the mountain, on the NE. side, appear to be about half a mile high, and are entirely covered with snow. To the S. of this mountain, the coast presents a prospect of the most dreary kind, the whole country appearing to have undergone a total change from the effects of some dreadful convulsion. The ground is every where covered with cinders, and intersected in many places with black streaks, which seem to mark the course of a lava that has flowed, not many ages back, from the mountain to the shore. The southern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting headland is composed of broken and craggy rocks, piled irregularly on one another, and terminating in short points; yet, amid these ruins, are many patches of rich soil, carefully laid out in plantations. The fields are inclosed by stone fences, and are interspersed with groves of cocoa-nut trees. There are supposed to be on this island about 150,000 inhabitants. It was here, on Feb. 14. 1779, that the celebrated Captain Cook fell a sacrifice to a sudden impulse of revenge in the natives, with whom he unfortunately had a misunderstanding or dispute. Lat. of the eastern extremity 19. 28. N. lon. 156. 0. W.

*OXFORD, the capital of Oxfordshire, is seated at the confluence of the Thames and Cherwell, on an eminence almost surrounded by meadows, except on the E. side. The whole city, with the suburbs, is of a circular form, 3 miles in circumference. It consists chiefly of two spacious streets, which cross each other in the middle of the town. The origin of the university is involved in obscurity; a certain proof of its great antiquity. Alfred, who resided at Oxford, together with his three sons, is said to have founded three schools, or colleges here; one for philosophy, another for grammar, and a third for divinity. It is generally supposed, however, to have been a seminary of learning before his time, although it owed its revival and consequence to his liberal patronage; and it was certainly a place of study at the time of the Norman invasion. About the middle of the 12th century, public Public lectures on the civil law were read here not more than ten years after a copy of Justinian's Institutes had been found in Italy. In the reign of Henry III. there were said to be 15,000 scholars here, if they deserved that name, the sole object with many being only to read and write, while the greatest number attained to neither, and the most learned acquired only bad Latin and logic. Here are 20 colleges and 5 halls, several of which stand in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. It is thought, that there is not such another group of buildings, nor such another university, at this day, in the world. The colleges are provided with sufficient revenues for the maintenance of a master, fellows, and students. In the halls, the students live, either wholly or in part, at their own expence. The colleges are, University, Balliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, New, Lincoln, All Souls, Magdalen, Brazen Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ Church, Trinity, St. John Baptist's, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, and Hertford. Of these, Balliol College is the first, according to Mr. Camden, that was endowed with a regular and permanent income, in 1260. The halls are, Alban, Edmund, St. Mary's, New Inn, and St. Mary Magdalen. These last were anciently hotels, or inns, and were the only academical houses originally possessed by the students of Oxford. Among the libraries in the university, the most distinguished is the Bodleian, founded by Sir Thomas Bodley; those of all Souls College, Christ Church, Queen's, New College, St. John's, Exeter, and Corpus Christi. Among other public buildings are the Theatre, the Ashmolean Museum, the Clarendon Printing-House, the Radcliffe Infirmary, and a fine Observatory. Oxford has lately been embellished with a noble market-place, and a magnificent stone bridge, and is 20 miles SW. of Buckingham, and 58 W. by N. of London. Markets on Wednesd. and Saturday.

OXFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Gloucestershire; on the N. by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire; on the E. by Bucks, and a part of Berks; and on the S. by Berks. Its extreme length is 48 miles; its greatest breadth 36. It is divided into 14 hundreds, which contain one city, 12 market-towns, 280 parishes, 451 villages, 19,000 houses, and about 114,000 inhabitants. The air is sweet, mild, pleasant, and healthy. The soil, though various, is fertile in corn and grass. The southern part of the county, especially on the borders of Buckinghamshire, is a hilly and woody country, having a continuation of the Chiltern Hills running through it. The north-western part is also elevated and stony. The middle is, in general, a rich country, watered by numerous streams, running from N. to S. and terminating in the Thames. Of these, the most considerable are the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, and Tame. The latter, although an inconsiderable rivulet, has obtained some celebrity from having been supposed to give name to the Thames, into which it flows above Wallingford. The products of Oxfordshire are chiefly those common to the midland farming counties. Its hills yield ochre, pipe-clay, and other earths, useful for various purposes. Corn and malt are transmitted from it, by the Thames, to the metropolis. Good cheese is made in the grazing parts. The greatest want in this county is that of fuel; for the woods, with which it once abounded, being greatly diminished, it is necessary to supply the deficiency of fire-wood with sea coal, brought, by a long and troublesome navigation, from London. The junction of the Thames with the Trent and Mersey, by the canal cut from Braunston to Hampton-Gay, and by another canal, (for which an act of parliament was obtained in 1793) from Braunston to Brentford, will greatly remedy this inconvenience. The most considerable forest now remaining in Oxfordshire is that of Witchwood, between Burford and Charlbury.

Oxgate, Middlesex, a prebend of St. Paul's in Wilsdon parish. Oxbill, Warwickshire, N. of Brailes. Oxinton, Gloucestersh. 4 miles E. of Tewkesbury. Oxley, Stafford. N. of Wolverhampton. Oxlinch, Gloucestersh. in Standish parish. Oxned, Norfolk, SE. of Alesham. Oxney, Northamptonsh. near Peterborough. Oxney Island, Kent, formed by the Rother, near Appledore. Oxnop, Yorksh. SW. of Keighly. Oxspring, Yorksh. SW. of Barnsley. Oxied, Surry, in the parish of Stoke-Dabernon. Oxton, Chesh. between Upton and the Mersey. Oxton, Devonsh. in Kenton parish, near Exmouth. Oxton, Yorksh. near Tadcaster. Oxton, Yorksh. N. of Kilham. Oxwell, Camb. between Biggleswade and Cambridge. Oxwich, Norfolk, near Rainham Hall.

Oyster-Haven, in Cork, Munster, is seldom frequented by vessels. It is sufficiently deep, but the entrance is narrow.

Oxleworth, Gloucestersh. 3 miles SE. of Dursley.

PABBAY, one of the Western Islands of Scotland. It is about 9 miles in circuit, and has corn, marl, and pasture. Lat. 57. 55. N. lon. 6. 7. W.

PABLO SAN, a lake of Otabalo, in Quito, abounding with fish and wild-fowl. On its banks is a village of the same name. Also a town of Caxamarca, in Truxillo.

PACAJES, a jurisdiction of La Paz, in Buenos Ayres, containing some rich silver mines. The air is temperate, and the pastures are good.

PACEM, a town and kingdom on the N. coast of Sumatra, dependant on Achen. It is 120 miles SE. of Achen.

PACHACAMAC, a town of Lima, in S. America, celebrated for a magnificent temple, built by the Incas of Peru, and dedicated to the Supreme Being. When Pizarro took this temple, he found an immense quantity of gold in it; besides what the soldiers pillaged. It is situated in a valley of the same name, about 12 miles S. of Lima.

PACHSU, and ANTIPACHSU, two small islands on the coast of Greece, S. of Corfu; lately subject to Venice.

PACHUCA, a town of Mexico, famous for silver mines, as rich as any in the province. It is 35 miles NNE. of Mexico.

PACIFIC OCEAN, otherwise called the SOUTH SEA, lies between Asia and America, and is upward of 10,000 miles in breadth. This immense body of water may be said also to stretch from pole to pole. When Magellan entered this ocean, through the dangerous strait that bears his name, he sailed three months and 20 days, in a uniform direction toward the NW. without discovering land. In the extreme distress which he suffered in this voyage, before he discovered the Ladrone Islands, he had the consolation, however, of enjoying such an uninterrupted course of fair weather, with favourable winds, that he bestowed on this ocean the name of Pacific, which it still retains. The Spaniards, having passed the Isthmus of Darien, from N. to S. at the first discovery of this ocean, named it the South Sea, although, with respect to America, it is more properly the Western Ocean. On one side of the equator it is called the N. Pacific Ocean; and, on the other, the S. Pacific Ocean.

PACKINGTON, a town of Leicester-shire, in a retired delightful situation, within a mile of Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

Packington, Stafford. NW. of Tamworth. Packington, Magna and Parva, Warwick. S. of Colehill. Pack's-Hill, Suffex, near Horsted-Cayns. Packwood, Warwick. near Lapworth.

PACY, a town in the department of Eure, seated on the river Eure, 10 miles E. of Evreux.

PADANG, a sea-port town on the W. coast of Sumatra, with a fort and settlement belonging to the Dutch. Lat. 1. 0. S.

Padbury, SE. of Buckingham, on a river that runs into the Ouse.

Paddington, a village of Middlesex, which lies by the N. of London, or rather, by the late increase of buildings, may be said to form a part of it, and yet the parish contains many sequestered rural spots. A canal is making from this place, which is to join the Grand Junction Canal at or near Hayes. Paddingwick, Middlesex. near Hammer-smith. Paddingham, Lancast. SE. of Clithero.

PATERBORN, a considerable city of Westphalia, capital of a bishopric of the same name, and formerly one of the Hanse Towns. The rivulet Pader rises here under the high altar of the cathedral. It is a celebrated university, and is 37 miles SW. of Minden, and 43 ESE. of Munster. Lat. 51. 46. N. lon. 8. 55. E.

PADERBORN, THE BISHOPRIC OF, is a small district of Germany, in Westphalia, about 44 miles in its greatest length, and 36 in its greatest breadth. It is bounded by the county of Lippe on the N. and by the duchy of Westphalia and the principality of Waldeck on the S. In the middle of it are high mountains, containing iron-mines; but the rest of the country is fertile in corn and pastures. It is most remarkable for its bacon, or hams, and venison. The bishop is a prince of the empire.

Padfield, Derby. in the High Peak. Paddlesworth, Kent, 3 miles SE. of Elham. Paddlesworth, Kent, 3 miles N. of West Malling. Padley, Derby. in the High Peak, near Scarisdale. Padmore-Chase, Stafford. E. of Bloreheath. Padongre, Warwick. near Studley.

PADRON, EL, a town of Spanish Galicia, seated on the Ulla.

Padside, York. S. of Patley-Bridge. Padston, or Paxton, Northumb. on the Tweed, W. of Berwick. Padstow, Devon. between Hatherley and the Merlands.

PADSTOW, a town in Cornwall, is a place of some trade to Ireland, Bristol, and London. The harbour is capable of containing vessels of 500 tons at high water, but is of dangerous access, without a skilful pilot, being rocky on the E. side, and barred with sea-land on the W. The chief business here, and along this coast, next to the trade in slate-tiles, is fishing for herrings, which come up the Channel in October. It is 26 miles SSW. of Launceston, and 243 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

PADUA, an ancient, large, and celebrated city of Italy, with a university. It is capital of the Paduano, but is much less considerable than it was formerly; for great part of the circuit within the walls is unbuilt, and the town in general so thinly inhabited, that grass is seen in many places in the interstices of the stones with which the streets are paved. The houses are built on piazzas, which, when the town was well inhabited, and in a flourishing state, may have had a magnificent appearance; but they now rather give it a gloomy air. The streets, also, in general, (although there is a great number of beautiful buildings) are narrow, dark, dirty, and ill-paved. Padua contains 26 parish churches, 41 convents, 4 hospitals, 9 squares, 7 stone bridges, and 7 gates. The Franciscan church is dedicated to St. Anthony, accounted the great patron of the city. "The body of this holy person," says Dr. Moore, "is inclosed in a sarcophagus, under an altar in the middle of the chapel, and is said to emit a very agreeable and refreshing flavour. Pious Catholics believe this to be the natural effluvia of the saint's body; while heretics assert, that the perfume (for a perfume there certainly is) proceeds from certain balsams rubbed on the marble every morning, before the votaries come to pay their devotions. I never presume to give an opinion on contested points of this kind; but I may be allowed to say, that if this sweet odour really proceeds from the holy Franciscan, he emits a very different smell from any of the brethren of that order whom I ever had an opportunity of approaching." The walls of this church are covered with votive offerings of ears, eyes, arms, legs, noses, and every part almost of the human body, in token of cures performed by this saint; for whatever part has been the seat of the disease, a representation of it is hung up in silver or gold, according to the gratitude or wealth of the patient. Near this building is a place, called the School of St. Anthony, where many of his actions are painted in fresco; some of them by Titian. The university, formerly so celebrated, is now, like every thing else in this city, on the decline. Here is a cloth manufactory; and it is said, that the inhabitants of Venice (the nobles not excepted) lately wore no other cloth than what was made here. The city, however, swarms with beggars, who ask charity in the name of St. Anthony. Padua is seated on the rivers Brenta and Bachiglione, in a fine plain; and is about 7 miles in circumference, 22 miles W. of Venice. Lat. 45. 22. N. lon. 12. 1. E.

PADUANO, a ci-devant province of Italy, in the territory of Venice, bounded on the N. by the Trevisano. Its soil is well watered, one of the most fertile in Italy, and is about 35 miles in length, and 28 in breadth, Padua is the capital.

Padworth, Berks, near Aldermarston. Padynge, Surry, in Abinger parish.

PAEFENHOFFEN, a town in the dept. of Lower Rhine, seated near the river Motter, 8 miles W. of Haguenau.

Pagen, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Pagestreet, Middl. E. of Edgworth. Pagham, Suffex, SW. of Arundel. Pagleham, Essex, E. of Stambidge. Pagmore, Yorks. a mile from Barnesley.

PAGO, an island of Dalmatia, in the Adriatic, 20 miles long and 6 wide. It was, till of late, subject to the Venerians. The air is cold and the soil barren; but it is well-peopled, and contains salt-works. Lat. 44. 42. N.

Paggrave, Magna and Parva, Norfolk, near Swaffham. Pailington, Warwick. N. of Harborough.

PAINBOEUF, a town in the depart. of Lower Loire, situated at the mouth of the river Loire. It is a very considerable sea-port, whence all the ships belonging to Nantes take their departure, and where they anchor on their arrival; but at the beginning of this century, was only a village. It is 20 miles W. of Nantes.

Painkill, Dorset. Pains, Suffex, between Cuckfield and Ditchling. Pain's Castle, Radnorsh. Painsford, Devonsh. in Alhprington parish. Pain's-Hill, Surry, near Cobham. Painsley, Staff. NW. of Leigh.

PAINSWICK, a town of Gloucestershire, has a considerable manufacture of broad cloths for the army, and for the India and Turkey trade; and hence is brought a stone, remarkable for its beauty and neatness, for the pavement of floors. It is situated in a fine healthy air, on a brook which runs into the Stroud, 7 miles SE. of Gloucester, and 101 W. by N. of London. Market on Tuesday.

PAISLEY, a large manufacturing town of Renfrewshire, in Scotland. It contains several several broad and regular streets, which have names descriptive of the various employments of the inhabitants; such as Silk-Street, Cotton-Street, Lawn-Street, Gauze-Street, Inkle-Street, &c. in which are many good houses. The principal manufactures are in silk and thread gauze, which are so neat and beautiful, that they have been displayed at court in the birthday dresses. The extensive cotton-works here employ, not only numbers of women, but even of very young girls. Some of the principal manufacturers, who have become opulent, have built elegant houses for their residence; and an idea of their great success may be formed from this circumstance, that they have been known to pay to the people they employ 500*l.* a week. "A fertile country," observes a late writer, "cheap labour, a sober and steady people, abundance of coal, and water-carriage, were circumstances that first invited English manufacturers to settle in this country; and the justness of their views have been fully evinced by the most prosperous success." At present the silk branch, which for some years past out-did that of Spitalfields, is on the decline, but the muslin has come in its room, and the thread manufacture has considerably increased. Here are also considerable tan-works, some soap and candle-works, a manufacture of ribbons, and another of inkle or tape. According to a calculation made in 1784, the manufactures of Paisley, in silk-gauze, lawn, linen-gauze, and white sewing thread, amounted to the value of 579,185*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* and 26,484 persons were employed in carrying them on. The magnificent abbey for which Paisley was once noted, is now partly in ruins; but there is a chapel here entire, which is famous for a surprising echo. The flap of a door produces the effect of thunder; and a melodious tune delights the ear with the idea of celestial harmony. Paisley is supposed to contain about one-third of the number of the inhabitants of Glasgow; but it stands on nearly as much ground. It is situated on the river Cart, 6 miles W. of that city.

PAITA, St. MICHAEL DE, a town of Quito, in S. America, founded by Francis Pizarro, in 1531, and containing about 200 families. The bay or harbour is, a very secure anchoring place, the best, indeed, on the coast, and is frequented by all vessels coming from the north, which are bound to Callao. Passengers also, from Acapulco or Panama, disembark here, and travel by land to Lima, here being a tolerably good road, parallel to the coast, with a number of towns and villages for the accommodation of travellers. Here is a small fort, surrounded with a brick wall, and mounted with 8 pieces of cannon, but neither ditch nor outwork. Paita has been often taken by the English, and particularly by Commodore Anson, in 1741, who plundered and burnt the town, because the governor refused to ransom it Lat. 6. 12. S. lon. 81. 19 W.

PALACIOS, a town of Leon.

Pakefield, Suffolk, near the sea, S. of Leostoff. Pakenham, Suffolk, 3 miles from Bury. Pakenhill, Gloucestersh. in the parish of Stroud. Pakington, Worcestershire, near Bromsgrove.

PALAIS, LE, a town of France, capital of Belleisle, situated on the coast. It contains about 500 houses. Lat. 47. 18. N. lon. 3. 2. W.

PALAIS, ST. a town in the dept. of the Lower Pyrenees, giving name to a mountainous country, which produces scarcely any thing but millet, oats, and fruits. This town and district, with those of St. Pied de Port, forms nearly the whole of the late province of Lower Navarre, annexed to France by Henry IV. who held it in right of his mother, Jeanne d'Albret. The town of St. Palais is seated on the river Bidouse, 15 miles SSE. of Bayonne.

PALAMBAM, a town and kingdom on the E. part of Java, situated on a river of the same name, about 50 miles from the sea. The Dutch, who have a fort here, purchase large quantities of pepper at a low price. Lat. 2. 35. S.

PALAMCOTTA, or TINEVELLEY, a town and province in the Carnatic, 74 miles SSW. of Madurai.

PALAMOS, a sea-port of Catalonia.

PALANKA, a town of Bulgaria; a town of Bessarabia, situated on the Dniester, and a castle of Hungary, 22 miles NE. of Gran.

PALATINATE OF THE RHINE, or LOWER PALATINATE, an electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, adjoining France, the electorate of Mentz, the bishopric of Worms, the duchy of Wurtemberg, &c. Its greatest extent is about 80 miles, and the principal rivers are the Rhine and the Neckar. It is a very fertile country, though rather mountainous, abounding with fine vineyards, fields, forests, meadows, gardens, rivers, and lakes. Heidelberg is the principal town, but Mannheim is the electoral residence.

PATALINATE,

PALATINATE, UPPER, a part of Bavaria, bounded on the W. and NW. by Franconia, on the E. and NE. by Bohemia, and on the S. by the duchy of Neuburg and Lower Bavaria. In 1714, it was ceded, by the peace of Baden, to the Elector of Bavaria. Amberg is the capital.

Palatine Town, in Carlow, Leinster, so called from a colony of industrious people, who were driven from their native country, by the persecuting arms of Lewis XIV. of France.

PALAZZUOLO, a town in the Bressan, Italy; and a town in the Val di Noto, Sicily.

PALENCIA, a town of Leon.

PALERMO, anciently PANORMUS, a rich and beautiful city of Sicily, in the Val di-Mazara; the seat of the viceroy, and capital of the island. It is situated near the extremity of a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by high and rocky mountains; but the country that lies between the city and these mountains, is one of the richest and most pleasant spots in the world; the whole appearing a magnificent garden, filled with fruit-trees of every species, particularly oranges, lemons, and Indian figs, and watered by clear fountains and rivulets, that form a variety of windings through this charming plain. The inhabitants are estimated by Mr. Brydone, at 150,000. Two great streets intersect each other in the centre of the city, where they form a handsome square, called the Ottangalo, adorned with elegant uniform buildings. From the centre of this square is seen the whole of these noble streets, and the four great gates of the city which terminate them. These gates are each at the distance of about half a mile, the diameter of the city being no more than a mile. They are elegant pieces of architecture, richly adorned; particularly the Porta Nuova, and the Porta Felice, terminating the great street called the Corso, that runs from SW. and NE. The Porta Felice opens to the Marino, a beautiful walk, that constitutes one of the great pleasures of the noblesse of Palermo. It has on one side the wall of the city, and on the other the sea, whence there is always an agreeable breeze. In the centre of the Marino is an elegant kind of temple, which, in the summer, is made use of as an orchestra. The concert does not begin till the clock strikes midnight; the flambeaux are extinguished at the Porta Felice, where the servants wait for the return of the carriages; the company therefore generally continue an hour or two in darkness, except when it is moonlight. The concert finishes about two in the morning. Many of the churches of Palermo are very rich and magnificent. The cathedral is a large, ancient, Gothic structure, supported within by 80 columns of oriental granite, and divided into a great number of chapels, some of which are extremely rich, particularly that of St. Rosalia, the patroness of Palermo, who is held in great veneration. The monuments of their Norman kings, several of whom are buried here, as also of the emperors Henry V. and Frederic II, are of the most beautiful porphyry, some of them near 700 years old. The church of the late Jesuits is equal in magnificence to most of the structures in Italy. The Chiesa-del-Palazzo is entirely encrusted over with ancient mosaic, and the vaulted roof is all of the same. "But it is endless," says Mr. Brydone, "to talk of churches, here are upward of 300." Palermo is crowded with statues of sovereigns and tutelar saints, placed in small courts and squares upon pedestals of colossal proportion and tasteless form. In the streets the women hide their heads in black veils; a very ancient mode of dress in this island. The city is well lighted with reverberating lamps, and, in wet weather, moveable wooden bridges are provided for crossing the kennels, which then become rapid torrents. The harbour is very dangerously open to the swell and sea from the NE. quarter, and, even at the anchoring place, ships lie in peril whenever a westerly wind blows, as it rushes with great impetuosity through the valley of Colli between the mountains. Properly speaking, Palermo has two harbours; one made in the year 1405, which serves for barks, and the other, finished in 1590, capable of receiving vessels of war, at the entrance of which a light is fixed. Indeed this city has suffered greatly at different periods, by earthquakes or inundations. About a mile from Palermo is a celebrated convent of Capuchins, in which is a vault made use of as a receptacle for the dead. It consists of four wide passages, each about 40 feet in length, into which the light is admitted by windows at the ends. Along the sides of these are niches, in which the bodies are set upright, clothed in coarse garments, with their heads, arms, and feet bare. They are prepared for this situation by broiling them 6 or 7 months upon a gridiron, over a slow fire, till all the fat and moisture are consumed. The skin, which looks like pale-coloured leather, remains entire, and the character of the countenance, countenance is in some degree preserved. Except the bodies of two reputed saints, one of which had been there 150 years, and the other 100, they are all of modern date, as appears by an inscription on a small piece of pasteboard hung to the arms of every corpse, signifying the name of the person, and the time of his decease. In some of the higher niches they are laid out at full length, and at the top are children of 6 or 7 years of age. On the floors are handsome trunks, containing the bodies of persons of distinction, the keys of which are kept by the relations. Here are some manufactures of silk and stuffs, and they export in good years about 40,000 bales of raw silk. Palermo is the see of an archbishop, and contains a university. It is seated on the NW. side of the island, at the bottom of the bay of the same name, 162 miles S. by W. of Naples, and 235 S. by E. of Rome. Lat. 38. 15. N. lon. 18. 23. E.

PALESTINE, a country of Turkey in Asia, so called from the Philistines, who inhabited its sea-coast. It is also called Judea, from the Patriarch Judah; the Land of Canaan, and the Promised Land. From its having been the scene of the birth, ministry, and death of Jesus, it has been superstitiously denominated the Holy Land. It is divided from Syria on the N. by Mount Libanus, or Lebanon; from Arabia Deserta on the E. by the mountains of Seir; and it has the deserts of Arabia Petraea on the S. and the Mediterranean on the W. In length it is about 170 miles, but its breadth varies from 58 to 22. It is, in general, a fertile country, abounding, where cultivated, with corn, wine, oil, pulse, fruits, silk, cotton, tobacco, drugs, and aromatic herbs; and it might supply the neighbouring country with all these, as it anciently did, were the present inhabitants equally industrious. The fields and woods abound with flowers of every species. The parts about Jerusalem, its capital, are the most mountainous and rocky; but they feed numerous herds and flocks, and yield plenty of honey, with excellent wine and oil; and the valleys produce large crops of corn. The climate is exceedingly good.

PALESTRINA, anciently PRÆNESTE, a town of Italy, in the Compagna-di-Roma, near which formerly stood a temple dedicated to Fortune, and another to Hercules.

PALESTRINA, one of the largest and most populous of the islands called the Lagunes, near Venice.

Palgrave, Suff. near Diss in Norfolk.

PALICATA, a sea-port on the coast of Coromandel, where the Dutch have a factory. It is 25 miles N. of Madras.

Pallas-Inn, in King's County, Leinster.

Palling, Norfolk, on the coast, NE. of Hickling. Pallington, Dorsetsh. a hamlet of Affpiddle.

Pallis, in Limerick, Munster.

PALLISER ISLANDS, a group of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, the largest of which is about 15 miles long, and 9 broad. Lat. 15 to 16. S. lon. 146 to 147. W.

PALMA, formerly called CAPRARIA, from the great number of goats bred here, one of the Canary Islands, about 60 miles in circumference. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, sugar-canes, and fruits, and here are quadrupeds and birds of all kinds. It has a handsome town of the same name, with a safe harbour, much frequented by shipping of different nations for wines, these being reckoned equal to Malmsey; 12,000 pipes, at least, are exported annually to the W. Indies, and elsewhere. Lat. 28. 36. N. lon. 18. W.

PALMA NUOVA, a town of Friuli, seated on a canal which communicates with the Lizenzo, 55 miles NE. of Venice.

PALMA, a town of Portuguese Estramadura, seated on the river Cadaon, 15 miles E. of Setuval.

PALMA, a town of Cordova, in Spain.

PALMA, a town of Lavoura; and a town of Calabria Ultra; both in Naples.

PALMA, a sea-port of Mazara, Sicily.

PALMA DI SOLO, a seaport town of Sardinia, on the S. coast.

PALMAS, one of the Philippine Islands, SE. of Mindanao.

PALMAS, CAPE, a promontory of Guinea, on the Grain Coast. Lat. 4. 26. N. lon. 5. 34. W.

PALMAS, or CIVIDAD DE LAS PALMAS, a large seaport town in the Island of Canary, capital of that and of all the islands, with a good harbour, defended by a citadel. The inhabitants, who are, in general, rich, are about 120,000 in number.

PALMELA, a town of Portuguese Estramadura, 6 miles N. of Setuval.

Palmer's Bay, Kent, near the North Foreland. Palmer's Green, Middlesex, near Southgate.

PALMERSTON'S ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1774, and visited by him in his last voyage. It consists of a group of small

Small islands, about 10 in number, connected by a reef of coral rocks, and lying in a circular direction. This place admits of no anchorage, nor are there any inhabitants on it, though it abounds with cocoa-nuts, scurvy-grass and the wharratree. It does not exceed a mile in circumference, and is not elevated more than 3 feet above the level of the sea. It consists entirely of a coral sand, with a small mixture of blackish mould, which appeared to be produced from decayed vegetables. "Notwithstanding this poor soil," says Captain Cook, "it is covered with a variety of trees and bushes. At one part of the reef, which looks into, or bounds the lake that is within, there was a large bed of coral, almost even with the surface, which afforded, perhaps, one of the most enchanting prospects that nature has any where produced. Its base was fixed to the shore, but reached so far in, that it could not be seen; so that it seemed to be suspended in the water, which deepened so suddenly, that at the distance of a few yards, there might be 7 or 8 fathoms. The sea was at this time quite unruffled; and the sun, shining bright, exposed the various sorts of coral in the most beautiful order; some parts branching into the water with great luxuriance, others lying collected in round balls, and in various other figures; all which were greatly heightened by spangles of the richest colours, that glowed from a number of large clams, which were every where interspersed. But the appearance of these was still inferior to that of the multitude of fishes, that glided gently along, seemingly with the most perfect security. The colours of the different sorts were the most beautiful that can be imagined; the yellow, blue, red, black, &c. far exceeding any thing that art can produce. Their various forms, also, contributed to increase the richness of this submarine grotto, which could not be surveyed without a pleasing transport, mixed, however, with regret, that a work so stupendously elegant, should be concealed in a place where mankind could seldom have an opportunity of rendering the praises justly due to so enchanting a scene." With respect to the animal creation, the most singular that Captain Cook observed, were some large eels, beautifully spotted, which, when followed, would raise themselves out of the water, and endeavour, with an open mouth, to bite their pursuers. There was also a brown spotted rock fish, about the size of a haddock, so tame, that instead of swimming away, it would remain fixed, and gaze at them. Had they been in want, a sufficient supply might have been had; for thousands of the clams already mentioned, stuck upon the reef, some of which weighed 2 or 3 pounds. Lat. 18. 8. S. lon. 162. 57. W.

Palmerstown, in Dublin, Leinster, 3 miles from the metropolis.

PALMYRA, formerly a magnificent city of Syria, capital of a kingdom, of which Zenobia was queen, who held it out a long time against the Romans, but was at length taken captive by the Emperor Aurelian, and led in triumph through the streets of Rome. The stupendous ruins of this city were visited by Messrs. Wood and Dawkins, in 1751; and a splendid account of them, illustrated by plates, was published by Mr. Wood, in 1753. This place, called by the Arabs, Tadmor in the Desert, appears to have been built originally by Solomon, but the architecture of its admired remains is probably Grecian, coeval with the time of the Seleucidæ. The present inhabitants, consisting of 30 or 40 families, have erected their mud cottages within the spacious court of a magnificent temple of the sun. Palmyra is situated in the midst of a large sandy plain, surrounded on 3 sides by a long chain of mountains, 90 miles E. of Damascus. Lat. 33. 20. N. lon. 38. 50. E.

PALNAUD, a district of Hindoostan, included in the Carnatic, though situated between Golconda and the Guntoor Circar, S. of the river Kistna. It is about 70 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. Zimerycotta is the capital.

PALOS, a town of Andalusia, with a tolerable tide harbour, at the mouth of Rio Tinto. Columbus set sail from here on his first adventurous voyage, in 1492.

PALOS CAPE, a promontory of Murcia, S. of the town of Palos, and 18 miles E. of Carthagera.

PALOTTA, a town of Lower Hungary.

PALTA, or JAMDRÖ, a famous lake of Thibet, lying about 24 miles to the S. of Lassa. According to the Lama's map, it is 105 miles in circumference; and in the middle of it is one large island. On the W. shore of this island, or rather congeries of islands, is a monastery, and the seat of the Lamissa Tarcepamo, or the Great Regenerate, in whom the Thibetians think that a divine spirit is regenerated, as in the Great Lama. The word Lama signifies a priest, or minister of religion, and Lamissa is the the feminine of Lama. This lake is 12 miles S. of the river Burrampooter, or Sanpoo.

Palterton, Derbyshire, S. of Bolsover.
Paltons, Hants, NE. of the New-Forest.

PALUDA, a town of Erzerum, seated near the Euphrates, and inhabited by Mahometans and Christians. The prince is, in some respects, independent of the Grand Signior.

Pamber, Hampsh. N. of Basingstoke.
Pamel-Bridge, Suffex, near Winchelsea.

PAMIERS, a town in the dept of Arriege, seated on the river Arriege, 8 miles NNW. of Foix.

Pamington, Gloucester, near Tewkesbury.

PAMPANGAN, a town and extensive province of Lucon, one of the Manilla islands, situated on the E. coast in lat. 15. 5. N.

PAMPELLONNE, a town in the department of Tarn, 12 miles N. of Alby.

PAMPELUNA, a town of Spain, capital of Upper Navarre. Its squares are handsome and adorned with shops full of rich merchandise. It is seated on the river Arga, 42 miles S. of Bayonne. and 172 NNE. of Madrid. Lat. 42. 47. N. lon. 1. 35. W.

PAMPELUNA, a town of S. America, in New Granada, famous for its mines of gold, and numerous flocks of sheep. It is 200 miles S. of Maricaibo, and 300 NE. of Popayan. Lat. 6. 30. N. lon. 70. 30. W.

Pamphil, Dorsetshire, near Winborn.
Pampisford, Cambridgeshire, near Whittleford.
Pampocalia, Yorks. SW. of Wetherby. Pan, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

PAN, or PAHAN, a sea-port on the E. coast of Malacca, capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is remarkable for a great number of elephants, and for the plenty of pepper it produces. Lat. 3. 15. N.

PANAMA, a city of S. America capital of a jurisdiction of the same name, with straight and broad streets, and elegant public buildings. The merchandise of Chili and Peru is brought to this place, particularly the gold and silver, and all the commodities brought up the river Chagre. The ships unload at a small island, 3 miles from this place, because the water is so shallow as not to admit them to come nearer. Old Panama was burnt by Captain Morgan, a buccaneer, in 1670, and the present town has been built 4 miles distant from it, in a more advantageous situation. The province contains 3 cities, 12 villages, and a great number of rancherias, or assemblages of Indian huts. Here are also several gold mines, but they are neglected for the sake of the pearl fishery on the coast. It stands on a bay of the same name. Lat. 8. 48. N. lon. 80. 15. W.

PANARIA, one of the Lipari Islands, barren, and very inconsiderable being, only 5 miles in circumference. It is 3 miles NNE. of Lipari, and 30 N. of Sicily.

PANAY, an island of the Philippines, of a triangular form, lying E. of Paragua. It is 180 miles in circumference, and is the most populous and fertile of them all. It is watered by a great number of rivers and brooks, and produces vast quantities of rice. The number of Indians tributary to the Spaniards is about 17,000.

Panborough, Somersetshire, W. of Wells.
Pancras, a village of Middlesex, a little to the NW. of London. The burying ground here is remarkable for being the principal place of interment for the Romanists. At a public house near it, there is a medicinal spring. Here is an hospital for inoculation, to which is now added the small-pox hospital formerly at Clerkenwell. Here also is the Veterinary College established in 1791, for the improvement of farriery, and the treatment of cattle in general. The noble stables and anatomical theatre are finished, but the present college is only a temporary building.

Pancras-Wick, Devonshire, near Bradworthy. Pansfield, Essex, near Bocking and Braintree.

PANGO, a town and district of Congo, in Africa, on the river Barbela.

Pangborn, Berkshire, by the Thames, NW. of Reading. Pangden, Suffex, SW. of Ditchling.

PANJAB, a country of Hindoostan, being that which is watered by the 5 eastern branches of the Indus. It was the scene of Alexander's last campaign, and the ne plus ultra of his conquests. It forms a square of about 250 miles, and includes the whole foubah of Lahore, and a great part of Moulton Proper. To the lower part of Moulton it is flat and marshy, and inundated, like Bengal, by the periodical rains which fall during our summer.

Pannal, Yorks. near Knaresborough.
Pannanach-Wells, a village of Aberdeenshire, situated a little below the waterfall, called the Lin of Dee, in the valley of Glenmuick. It is noted for its mineral waters, which are of a diuretic quality.

PANNIPUT, a town of Delhi, in Hindoostan. In a plain near this town, a battle was fought in 1761, between an army of 200,000 Mahrattas, and Abdallah, king of Candahar, at the head of 150,000 Mahometans, when the former were totally defeated. They lost the flower of their army, with their best generals, and the number of prisoners taken was almost incredible. From that period, the power of the Mahrattas has been sensibly on the decline. Panniput is 50 miles NW. of Delhi.

Pansanger, 2 miles NW. of Hertford. Panston, Northumberland, S. of Learmouth. Pant, a river in Essex, which falls into Blackwater Bay.

PANTALARIA, an island in the Mediterranean, between Sicily and the coast of Tunis, about 25 miles in circumference, and containing 3000 inhabitants. It abounds in cotton, fruits, wine, capers, olives, and figs; but the inhabitants import their corn from Sicily. It belongs to the king of Naples. Lat. 36. 55. N. lon. 12. 31. E.

Panteage, Monmouths. N. of Pontipool. Panley, Gloucestershire, NE. of Newent. Panton, Lincolns. near Ancaster.

PANUCO, a town, province, and river of Mexico, with a bishop's see. Here are veins of gold, and salt-works, which are the principal riches of the inhabitants. It is seated near the Gulf of Mexico, in lat. 23. 0. N. lon. 98. 9. W.

Panxford, Norfolk, between Norwich and South Walsham.

PA-00M, a small island of the New Hebrides, S. of Mallicollo.

PAPA, a town of Hungary, 45 miles W. of Buda.

Papacastle, Cumberland, a hamlet of Bridekirk. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence, within a mile of Cockermouth; and the Derwent meanders beautifully through the intervening vale.

PAPOUL, ST. a town in the dept. of Aude, seated on the river Lembe, 15 miles WNW. of Carcassone.

PAPPENHEIM, a town and county of Aichtatt, Franconia.

Papplewick, Nottingham. near Newsted. Here are some large cotton-mills. Papworth, Agnes and Evered, 11 miles W. of Cambridge. Papworth, Nether, Huntingdonshire, between Great Paxton and Hilton.

PARA, or BELEM, a town, river, and jurisdiction in Brasil, on the N. side of the river Orellana. This government comprehends that part of Guiana which belongs to the Portuguese, and extends 600 miles from E. to W. and 200 from N. to S. Lat. 1. 30. S.

PARACLETE, THE. See QUINCEY.

Paracomb, Devonshire, near Comb-Martin.

PARAGUA, the most westerly of the Philippine Islands, 180 miles in length, and 40 in breadth. The Spaniards have a fort here, but the king is said to be tributary to Borneo.

PARAGUAY, a large country of S. America, in the government of Buenos Ayres. It contains 6 provinces; namely, Paraguay Proper, Parana, Guaria, Uruguay, Tucuman, and La Plata, from which the whole country is also called La Plata, and has numerous lakes and rivers. Of the latter, the 3 principal are the Paraguay, Uruguay, and Parana, the united streams of which form the celebrated Rio de-la-Plata. These rivers annually overflow their banks; and, on their recess, leave them enriched by a slime, that renders the soil extremely fertile. This vast country is far from being wholly subdued, or planted by the Spaniards; many parts being still unknown to them, as well as to every other European nation. The principal province of which we have any knowledge is that which is called La Plata, toward the mouth of the river of that name. This province, with all the adjacent parts, is one continued plain for several hundred miles; extremely fertile, and producing cotton in great abundance, tobacco, and the valuable herb called Paraguay, which is peculiar to this country, and the infusion of which is drunk in all the Spanish provinces of S. America, instead of tea. They have also a variety of fruits, and very rich pastures, or plains, full of horses, mules, black cattle, and herds of sheep; but the country has but few woods or forests. The air is remarkably sweet and serene. The Spaniards discovered this country, by sailing up the Rio-de-la-Plata in 1515, and founded the town of Buenos Ayres, on the S. side of the river. In 1580 the Jesuits were admitted into these fertile regions, where they afterwards founded, at the commencement of the 17th century, and with the permission of Philip III. the famous missions of Paraguay; which were a number of colonies, each governed by two Jesuits, one of whom was rector, and the other his curate. They undertook not only to make proselytes to the church, but to open a new source of wealth to the mother country. To this end they represented, that they ought to be independent of the Spanish governors; and that as the vices of the Europeans might contaminate their new converts, and destroy the great objects of their missions, no other Spaniards should be permitted to enter the country. To these terms the court agreed; they consenting to a certain capitation tax on the natives, and to some other stipulations in favour of the crown. In process of time, the Jesuits, by the most wonderful address and persevering patience, and without the least degree of force, acquired the most absolute dominion, both ecclesiastical and civil, over the natives, whom they even instructed in military discipline. In 1757, the king of Spain exchanged the colonies on the E. shore of the river Uruguay for the Portuguese colony of St. Sacramento, which caused that river to become the boundary of the respective possessions of the two crowns. This produced an insurrection of the Indians, who were defeated by the Spanish governor, with the loss of 2000 of them killed. In 1767, the court expelled the Jesuits from S. America, and the natives, in course, were put upon the same footing with the other Indians of the Spanish part of that vast continent.

PARAIBA, a commercial town and jurisdiction of Brasil, on the S. bank of a river of the same name, navigable for vessels loaded with 6 or 700 hogsheads of sugar, and which runs into the Atlantic, about 20 miles below the town. The soil is pretty fertile, producing sugar-canes, cattle, tobacco, cotton, and Brasil wood, &c. The town of Paraiba is about 60 miles N. of Fermambuco.

PARAMARIBO, the principal town, and seat of government, in the province of Surinam, in S. America. It is a very flourishing and lively place, every thing that can indicate wealth and affluence being observable here. The carriages and dress of the richer inhabitants are truly magnificent; silk embroidery, Genoa velvets, and gold and silver lace, being daily worn, and even the masters of trading shops appear in buttons and buckles of solid gold. The streets are generally crowded with planters, sailors, soldiers, Jews, Indians, and negroes; while the river, which has a very noble appearance, is covered with barges, canoes, &c. constantly passing and repassing, often accompanied with bands of music; the shipping also, in the road, adorned with their different flags, guns firing, &c. not to mention the many groups of boys and girls, playing in the water, altogether form a truly pleasing appearance, and add not a little to the gaiety and variety of objects which so agreeably arrest the attention of a curious stranger. The ladies are uncommonly elegant in their dress, and keep their houses and furniture extremely clean. They use the finest linen, exquisitely well washed with Castilian soap, which can only be resembled to mountain snow; and which, in comparison, would make the best bleached linen in Europe, appear like canvas. The town is very extensive, and remarkably clean, and the houses (which are about 1400 in number) are extremely well built. All the streets are perfectly straight, and some of them, at least, a mile long; they are all paved, or laid with sand and shells mixed, which bind together and grow hard, partly resembling the walks in a garden or pleasure-ground. Rows of orange trees, lemons, shadocks, and tamarinds, are planted on each side, at the distance of 10 or 12 feet from the houses, and which, in the months of May and June, diffuse a most delicious fragrance. The warehouses, for the storing of goods, and the gardens that adjoin the houses, include more space than is usually allowed in towns, which impresses the spectator with an idea that he is in a fine, extensive village. Lat. 5. 48. N. Lon. 55. 11. W.

PARANA, a province of Paraguay, so named from a large river, which rises in about lat. 18. S. and uniting with the Paraguay, in lat. 28. S. and afterwards with the Uruguay, forms the Rio-de-la-Plata.

Parbold, Lancashire, NW. of Wigan.
Parcaissick, Monmouth. N. of Chepstow.

PARCHIM, a town of Mecklenburgh.

PARDO, a royal palace near Madrid.

Pardeshaw, or Pardsey, Cumberland, a hamlet of Dean, near the Lake of Lowther, 4 miles from Cockermouth.

PARENZO, a sea-port of the late Venetian Istria.

PARGA, a sea-port of the late Venetian Albania, opposite the Island of Corfu, and 26 miles W. of Arta. It is inhabited by Greeks and Albanese, and is seated on a rock.

Parham, Suffolk, on the river Ore, near Framlingham. Parham, Sussex, near Amberley.

PARIA, or NEW ANDALUSIA, a country of Terra Firma, E. of Cumana, and NE. of the river Orinoko. Between the continent and the island of Trinidad, is a large bay, called the Gulph of Paria.

PARIA, a district of La Plata, in S. America, abounding in all kinds of cattle.

PARILLA,

PARILLA, or SANTA PARILLA, a town of Pero, in the audience of Lima, 50 miles S. of Truxillo.

PARIS, the capital of France, one of the largest, finest, and most populous cities of Europe. The river Seine, which crosses it, forms 3 small islands, called the Island of Louviers, the Notre Dame, and the Palace, which last is the ancient city of Paris. The island of the Palace takes its name from a building which was formerly the residence of the kings, and afterwards was resigned to the parliament. Clovis I. after the defeat of Alaric, made Paris the capital of his kingdom. Its circuit was much extended by Philip Augustus. It was greatly embellished by Francis I. and his successors. The inhabitants are computed to be 800,000. It is 2 leagues in diameter, and 6 in circumference, including the suburbs. It is supposed to contain, 875 streets, and 24,000 houses, among which are many five, six, and even seven stories. The rivers Yonne, Marne, and Oise, by their junction with the Seine, convey to Paris the commodities of Burgundy, Champagne, and Picardy; and this last river furnishes it with the riches of Normandy, and the sea, which is at the distance of 42 leagues. By means of the Loire, the Allier, and the canals of Orleans and Briare, and by the Vienne, it has communications with the other parts of the country. There are nine principal bridges in Paris, two of which occupy the whole breadth of the Seine; namely, the Pont Neuf and ci-devant Pont Royal; to which may be added the unfinished ci-devant Pont Royal; to which may be added the unfinished ci-devant Pont de Lewis XVI. begun in 1787. The Pont Neuf, the finest and most frequented of all the bridges, is 1020 feet long, by 72 broad, and has 12 arches; 7 of which are on the side of the Louvre, and 5 on the side of the street Dauphine. In the second arch of this bridge, on the side of the Louvre, is the Chateau de la Samaritaine (the Woman of Samaria) a small timber building of 3 stories, constructed, in 1712, on piles, and lately repaired. In the inside is a pump, which raises the water of the river, to distribute it by pipes to the Louvre, the Tuileries, &c. The other bridges are Pont St. Michel, Pont au-Change, le Petit-Pont, Pont-Notre-Dame, Pont-de-la-Tournelle, Pont-Marie, and the Pont Rouge. This last, which is a timber-bridge, painted red, is the point of communication between the Isle-du-Palais and Isle St. Lewis. The public fountains are very numerous, and on some of them is displayed very elegant sculpture. The public places, squares, &c. are also numerous and elegant. The finest are the Place-Dauphin, of a triangular form, built, and so named, by Henry IV. in memory of the birth of Lewis XIII.; the Place Royale, in which was the equestrian statue of Lewis XIII. in bronze; the Place-Vendome, a square with the angles truncated, in which was the equestrian statue, in bronze, of Lewis XIV. in a Roman habit; the Place-des-Victoires, of a circular form, in which was a statue of the same king, crowned by the heathen goddess Victory, with this inscription, Viro Immortali; and the Place-de-Lewis XV. of an octagon form, in which was an equestrian statue, in bronze, of that monarch. This square, which is now called the Place-de-la-Revolution, was the fatal scene of the execution of the unfortunate Lewis XVI. and afterward of his unhappy consort, Marie Antoinette, the former on the 21st of January, and the latter on the 16th of October, 1793. There are 3 triumphal arches, erected to Lewis XIV. and known by the names of Porte St. Bernard, Porte St. Denis, and Porte St. Martin. The most interesting of the manufactures of Paris is that of the Gob-lins (so called from a family of celebrated dyers, settled in this city in 1540) in which tapestries are made after the pictures of the greatest masters, to such perfection, that one representing Lewis XV. a whole length, framed, and placed among the masterpieces of painting, was taken, for many days, by multitudes of visitors, for a finished piece. The manufacture of plate-glass likewise merits attention. The cathedral of Notre-Dame, a Gothic structure, is one of the largest in Europe, and contains 45 chapels. Next to the cathedral, the most distinguished churches were St. Sulpice, St. Eustache, St. Gervais, St. Etienne-du-Mont, the old one of St. Genevieve, the new one of St. Genevieve (now called the Pantheon), those of St. Severin, St. Roch, and Val-de-Grace. The finest college in Paris was that of the Four Nations, called also Mazarin, from the name of the cardinal, its founder. There were lately 6 academies in Paris; namely, the French academy, founded by the cardinal Richelieu; that of Inscriptions and Belles Letters, by Lewis XIV.; that of the Sciences; and those of Painting and Sculpture; Architecture; and Chir-surgery. Among the public libraries, that that lately called the king's, holds the first rank, in respect both to the extent of the buildings, and the number of the volumes. The other libraries are those of St. Genevieve, the College of Mazarin, St. Victor, of the Doctrinaires, of the Advocates, and of the Faculty of Medicine. That of St. Germain-des-Prés, one of the richest in France, containing between 15 and 20,000 manuscripts, and near 100,000 volumes, is open every day to men of letters. The Royal (now National) Observatory is built of freestone, as neither iron nor wood form any part of the erection. The Botanical Garden is extensive. The four principal palaces are the Louvre, the Tuileries, the Palais-Royal, now le Palais d'Egalité, and the Luxemburg. The Louvre is distinguished into the Old and New. The Old Louvre was begun by Francis I. in 1528; and the grand gallery, 1362 feet long and 30 broad, which joins it to the Tuileries, was begun under Charles IX. and finished by Lewis XIV. who likewise built, in 1665, the New Louvre. But it is still an unfinished structure. In some of the apartments, the ancient academies, viz. the French Academy, for the improvement of the French language; the Royal Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres; the Royal Academy of Sciences; and the Royal Academy of Paintings and Sculpture; have held their sittings; and in others are the workshops and lodging-rooms of artists. The Tuileries, begun in 1564, by Catharine of Medicis, continued by Henry IV. and completed by Lewis XIV. takes its name from its situation in a place in which were formerly many tile-kilns (tuileries) which, for three or four centuries, furnished the greatest part of the tiles used in Paris. The riding-house, belonging to it, is the place chosen by the national assembly for their sittings, when they removed from Versailles in 1789. The garden of the Tuileries, in front of the palace, and on the banks of the Seine, is unquestionably the finest public walk in Paris. The Palais Royal, in the interior, has been recently embellished with many beautiful buildings, with shops, coffee-houses, and a garden, which render it like a perpetual fair, and one of the most pleasing walks in the city. The gardens of the palace of Luxemburg also form a fine promenade. The Hotel-des-Invalides, for the wounded and superannuated soldiery, is a magnificent structure, built by Lewis XIV.; as is the Military School, in the Champ-de-Mars, which was founded by Lewis XV. Here are also grand theatres. The Monnaie, or Mint, is an elegant building, situated on that side of the Seine, which is opposite the Louvre. The Hotel-de-Ville, or Guildhall of the city, is an ancient structure, in the Place-de-Greve, which was heretofore the common place of execution. Before the revolution, Paris was the see of an archbishop, and contained 51 parish churches, 21 parochial, 17 collegiate churches; among which were 13 chapters, 40 chapels, 3 abbeyes, 32 priories, and 50 convents for men, ecclesiastical and secular; 7 abbeyes, 6 priories, and 53 convents for women; 12 seminaries, and 16 hospitals, 6 of which were appropriated to deserted children. Paris forms, with a small district round it, one of the departments of France, and is 245 miles SE. of London, 625 NW. of Vienna, and 630 NE. of Madrid. Lat. 48. 50. N. lon. 2. 25. E.

Park, Dorsetsh. in the parish of Broad Windsor. Park, Isle of Wight, in W. Medina. Park, Staffordsh. near Oswestry. Park, Westmorl. PARMA, an ancient, populous, and handsome town of Italy, capital of the duchy duchy of the same name, with a citadel and a university. It has a magnificent cathedral, and the largest and most beautiful opera-house in Italy, which will contain 12,000 spectators. The streets are straight and broad, and the houses well-built, and, for the most part, painted. The principal streets meet in the centre, where they form a handsome square. The dome, and the church of St. John, are painted by the famous Correggio, who was a native of this place. Don Carlos, king of the two Sicilies, carried away a library from this place to Naples, which contained 18,000 volumes, and a very valuable cabinet of curiosities, as also the rich collection of medals. In 1741, by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, were given to Don Philip, brother to Don Carlos above mentioned. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 40,000. The principal trade of the place consists in stockings, and some other articles in silk, and it has lately been celebrated for its beautiful printing, from the presses of Bodoni. It is seated on the river Parma, 64 miles SSE. of Milan. Lat. 44. 50. N. lon. 10. 30. E.

PARMA, the duchy of, a province of Italy, bounded on the N. by the Po, on the NE. by the Mantuan, on the E. by the duchy of Modena, on the S. by Tuscany and Genoa, and on the W. by Genoa and the territory of Pavia. Under this name are commonly included the duchy of Parma Proper, the duchy of Placenza, and the duchy of Guastalla. The air is very wholesome, and the inhabitants often live to a great age. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, hemp, chestnuts, and fruits; the pastures feed a great number of cattle and sheep, whose wool is excellent, and the cheese is in high estimation. Here are some considerable mines of copper and silver, and plenty of truffles. In 1845, the pope granted this duchy to his natural son, Peter Aloysius, or, Farnese, the founder of the family of Farnese. Elizabeth Farnese, the only heiress of the last duke, becoming queen of Spain, obtained Parma and Placenza for her sons, and so it was settled at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Parmsted, Kent, near Kingston.

PARNASSO, anciently PARNASSUS, a celebrated mountain in Livadia, in Greece. It has two heads, one of which was formerly famous for being consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, and the other to Bacchus. It is the highest in Greece, and from the top of it is a prospect as far as Corinth. Here also is a fine fountain, supposed to be the ancient Castalia. It is 8 miles N. of Livadia.

Parndon, Great and Little, Essex, between Nettlewell and Roydon. Parnham, Dorset. 5 miles N. of Bridport.

PAROS, an island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, about 36 miles in circumference, and containing about 1500 families. The soil is well cultivated, and the pastures feed a great number of flocks. Their trade consists in wheat, barley, wine, pulse, and calicoes; and in fine white marble also, which has long been in estimation for sculpture. Before the war of Candy, it produced a great deal of oil, but the Venetian army burnt all the olive trees. They have a great number of partridges and pigeons, which they sell very cheap. This island was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines. The famous Chronicle of Paros, at Oxford, was brought from hence in 1627, by Thomas Howard, earl of Arundel, who, in 1667, made a present of it to the university of Oxford. The inscription on it purports to have been made 264 years before the Christian era, and contains a space of above 300 years. It lies W. of Naxia.

PAROS, a town of the Archipelago, capital of the Isle of Paros; anciently it was the largest town of the Cyclades, but it is at present much reduced. The walls of the castle are built of ancient pieces of marble, most of the columns of which are placed length ways. Some of them that stand upright, support cornices of amazing size. The natives build their houses with marble, which they find ready cut to their hands. Their fields likewise are inclosed with friezes, altars, and basso-relievos; however, the English, French, and Venetians, have carried away the finest pieces they could meet with. The inhabitants are so ignorant now, that, instead of great sculptors, and skilful architects, they have nothing but carvers of mortars and salt-cellar. Paros is seated on the southern coast of the island, in lat 37. 8. N. lon. 25. 44. E.

Parr, Lancast. 3 miles from Prescott.

PARRAMATTA, a town or settlement of English convicts, in New S. Wales. It is seated at the head of the harbour of Port Jackson, 11 miles W. of Sydney-Cove, between Rose Hill and the landing-place in the creek which forms the head. In November 1791, near 1000 acres of land were either in cultivation, or cleared for that purpose. The soil, in most places, was found to be remarkably good, and to want

want cultivation only to be fit for any use, for the ground that has been the longest in cultivation bears the best crops. Lat. 53. 50. S. lon. 151. 39. E.

PARRET, a river of Somersetshire, which rises in the south part of the county, receives the Ordred, Ivel, and Thone, and enters the Bristol Channel at Bridgewater-Bay. The tide rushes up this river with prodigious velocity and roaring.

Parret, North and South, near Crewkern and the source of the Parret. Parret, South, Dorset. near Beminster. Parrocks, Kent, in Gravelfend parish. Parrys, Essex, near North Weald. Parsonby, Cumb. in the parish of Plumbland, near Aspatria. Parson Drove, Camb. near Wisbeach. Parson's Green, Middl. in Fulham parish. Parson's-Street, Middlesex, near Hendon.

Parteen, in Clare, Munster, pleasantly seated on the Shannon.

PARTENKIRCH, a town of Freysing, Bavaria.

PARTHENAY, a town in the dept. of Two Sevrés, seated on the river Thoué, 17 miles SSW. of Thouars.

Partington, Cheshire, NW. of Altringham. Partney, Lincoln. N. of Spilsby.

PARTON, a sea-port of Cumberland, with a harbour lately improved by act of parliament, so as to be capable of receiving small vessels carrying coals, &c. to Ireland. It stands near Moreby, 3 miles N. of Whitehaven.

Parton, Cumb. a hamlet in Thursby parish. Partridge-Green, Sussex, in the parish of East Grinstead. Parweek, Derbyshire, in Ashborn parish.

PARYS, a mountain, part of the mountain of Tryselwyn, in the Isle of Anglesey, famous for a copper mine, probably the largest bed of ore of that metal hitherto discovered in the world. It is not wrought in the common manner of subterraneous mines, but, like a stone quarry, open to day; and the quantities of ore raised are prodigious. The ore is poor in quality, and very abundant in sulphur. The purest part is exported raw to the smelting works at Swansea, and other places: the most impure is first calcined and deprived of most of its sulphur on the spot. Quantities of nearly pure copper are obtained from the waters lodged beneath the bed of ore, by the intervention of iron. A lead ore, rich in silver, is also found in this mountain. The wealth and population of Anglesey have received a great increase from the discovery of this copper mine, on March 2, 1768; a day which has been ever since observed as a festival by the miners. An idea of the prodigious wealth of these mines may be formed, by considering that the Macclesfield company have had at once 14,000 tons of ore upon bank, and the Rev. Edward Hughes, 30,000. The whole of the treasure is the property of Sir Nicholas Bayley and Mr. Hughes.

PAS, a town in the dept. of the Straits of Calais, 12 miles SW. of Arras.

PAS-DE CALAIS, or STRAITS OF CALAIS, one of the departments of France, containing the late districts of Pays Reconquis, and the Boulonnois, in Picardy, and part of Artois. Arras is the capital.

Pashey, Sussex, near Titchhurst.

PASSAGES, LOS, a sea-port of Spain, in the territory of Guipuscoa. The harbour is very spacious within, though narrow at the entrance, and remarkably secure from all winds. It is 3 miles E. of St. Sebastian.

Passage, Cornwall, by Helford Haven.

Passage, Gloucestersh. by Tewkesbury.

PASSAGE, in Cork, Munster, opposite Great Island, on which the town of Cove is situated. Large vessels are lightened here before they can go up to the city of Cork, the channel higher up admitting only those of 150 tons, when laden, though it stretches from shore to shore, above a mile.

PASSAGE, in Waterford, Munster, situated on the N. side of a steep hill. Here is an excellent road, where 500 sail of ships may ride safely, and which is the station of the packet-boats from Waterford to Milford-Haven.

PASSARO, a town of Noto, in Sicily.

PASSARO, CAPE, anciently called PACHINUS, the SE. point of the Island of Sicily. It is not a peninsula, as is commonly represented in the maps, but a wretched barren island, about a mile round; with a fort, to protect the neighbouring country from the incursions of the Barbary corsairs, who are often very troublesome on this part of the coast. This island and fort are separated from the rest of Sicily by a strait of about half a mile broad. Lat. 36. 35. N. lon. 15. 22. E.

PASSARO, a cape of Janna, in Greece, between the Gulfs of Armiro and Zeton.

PASSARUAN, a town and kingdom of Java, on the NE. coast, trading in cotton. It is 30 miles W. of Panarucan.

PASSAU, an ancient, handsome, and celebrated city in the circle of Bavaria. The houses are well built, and the cathedral is thought to be the finest in Germany. It is divided into four parts, namely, the town of Passau, Instadt, Itzstadt, and the quarter wherein the bishop's palace palace is seated. It is seated on the Danube, at the confluence of the rivers Inn and Ilz, 62 miles E. by S. of Ratisbon, and 135 W. of Vienna.

PASSAU, THE BISHOPRIC OF, a territory of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and lying between Lower Bavaria, Austria, and Bohemia. Its largest extent is no where above 20 miles; and it has no considerable place except Passau, the capital. The bishop is a prince of the empire, only dependent on the see of Rome.

Passelows, Essex, in Dagenham parish. Passelows, Essex, near High Ongar. Passemers, Essex, near Parndon. Passenham, or Passam, Northampton. on the Ouse, opposite to Stony Stratford.

PASSER, a river of Germany, which runs into the Adige, in the county of Tyrol.

Pass if you can, in Dublin, Leinster, N. of Fingliss. Pass if you can, and Pass of Kildare, in W. Meath, Leinster.

PASSIGNANO, a town of Perugian, seated on the N. coast of the lake.

PASTO, or ST. JUAN DE PASTO, a town of Popayan, Terra Firma, seated in a fine, fertile valley, watered by several rivers. It is 80 miles NNE. of Quito.

Paston, Norf. NE. of North Walsham, near the sea. Paston, Northamp. N. of Peterborough. Paston, Northumb. on the borders of Scotland, near Harelaw Hill.

PASTRANA, a town of New Castile.

PATAGONIA, OR LAND OF MAGELLAN, the most southern part of S. America, extending from the Atlantic to Chili, and the S. Pacific Ocean, and from the 36th to the 54th deg. of S. lat. A race of people have been discovered here, who, leading an unrestrained and savage life, are reported to be of a gigantic stature. "They are supposed," says Dr. Robertson, "to be one of the wandering tribes, which occupy that vast, but least known region of America, which extends from the river De-la-Plata to the Straits of Magellan. Their proper station is in that part of the interior country which lies on the banks of the river Negro; but in the hunting season they often roam as far as the straits which separate Terra del Fuego from the main land. The first accounts of this people were brought to Europe by the companions of Magellan, who described them as going naked, notwithstanding the inclemency of the climate, above eight feet high, and of strength in proportion to their uncommon size. Some of the inhabitants seen by Captain Byron, in the year 1764, were certainly about seven feet in height.

Captains Wallis and Carteret, in 1766, found some of them to be from six feet, to six feet five and seven inches in height; but that of the greatest part was from five feet ten inches to six feet. Mr. de Bougainville saw none below five feet ten inches, and none above six feet two inches; but the people of the Etoile had seen, in a preceding voyage, several that were six feet four inches and a half high. The least of those whom Giraudais saw, in 1766, were above five feet eleven inches high. M. Ducloux Guyot, in the same year, saw none that wanted more than half an inch of measuring six feet. In the interior parts of the country, according to Mr. Falkner, there are tribes of a still greater size. The great Cacique Cangapol, measured above seven feet in height; and the same gentleman had seen Indians of the tribe of the Puelches, more than an inch or two taller than Cangapol. Their colour is a kind of bronze. They are all painted, and clothed nearly in the same manner: the circles round the two eyes are some white and red, and some red and black. Their teeth are as white as ivory, remarkably even and well set, but their hair is straight, and nearly as harsh as hog's bristles. They have no other clothing than skins of the guanaco, which they wear with the hair inward, together with a piece of leather used as an apron. This seemingly barren country produces, however, good pastures; and numerous droves of wild horned cattle and horses, first brought hither by the Spaniards, now cover the face of it. To the N. of La Plata it is covered with wood; but not a single tree or shrub, fit for any mechanical purpose, is to be seen in all the country southward of that river. Nothing is related concerning the productions of the earth.

PATANE, a kingdom of Malacca, on the eastern coast, subject to Siam. The inhabitants are partly Siamese, Chinese, Malays, and Europeans; but they are all accounted very voluptuous. The air is wholesome, though very hot, and they have no seasons but the winter and summer; the former of which is more properly the rainy season, and holds about 8 months, during the shortest of our days. The woods abound with elephants, and many wild animals. The Siamese cultivate the land, and the Chinese are artificers. The principal town of the same name has a harbour, and contains between 7 and 8000 inhabitants. Lat. 6. 15. N.

PATAY, a town in the dept. of Loiret, near which the English were defeated by the the French, under the celebrated Maid of Orleans, in the year 1429. It is 24 miles NNW. of Orleans.

Patcham, Suffex, E. of Arundel Forest.
Patcham, Suffex, W. of Lewes. Patching, Suffex, E. of Stening.

Patenham, Bedfordshire, near Odehill.
Pathhead, a manufacturing village of Fifeshire, adjoining Kirkcaldy. Patblow, Warwickshire, a hundred in the Conqueror's time, but now only a liberty containing several towns, between Warwick and Alcester. Patley-Bridge, Yorkshire, W. riding, over the Nid by Netherdale. Patmer-Hall, Herts, N. of Bishop's-Stortford.

PALMOS, an island of the Archipelago, now called Patino, situated on the coast of Natolia, between the Isles of Samos and Nicaria. It is about 20 miles in circumference, and one of the most barren heaps of rocks in the Archipelago. A few valleys only are capable of some cultivation. It abounds, however, with partridges, rabbits, quails, turtles, pigeons, and snipes. In the midst of the island rises a mountain, terminated by the convent of St. John, which, with its irregular towers and massy appearance, one might well imagine to be a citadel. The inhabitants of this convent are, in reality, the proprietors of the country; but their domains would be insufficient for their maintenance, were it not for the possession of some lands in the neighbouring isles, and the certain tribute they derive from the superstition of the Greeks. The abbot pays annually 1000 crowns to the grand signior, besides presents to the captain pacha. These monks, called Caloyers, are spread over all Greece. Scarce any of them can read, and yet they all understand how far the empire of superstition can extend over ignorant minds. They keep their credulous countrymen in the most absolute subjection. They are even accomplices in their crimes, the profits of which they share, and sometimes engross. Not one of the piratical vessels is without a Caloyer, in order to give them absolute in the very instant of committing the most dreadful crimes. Cowardly and cruel, these wretches never fail to massacre the crews of the vessels that fall into their power; and, after plundering them, they sink the captured ship, that not a trace of their outrages may be left; then, instantly prostrating themselves before the priest, a few words presently reconcile them to the Deity, quiet their conscience, and encourage them to the perpetration of future crimes, in thus affording what they deem a certain remedy against future remorse. The inhabitants of Patmos are mostly Greek Christians, sailors, or ship-builders; they sail as far as Venice, whither they carry cotton, &c. stockings of their own manufacture. The hermitage of the Apocalypse is situated on the declivity of a mountain, between the convent and the port of Scala. It leads to their church, which is supported against a grotto in the rock; and if we may believe the inhabitants, was the asylum of John, during his exile at Patmos. Here they say, he wrote the Book of the Revelation and they pretend to show the very chinks in the rocks through which the Holy Spirit breathed his inspiration. The fragments of this rock they affirm to be a certain specific against a thousand disorders, and particularly against evil spirits. The Greek monks do not fail to vend this remedy as well as the absolutions, nor do they blush at this scandalous traffick. It is 16 miles SW. of Samos. Lat. 37. 24. N. lon. 26. 24. E.

PATNA, a city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of Bahar, and the residence of a governor. It is an extensive and populous place, built on an eminence, on the S. bank of the Ganges; and is fortified in the Indian manner, with a wall and small citadel. In this citadel were confined the prisoners taken by Meer Cossim, nabob of Bengal, in 1764, by whose order they were massacred. Near Patna, in the same year, a battle was fought between the troops of Sujah Dowlah, nabob of Oude, and a division of the British army, under Major Monroe, when the former were defeated. The English lost 2 officers killed, 6 or 7 wounded, about 60 Europeans, and 600 seapoys. The enemy left full 7000 behind them, 130 pieces of cannon, all their tents, baggage, &c. together with some camels and elephants. Sujah Dowlah fled to one of his most distant cities. The buildings of Patna are high, but the streets are narrow, and far from clean. It is a place of considerable trade, and is supposed to be the ancient Palabothra. It 250 miles NW. of Calcutta. Lat. 25. 35. N. lon. 85. 21. E.

Patney, Wilts. E. of the Devizes.
Patow-Beacons, Hampshire, W. of the Candovers.

PATRAS, a sea port in the Morea, with a Greek archbishop's see. It is pretty large and populous, and the Jews, who are one third of the inhabitants, have four synagogues. There are several handsome mosques and Greek churches. The Jews carry on a great trade in silk, leather, coarse oil, honey, wax, cheese, tobacco, wheat, and manna. There are lofty cypress trees, and excellent pomegranates, citrons, and oranges. It is seated on the declivity of a hill, near the sea, 20 miles SW. of Lepanto.

PATRICIA, a town of Italy, in the Campagna of Rome, 8 miles E. of Ostia.

PATRIMONY OF ST. PETER, or THE PATRIMONIO, a province of Italy, in the pope's territory, situated S. of the Orvietan and Umbria, W. of the Sabina and Campagna di Roma, and with the Mediterranean on the SW. It is about 43 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The country is fertile in corn and fruits, and produces a considerable quantity of alum. The principal places are Viterbo, Monte Fiascone, Bolsena, Civita Castellana, and Civita Vecchia.

Patrick's, St. in Waterford, Munster. Patrick's Isle, St. on the coast of Dublin, Leinster, opposite Balruddery. Patrick's Well, St. in Limerick, Munster.

PATTI, a town and gulf of Demona, in Sicily, 32 miles W. of Messina.

Pattingham, Staffordshire, near Patshall.

PAU, a large ill-built town in the dept. of the Lower Pyrenees, with manufactures of cloth, linen, &c. The hams cured here are highly esteemed. It was the ancient residence of the kings of Navarre, and, before the revolution, the capital of Bearn. It was also the seat of a parliament, and contained a university, an academy of sciences, and several convents. It is situated on an eminence near the Gave de Pau, 34 miles SE. of Dax.

Paverel, Essex. Paul, Yorkshire, in Holderness, on the Humber, SSW. of Headon.

PAVIA, an ancient and celebrated town of Milan, in Italy, and capital of the Pavese, with a celebrated university. In 568, Pavia was taken by the Lombards, and became the capital of their kingdom, which terminated with Didier, in 774, who was made prisoner by Charlemagne. The Pavese, or duchy of Pavia, is bounded on the N. by the Milanese, on the E. by the Lodese, and Placentia, on the S. by Genoa, and on the W. by the Lumellin and Tortonese. It is situated in a beautiful plain, on the river Tefino, 17 miles S. of Milan. Lat. 45. 13. N. lon. 9. 15. E.

PAUL, St. a town in the dept. of the Straits of Calais, 16 miles NW. of Arras; also a town in the respective departments of Upper Vienne, Var, (which last is 5 miles W. of Nice) Mont Blanc, Tarn, and Gard.

PAUL, St. a town and government of Brasil, in the captainship of St. Vincent, in a charming climate, about 36 miles from the sea. It is a kind of independent republic, originally composed of Portuguese malefactors and the banditti of several nations. However, they pay a tribute of gold to the king of Portugal. It is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and thick forests. Lat. 23. 25. S. lon. 45. 52. W.; also an island in the Indian Ocean. Lat. 37. 51. S. lon. 61. 2. E.

PAUL-DE-FENOUILLEDES, a town in the dept. of the E. Pyrenees, 18 miles WNW. of Perpignan.

PAUL-TROIS-CHATEAUX, St. a town in the dept. of Drome, 12 miles S. of Montelimar.

NW. of Frome. Paunkin, Dorset. near Bemister. Paunston, Devon. in the parish of S. Sidenham. Pauntley, Gloucestershire. 4 miles from Newent. Paunton, Great and Little. Lincolnshire, on the river Witham, S. of Grantham.

PAVOASSAN, a town of Africa, capital of the Isle of St. Thomas, seated on the sea-side, with a good harbour. It lies under the equinoctial, in lon. 8. 30. E.

PAUSILIPPO, a mountain of Italy, near Naples, celebrated for a grotto, which is a subterraneous passage through the mountain, tain, near a mile in length, about 20 feet in breadth, and 30 in height. People of fashion generally drive through this passage with torches; but the country people find their way, without much difficulty, by the light which enters at the extremities, and at two holes pierced through the mountain, near the middle of the grotto, which admit light from above. On this mountain also, is the celebrated tomb of Virgil, overgrown with ivy, and shaded with branches, shrubs, and bushes; an ancient bay-tree overhanging it.

PAUZK, a town of Prussian Pomerelia, 24 miles NW. of Dantzick.

Paruton, Cornwall, near Lawhitton. Paxford, Gloucester, near Camden. Paxton, Great, Hunts. E. of the Ouse, NE. of St. Neot's. Paxton, Little, Hunts. W. of the Ouse, near Hale Weston. Paynton, Devonshire, near Torbay.

PAZ, LA, a city, mountainous province, and archbishopric, in the government of Buenos Ayres, in S. America, 180 miles ESE. of Arequipa.

PAZZANO, a town of Calabria Ultra.

PEAK, a mountain in Derbysh. which gives name to a district parted from Staffordshire by the Dove, and having the Derwent on the E. both which rivers have their rise in the Peak. It is a rocky, rough, and barren tract, but abounds in mines of lead, iron, coals, antimony, quarries of millstones, whetstones, &c. and the vales feed considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. It is much visited on account of its extraordinary caverns, perforations, and other curiosities; and the "Wonders of the Peak," have been celebrated both in prose and verse.

Peak, Hants, NW. of East Mean.

Peak, in Cork, Munster, near Aghabologue. At this place a great number of subterraneous rooms or caverns were discovered in 1755, some of which contained considerable quantities of human skeletons.

Peak Dean, Sussex, S. of Chittingley.

Peak Forest, Derbysh. in the High Peak.

Peakirk, Northamp. between Paston and Market-Deeping.

Peamont, Devonshire, in Exminster parish.

Pearching, Sussex, N. of New Shoreham.

PEARL ISLANDS, islands lying in the Bay of Panama, subject to Spain. The inhabitants of that town have plantations in them, from which they are supplied with fruit, garden-stuff, and other provisions.

Peasmarsh, Sussex, near Rye. Peathfoot, or Pegsworth, Northumberland, near Morpeth.

PEATHS, or PEESE, as it is pronounced, a vast chasm in the mountains at the NE. part of Berwickshire, more than 160 feet deep. Over this chasm, a large bridge of four arches has been lately built, which, from its vast height, greatly resembles an ancient Roman aqueduct.

Peatling, Great and Little, Leicestershire, NE. of Lutterworth. Peabworth, Gloucester, N. of Camden. Peckforton, Cheshire, in Bunbury parish. Peckham, Kent, in Hadlow parish. Peckham, Surrey, in the parish of Camberwell; a noted fair on August 21st. Peckham, East, or Great, and West, or Little, Kent, near West Malling. Peckham Rye, Surrey, S. of Peckham. Peckleton, Leicestershire, NE. of Hinckley. Peckmansfont, Kent, near Newchurch.

PECQUENCOURT, a town in the dept. of the North, seated on the river Scarpe, 5 miles E. of Douay.

PEDEE, GREAT, or YADKIN, a river which rises in N. Carolina, near the borders of Virginia, in several small streams, and entering S. Carolina, takes the name of Pedee, and enters the ocean, after a south-easterly course, 6 miles below George-Town.

PEDEE, LITTLE, a river of S. Carolina, which falls into the Great Pedee, 16 miles below Queenborough.

PEDENA, a town of Istria.

PEDIR, a town of Sumatra, 20 miles E. of Achen.

Pedmandow, Cornwall, between the Land's-End and Whitland-Bay. Pedmersh, Essex, near Halstead. Pedmore, Worcestershire, near Stowbridge.

PEDRO, POINT, a cape, on the N. coast of Jamaica, in lon. 78. 12. W.

PEDRO, ST. one of the Marquesa Islands; also a town of Tlascala, in Mexico, and of Sana, in Truxillo; a town of E. Florida, a town of Cuba, a town of Beira, and a town of Arragon.

Pedumsack, Durham, near Hunsterworth. Pedwardine, Herefordshire, near Brampton-Brion.

PEEBLES, an ancient town, the capital of Peebleshire; has a manufacture of carpets and serges, and a weekly market for corn and cattle. It is seated on a small river called Peebles, which soon after joins the Tweed, 20 miles S. of Edinburgh.

PEEBLESHIRE, or TWERDALE, a county of Scotland; bounded on the N. and NE. by Edinburghshire, on the E. by Selkirkshire, on the SE. and S. by the counties of Selkirk and Dumfries, and on the W. by that of Lanerk. It is 25 miles long from N. to S. and from 10 to 12 broad. In this country there is not much arable land, yet they sow some oats and barley. Its hills (among which are the rugged and healthy mountains of Tweedsmuir, in the S. of the county) abound with salubrious springs, and between them are fertile, well-watered valleys, which feed numbers of sheep and cattle. There are few plantations, except round particular houses. The principal rivers are the Tweed, Lynne, and Yarrow.

PEEL, or PEEL TOWN, in the Isle of Man, was anciently called HOLM TOWN, from a small island close by it, naturally very strong, with a fort, now used as a prison for offenders against the ecclesiastical laws: it has no harbour, but a road, with from 7 to 10 feet water, on the W. coast, in lat. 54. 13. N.

Peel-Heath, Middlesex, between Colton-Green and Cowley.

PEER, a town and county of Liege.

Pegglesworth, Gloucestershire, in Dowdeswell parish.

PEGNAFIEL, a town of Old Castile.

PEGNA MACOR, a town of Beira.

PEGNARANDA, a town of Old Castile, and a town of Leon.

Pegton, or Pigden, Northumberland, NW. of Morpeth.

PEGU, a considerable kingdom of India, lying to the SE. of Bengal. It is bounded on the N. by Aracan and Ava, on the W. by part of Aracan and the Bay of Bengal, on the E. by the kingdoms of Laos and Siam, and on the S. by the Bay of Bengal. It has a town of the same name, 70 miles within land, above 20 miles in circumference, but at present not one-twentieth part is inhabited; as it was ruined by the king of Burmah, who, in 1751, reduced this, till then, independent kingdom, to the state of a dependent province. The products of this country are timber for building, elephants' teeth, bees wax, stick-lac, iron, tin, petroleum, rubies, diamonds, and sapphires. The rubies are the best in the world, but the diamonds are small. They have also saltpetre, and plenty of lead, of which they make their money. The country abounds with elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, and other animals; and deer and game are in great plenty. It is very fruitful in corn, roots, pulse, and fruits. They wear no European commodities but hats and ribbands; but they have cottons, silks, and silver, from Bengal, and the neighbouring countries. The inhabitants are but thinly clad, and they wear neither shoes nor stockings. The women are much fairer than the men, small, and shapely. There are a vast number of temples in this country, but mostly of wood, which are varnished and gilt. The inhabitants are partly Peguers, and partly Bramas, or Burmahs, who are at present masters of the country; they are distinguished from each other by their dress and features. The priests, who are called Talepoy, or Talapoints, observe celibacy, and eat but once a day. They wear a long frock, girt with a leather thong four inches broad, at which hangs a bag for receiving alms. They have no stipends, and in case the few acres, which every one who builds a temple bestows for their maintenance, be not sufficient, they send novices abroad to beg alms. They have idols in their temples, with very large ears, in a sitting posture, like taylor's. In the low, flat part of the country, which is liable to be overflowed, they build their houses upon stakes, and in time of inundations, communicate with each other by boats.

The city of Pegu, in 1600, was one of the largest and most populous in Asia, but being besieged, in 1692, by the kings of Aracan and Tangué, the king was obliged to submit for want of provisions. Since that time Pegu ceased to be the royal city. It is still, however, the seat of the viceroy, governing for the king, who resides at Ava. Lat. 18. 5. N. lon. 96. 42. E.

Pehembury, Devon. NW. of Honiton.

PEINA, a town of Hildesheim, Lower Saxony.

PEIPUS, or TCHUDSKOI, a large lake of Russia, between the government of Petersburg and Riga, 64 miles in length, and from 8 to 24 in breadth. It has a communication with the Lake of Wertzerwe; and the river Narova issues from this lake, by which it has a communication also at Narva, with the Gulf of Finland.

PEISHORE, or PITSHOUR, a considerable city of India, in the country of Cabul, 50 miles NNW. of Attock.

PEKIN, the capital city of the empire of China, situated in a fertile plain. It obtained this name, which signifies the Northern Court, to distinguish it from Nanking, or the Southern Court, where the emperors formerly resided. It is an exact square, and divided into two parts; namely, that which contains the emperor's palace, which is in the New City, or Tartar City, so called because it is inhabited by Tartars, ever since they conquered the empire. The other, called the Old City, is inhabited by the Chinese. The circuit of both together, is 52 Chinese lays, each of

of which contains 240 geometrical paces. The gates of this city are lofty and well arched, supporting buildings of 9 stories high; the lowest of which is for the soldiers, when they come off guard. The gates are 9 in number, and before each is an open space, which serves for a parade. The streets are perfectly straight, most of them three miles in length, and about 120 feet wide, with shops on both sides; but the houses are poorly built, and have only a ground-floor. The concourse of people in the streets is prodigious; here are also vast numbers of horses, camels, mules, asses, and carriages. It is singular, however, that no women are ever seen; although the number of women in China, as well as in every other country, is superior to that of the other sex. All the riches and merchandise of the empire are continually pouring into this city. There are always hackney horses and chairs, in various parts, which stand ready to be hired for a trifle. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day, with sabres hanging from their girdles, and whips in their hands, to correct, without distinction, all such as excite quarrels, or make disturbances. The little streets, have lattice-gates at their entrance into the great streets, which are shut up at night and guarded by soldiers, who suffer no assemblies in the streets at that time. The emperor's palace is of vast extent, and surrounded by a brick wall, with pavilions at each corner, encompassed by galleries supported by columns. Those who have computed the compass of this city a different way, observe, that the two cities, without the suburbs, are 18 miles in circumference, and that the number of inhabitants is, at least, 2,000,000; that the walls of the Tartar city are so high, that they cover the town, and are broad enough for 12 horsemen to ride easily abreast; and there are strong towers a bow-shot distance from each other. The walls of the immense palace of the emperor, including that and the gardens, are upwards of four miles in circumference; the architecture is entirely different from that of the Europeans, and the structures are covered with tiles of a shining beautiful yellow. The palace never fails to strike beholders, by its extent, grandeur, and the regular disposition of its apartments. It presents a prodigious assemblage of vast buildings, extensive courts, and magnificent gardens. The temples and the towers of this city are so numerous, that it is difficult to count them. Provisions of all kinds are exceedingly plentiful, they being, as well as the merchandise, chiefly brought from other parts by means of canals, which are always crowded with vessels of different sizes. No police can be more active. It is rare, in a number of years, to hear of houses being robbed, or people assassinated. An earthquake, which happened here in 1731, buried above 100,000 persons in the ruins of the houses. In this city a Russian church is established, with a seminary, in which the students are permitted to reside, for the purpose of learning the Chinese language. Since this establishment, many interesting publications have made their appearance at Petersburg, relative to the laws, history, and geography of China, translated from the originals published at Pekin. Lat. 39. 54. N. lon. 116. 30. E.

Pele, Lancashire, N. of Wigan. Pele, Lancashire, W. of Warrington.

PELEGRINO, MOUNT, a promontory on the N. coast of Sicily, about two miles W. of Palermo. The prospect from it is beautiful and extensive.

PELEW ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the N. Pacific Ocean, lying between 130. and 136. deg. E. lon. and 5. and 9. N. lat. They were probably first discovered by the Spaniards of the Philippines, and by them called the Paloo Islands, from the tall palm trees that grow there in great numbers, and which, at a distance, have the appearance of masts of ships; the word palos, in the Spanish language, sometimes signifying a mast. There is, however, some reason to suppose that no European had ever landed upon them, before the Antelope, a packet belonging to the East-India Company, and commanded by Captain Wilson, was wrecked there in 1783. The captain found the natives simple in their manners, delicate in their sentiments, friendly in their disposition, and, in short, a people that do honour to the human race. The astonishment which those, who first discovered the English, manifested on seeing their colour, plainly showed, that they had never before seen a white man. The clothes of the strangers also puzzled them exceedingly; for it was a matter of doubt with them, whether these and their bodies did not form one substance. When the captain's brother was deputed to wait upon the king, who resided on an island at some distance from that on which they had saved their lives, he accidentally pulled off his hat, at which the gazing spectators were all struck with astonishment, as if they thought it had formed a part of his head. They had no idea of the nature of powder and shot, and were exceedingly amazed on seeing its effects. The weapons used in their battles were bamboo spears, about 12 feet long, with the pointed end exceedingly hard, and barbed transversely. They had also bamboo darts pointed with the wood of the betel-nut tree, which is very hard and heavy; with shorter ones for distant marks, which are thrown by means of a stick, with a notch in it, wherein the head of the dart is fixed. With respect to property in these islands, a man's house or canoe, is considered as his own, as is also the land allotted him, as long as he occupies and cultivates it; but, whenever he removes with his family to another place, the ground reverts to the king, who gives it to whom he pleases, or to those who solicit to cultivate it. The country is well covered with timber-trees, the trunks of which furnish the natives with canoes, some large enough to carry 30 men. Yams and cocoa-nuts, being their chief articles of subsistence, are attended to with the utmost care. The other trees were the ebony; a species of manchineel; a tree that, being pierced with a gimlet, there ran from it a thick liquid, of the consistence of cream; and a singular tree, like a cherry-tree, but with leaves resembling a myrtle, so extremely hard, that few of the tools which the English had could work it, the wood breaking their edges: the colour of the interior was like mahogany. They had also the cabbage-tree: a tree whose fruit nearly resembled an almond; the wild bread fruit tree; plantains, bananas, Seville oranges, and lemons. Their common drink was the milk of the cocoa-nut; on particular occasions, adding certain sweetmeats and a sweet beverage obtained by the aid of a syrup, extracted either from the palm-tree or the sugar-cane. No quadrupeds were seen, except some brownish grey rats in the woods, and a few meagre cats in some of the houses. They had plenty of common cocks and hens, which though not domesticated, yet loved to get near their houses and plantations. The houses are raised about three feet from the ground, the foundation beams being laid on large stones, whence spring the upright supports of their sides, which are crossed by other timbers grooved together, and fastened, by wooden pins, the intermediate space being closely filled up with bamboos and palm tree leaves; and the inside is without any division, forming one great room. As to domestic implements, they have little baskets, very nicely woven from slips of the plantain-tree, and wooden baskets, with covers, neatly carved, and inlaid with shells. No one ever stirs abroad without a basket, which usually contains some betel-nut, a comb, a knife, and a little twine. The best knives are made of a piece of the large mother-of-pearl oyster, ground narrow, and the outward-side a little polished. The combs are made of the orange-tree, of which there are a few of the Seville kind; the handle and teeth are fastened in the solid wood. The fishing-hooks are of tortoise-shell; and twine, cord, and fishing-nets, are well manufactured from the husks of the cocoa-nut. Of the plantain-leaf are formed mats, which serve the people as beds. They also use a plantain-leaf at meals, instead of a plate; and a shell of a cocoa-nut, which they polish very nicely, supplies the place of a cup. There are vessels of a kind of earthen-ware, of a reddish-brown colour, in which they boil their fish, yams, &c. A bundle of cocoa-nut husks, tied together, serves them for a broom, and thick bamboos, with bores five or six inches in diameter, are their buckets, or cisterns. The shell of the tortoise is here remarkably beautiful; and the natives have discovered the art of moulding it into little trays, or dishes and spoons. Some of the women have also bracelets of the same manufacture, and ear-rings inlaid with shells. The natives, in general, are a stout people, rather above the middling stature, and of a very deep copper colour. Their hair is long, and generally formed into one large loose curl round their heads. The men are without clothes; the women wear two little aprons, one before, the other behind. Both men and women are tattooed, and their teeth are made black by art. The men had their left ear bored and the women both; with beads or leaves wore in the perforated ear. The cartilage between the nostrils was also bored, in both sexes, through which they often put some sprig, blossom, or shrub. Both sexes are very expert at swimming, and the men are such admirable divers, that they will readily fetch up any thing from the bottom of the sea which attracts their notice. The conduct of these people toward the English was uniformly courteous and attentive, accompanied with a politeness which surprised those who were the objects of it. Such an opinion had the king of the island entertained of the English, that on on their departure, he suffered his second son, Lee Boo, to accompany them to England, where this amiable youth died of the small-pox, in 1784, at about 20 years of age. These islands are encircled on the W. side by a reef of coral.

Pelham-Aursa, or Brent, Pelham Fur-neux, and Pelham Stockin, Herts, on the borders of Essex, towards Clavering. Pelin, Cornwall, S. of Lestwithiel.

PELISSA, a town and country in Hungary, 15 miles N. of Buda.

Pell, Sussex, on the coast, by Bexill. Pellomountain, Cornwall, W. of Trerife. Pelles, Cornwall, near Padstow-Haven. Peloe, Durham, near Chester-le-Street. Pelfhall, Staff. N. of Walsal. Pelston, Shropshire, N. of Newport. Pelton, Durham, near Chester-le-Street.

PEMBA, a province of Congo, in Africa. Banza, or St. Salvador, is the capital.

Pemberton, Lancashire, near Wigan.

PEMBERIDGE, a small town of Herefordshire, with a manufactory of woollen cloth. It is seated on the river Arrow, 15 miles NNW. of Hereford, and 145 WNW. of London. Market on Tuesday.

* PEMBROKE, the county town of Pembrokeshire, is well-built and well-inhabited, with two churches and a custom house, and, next to Carmarthen and Brecon, the richest town in S. Wales. Here are merchants who employ near 200 sail on their own account. It is situated in one of the most pleasant parts of Wales, on two small rivers that run into Penermouth (the innermost creek of Milford-Haven, and which forms the W. side of a promontory) 10 miles SE. of Haverfordwest, and 256 W. by N. of London. Market on Saturday.

PEMBROKE, a town of New Hampshire.

PEMBROKESHIRE, the most western county of S. Wales, 35 miles in length, 18 in its mean breadth, and surrounded on all sides by the sea, except on the NE. and E. where it is bounded by Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire. It is divided into 7 hundreds, which contain 7 market-towns, 145 parishes, about 2300 houses, and 25,900 inhabitants. The principal rivers are the E. and W. Cledhuc. A great part of the county is plain, and tolerably fertile, consisting of rich meadow and arable land. One part alone is mountainous, extending from the coast, near Fishguard, to the borders of Carmarthenshire. This, however, yields good pasture for sheep, horned cattle, and goats, with which the county in general abounds; as also with wild fowls of various kinds, some of which are seldom seen in any other part of Britain. There is probably more rain here than in any other part of the kingdom, brought by westerly winds from the Atlantic Ocean. The only manufactures of the county consist of a cotton-mill, near Haverfordwest, which employs about 150 persons; a forge at Blackpool, and some iron and tin works on the Tivy. The county-town is Pembroke.

Pembury, Kent. Pen, Somerset. NE. of Wincaunton. Penalib, S. of Monmouth, on the Wye.

PENALVA, a town of Beira.

E. of Caerleon. Pencreek, Cornwall, near Leskard. Penden, Cornwall, near Leskard. Penden, and Pendene-Vorve, Cornwall, on the N. coast, near Morvath. Here is an unfathomable cave under the earth, into which the sea flows at high water. Pendennis, Cornwall, at the mouth of Falmouth-Haven, is a peninsula of one mile and a half in circumference, on which Henry VIII. erected a castle, opposite to that of St. Maw's, on the other side of the bay, which he also built. Some additional works were also made by Queen Elizabeth. It is one of the largest castles in the kingdom, and is built on a high rock. It is stronger by land than St. Maw's, being regularly fortified, and having good outworks. Pendennoek-Point, Cornwall, N. of the Lizard. Pender, Cornwall, near St. Burien. Pend-Hill, Surry, in Blechingley parish. Pendle Forest and Hill, Lanc. near Clithero. Pendleton, Lancas. W. of Pendle-Hill. Pendock, Worces. NW. of Tewkesbury. Pendomer, Somerset. between Crewkern and Melbury. Pendragon-Castle, Westm. Penley, Wilts, by Westbury.

Penmachno, Carnarvonshire.

PENMAEN MAWR, a mountain of Carnarvonshire, 1545 feet high, and overhanging the sea at so vast a height, that few are able to look down the dreadful steep. On the side next the sea, a road is cut out of the rock, which winds up a steep ascent, and is secured by a substantial wall, breast high, along the brink of the frightful precipice. To this great and useful work the city of Dublin largely contributed, it being in the high road to Holyhead. Here the sea is seen dashing its waves 40 fathoms below, while the mountain rises as high above the traveller's head. This road was long, narrow, bad, and stony, but since 1772, it has been made better and wider, and defended from the precipice by the wall above-mentioned. The wall before was very slight, in some parts about a yard high, and in other parts there was only a bank, that scarcely rose a foot above the road.

Penman-Ross, a mountain in Denbighshire.

Penmorfa, Carnarvon's.

Penmynydd, Anglesea, about 2 miles S. of Plas Gwyn.

It was once the residence of the ancestors of Owen Tudor, second husband to Catharine of France, queen dowager of Henry V.; a marriage which restored the British race of princes in this kingdom, on the accession of Henry VII, grandson to Owen Tudor, who was the lineal descendant of Cadwallader, the last king of the Britons. The door of the gateway, part of the house, and the great chimney-piece of the hall, the remains of this residence, with some coats of arms, dates of buildings or repairs, and the initial letters of the names of the owners, are yet to be seen in the farm-house.

Penn, Bucks, 2 miles from High Wycomb.

Penn, Nether and Over, Staff.

PENNINGTON, a town of New Jersey.

Pennington, Hants, near Ringwood.

Pennington, Lanc. near Ulverston.

Pen-nifson, Yorks. W. Riding, N. of Middop.

PENNON DE-VELEZ, or VELEZ-DE-GOMERA, a sea-port of Fez, with a good harbour, in possession of the Spaniards. It is situated on a rock near the coast of the Mediterranean, 75 miles E. of Ceuta.

PENNSYLVANIA, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the E. by New York and Jersey; on the W. by states not settled; on the N. by several Indian nations; and on the S. by Delaware and Maryland. It extends 250 miles from E. to W. and 140 from N. to S. By means of the Delaware, and other navigable rivers, large ships come up into the heart of the country. The soil is, in some places, a yellow or black sand; in some, loamy gravel; and in others a fat and fruitful mould, easy to be cleared. It is well watered with rivers, and produces every thing which can render life agreeable, ble, in the utmost plenty. The climate is very agreeable, and the air sweet and clear. The produce of this country is corn, cattle, timber, pot-ashes, wax, skins, and furs; and they export to the W. India Islands, salted beef, pork, horses, pipe-staves, and fish; taking in return sugar, rum, and molasses. This country was granted to the celebrated William Penn, the quaker, son of Sir William Penn, by King Charles II. in consideration of sundry debts due to him from the crown. When he went to America, he purchased the soil, at a very low rate, of the Indians, (who had conceived a very favourable opinion both of him and his designs,) expending also large sums in transporting his followers, and supplying them with all necessaries. His lands also were sold at a very easy purchase, and he gave the settlers a noble charter of privileges. By this means the country was soon changed from a wilderness to a garden, and it is now one of the most flourishing provinces in the new world. The Germans compose a quarter, if not a third part of, the inhabitants of Pennsylvania; in 1787, the whole number of inhabitants were reckoned at 360,000: they are now much more numerous, and are all distinguished for their temperance, industry, and economy. Philadelphia is the capital.

Pennywell, Herts, near Watford.

PENOBSCOT, a bay of N. America, on the S. coast of Main, at the mouth of the river Penobscot, in lat. 43. 55. to 44. 30. N. and lon. 68. 40. to 69. W. It is long and capacious, and lined with a cluster of small islands. On its W. coast are mountains of the same name. The river Penobscot is navigable for vessels of 100 tons, to the falls, which are 50 miles from the sea.

Pen-Park-Hole, Gloucest. 3 miles from Bristol and the Severn, in Westbury parish. Penpoll, Cornwall, E. of Bodmin. Penpont, Cornw. SE. of Padstow-Haven. Penpurgh, Northumb. by Whitfield.

PENRISE, a sea-port of Glamorgan-shire, with a good harbour for ships. It is 20 miles SE. of Carmarthen, and 219 W. of London. Market on Thursday.

PENRITH*, a large well-built trading town of Cumberland, with noted tan-works, and some manufactures of check and cotton. It has a spacious market-place, and is a great thoroughfare on the post-road between London and Glasgow. It is seated under a hill, near the river Peterel, and the conflux of the Eilmat and Lowther, 18 miles S. of Carlisle, and 220

NNW. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday. Fair on Whit-Tuesday.

Penrith, Old, Cumb. in Lazenby parish, 5 miles from Penrith, and 13 from Carlisle. It was formerly a Roman station, and here are still to be seen great ruins of a town. Penrose, Cornw. near Helston. Penrose, Cornw. at the Land's End. Penrose, Heref. N. of Penbridge. Penrose, Monm. N. of Ragland Castle. Penruddock, Cumberland, in Greytstock parish.

PENRYN, a neat town of Cornwall, with a considerable trade in drying and vending pilchards, and in the Newfoundland fishery. It has a good custom-house and quay, and is situated on an eminence, surrounded with gardens and orchards, at the mouth of a navigable river, near Pendennis Castle, 2 miles NNW. of Falmouth, and 260 WSW. of London. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

PENSACOLA, the principal town of W. Florida, seated on a bay of the Gulf of Mexico, which forms an excellent harbour, safe from all winds, with 4 fathoms water at the entrance, gradually deepening into 7 or 8. Lat. 30. 32. N. lon. 87. 12. W.

PENSANCE, or PENZANCE, a well-built populous town of Cornwall, with many ships belonging to it, and a considerable trade. The harbour, however, is not fit for large vessels, being almost dry at low water. In 1595, it was burnt by the Spaniards, who, in four galleys, surprised this part of the coast, and set several villages and farms on fire; but it was afterwards rebuilt, and made one of the coinage towns. It is situated on a creek, at the bottom of Mount's Bay, 10 miles E. of Senan, at the Land's End, and 285 WSW. of London. Market on Thursday.

Pensand, Cornw. S. of Stratton. Pensfax, Worc. in Lindridge parish.

PENSBURY, a town of Pennsylvania, where the celebrated Mr. Penn resided. It is situated on a small creek of the Delaware.

Penset-Chase, Staff. SW. of Wolverhampton.

PENSFORD, a town in Somersetshire, noted for its hats and bread; it has also a manufactory of cloth. It is seated on the river Chew, 7 miles SSW. of Bath, and 117 W. by S. of London. Market on Tuesday.

Pen's Green, Surry, between Peckham and Beckenham. Pen's-Place, Hertford. on Aldelham-Common. Pensham, Worc.

near Perthore. Pensherst, Cornw. NE. of Bodmin. Pensherst, or Pencheſter, Kent, 3 miles SW. of Tunbridge. Pensherſt-Halymote, alias Oxford Wild, Kent, near Penſherſt. Penſignance, Cornwall, near Redruth. Penſhorp, Norfolk, near Fakenham. Pemerry-Chapel, Monm. NW. of Chepſtow.

PENTHIEVE FORT, in the dept. of Morbihan, ſituated on the peninſula of Quiberon; it is waſhed by the ſea on the E. and W. ſides.

Pentbrant-Mon, Angleſea, 5 miles W. of Beaumaris. Pentire, Hill, Fort, and Point, Cornwall, near the entrance of Padſtow Haven. Pentire, E. and W. Cornwall, on the Britiſh Channel, near Crantock, SE. of Penhale.

PENTLAND FRITH. See ORCADES.

PENTLAND-SKERRIES, three ſmall rocky iſlands, on the N. coaſt of Scotland, 4 miles NE. of Duncansby Head. On the largeſt of theſe two light houſes were erected in 1791.

PENTLAND-HILLS, a ridge of mountains, in Edinburghſhire, extending about 10 miles from SW. to NE.

Pentlow, Eſſex, on the Stour, between Long Melford and Clare. Pentney, Norf. on the river Lyn, between Seche and Caſtleacre. Penton-Grafton, Hampſ. near Weyhill. Penſey Mewſey, Hampſ. near Andover. Pentregayer, Shropſ. W. of Otwelltry. Pentrepant, Shropſ. N. of Otwelltry. Pentridge, Derbyſ. SW. of Alfreton. Pentridge, Dorſetſ. by Cranborn-Chace. Pentry, Carmarthenſhire. Pentvan, Cornwall, W. of Trewardreth-Bay. Pentwynbarth Hill, Monmouthſhire, W. of Caerleon. Pen-voſe, Cornwall, SE. of Padſtow-Haven. Penwarn, Cornw. W. of Trewardreth-Bay. Penwarren, Cornwall, near Helford-Haven. Penwortham, Lancaſ. on the Ribble, near Preſton. Penyard Caſtle, Heref. near Roſs. Penny-Clawth, Monm. E. of Ragland-Caſtle.

PENZENSKOE, one of the 41 governments of the Ruſſian empire, formerly a province of Kaſan; and bounded by the government of Simbirſkoe on the E. Its capital, Penza, is ſeated on the river Sura, where it receives the rivulet Penza. Lat. 32. 35. N. lon. 45. 45. E.

Peower, Upper and Nether, Cheſh. E. and NE. of Northwich.

PEQUIGNY, a town in the dept. of the Somme, memorable for an interview and treaty between Edward IV. of England, and Louis XI. of France in the year 1474. It is ſeated on the river Somme, 15 miles SE. of Abbeville.

PERA, a ſuburb of Conſtantinople, where the foreign ambaffadors uſually reſide. It is inhabited by Greek and other Chriſtians, and they ſell wine there as publicly as in any other part of Europe, which is not allowed in the city.

Peramarwothal, Cornwall, N. of Penryn. Peramulhno, Cornw. E. of Mount's Bay. Peran-in-the Sands, Cornw. NE. of St. Agnes. It has from time to time been almoſt overwhelmed with the ſea-ſand driven into it by the NW. winds, ſo that the inhabitants were obliged once to remove their church.

PERAY, St. a village in the dept. of Ardeche, ſeated on the Rhone, oppoſite Valence.

PERCASLAW, a town of Ruſſia, in Kiof.

PERCHE, a ci-devant province of France; it now forms, with part of Normandy, the department of Orne.

Percy Lodge, Bucks, near Colnbrook. Pere St. Monm. S. of Chepſtow.

PEREKOP. See PRECOP.

PERECZAS, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the ſame name.

PERGA, a town of Turkiſh Albania, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean.

PERGAMO, an ancient decayed town of Natolia, inhabited by about 3000 Turks, and a few families of poor Chriſtians. This city was anciently the capital of a kingdom, which began in the year 470, from the building of Rome, and continued 152 years; when the laſt king, Attalus III. dying without children, left the Roman people his heirs. Here the manufacture of parchment was firſt invented.

PERIGORD, a ci-devant province of France, now forming the department of Dordogne.

PERIGUEUX, an ancient town, the capital of the department of Dordogne. Here are the ruins of a temple of Venus, and an amphitheatre. It is famous for its partridge-pies, which are ſent all over Europe, and is ſeated on the river Ille, 50 miles SW. of Limoges.

PERIM, an iſland in the Red Sea, ſituated between the two points which include clude the Straits of Babelmandel; it is about 5 miles in length and 2 in breadth. The channel which divides it from the African coast, though 14 or 15 miles across, is but little frequented, on account of the numerous rocks and shoals which obstruct it; so much so, as to render it necessary for vessels that attempt it, to steer close under the western point of the island. The breadth of the other channel is less than two leagues, and this space cannot be navigable, nor is the deep water any where at so great a distance from the island, as to be out of the reach of its batteries, whether erected on the shore, or on artificial projections within the sea, if such should be found necessary to secure the entire command of the passage. It is a low, rocky substance, destitute of water, but plenty of it, of a very good quality, may be procured from the opposite main. The harbour, which is in the shape of a horseshoe, is excellent.

Perivale, Middlesex, the modern name given to a small village, formerly called Little Greenford, or Ganford, N. of Great Ealing and Castlebar-Hill; but more properly is a rich vale of corn land, extending from Heston to Harrow-on-the-Hill and Pinner. Perlethorpe, Nott. in Edenfow parish.

Permondley, Northumb. NE. of Kirkhaugh.

PERMSKOE, one of the 41 governments of Russia, formerly a province of Kasam. It is divided into two provinces; namely, Perm, the capital of which is of the same name, seated on the river Kama, where it receives the Zegocheckha, in lat. 57. 40. N. lon. 54. 6. E. and Catharinembourg, the capital of which, of the same name, is seated not far from the source of the river Iffel, in lat. 56. 36. N. lon. 60. 30. E.

PERNAMBUC. See OLINDA.

PERNE, a town in the depart. of the Mouths of the Rhone; and a town in the dept. of the Straits of Calais.

PERNO, a town of Nyland, Sweden.

PERNOV, a town in the government of Riga, situated on a river near the Baltic.

PERONNE, a considerable town in the depart. of Somme, seated on the river Somme, 27 miles SW. of Cambray, and 80. E. by N. of Paris.

Perose, Cornwall, SW. of Camelford.

PEROUSA, a town of Piedmont, in the district of the Four Vallies, to one of which it gives name.

PERPIGNAN, a considerable town in the dept. of the Eastern Pyrennees, and late a province of Roussillon, with a university. It is seated on the river Tet, (over which it has a handsome bridge) 3 miles from the sea, and 26 miles S. of Narbonne.

Perrot, South; Dorsetsh. 2 miles NW. of Cheddington. Perry, Huntingdonsh. in the parish of Great Stoughton. Perry-Bar Staff. N. of Birmingham. Perry-Bridge, Somersetshire, S. of Wrinton. Perry-Court, Kent, near Cliff. Perry-Court, Kent, near Preston. Perry-Court, Kent, near Wye. Perry-Hall, Staff. near Perry-Bar. Perry-Hill, Surry NW. of Guilford. Perry-Street, Kent, near Sydenham. Perry Wood, Staff. near Birmingham. Perse Bridge, Durham, on the Tees, W. of Darlington.

PERSEES, a people of Persia, now scattered into different parts, but chiefly in the E. Indies. They were worshippers of fire, or at least they look upon that as an emblem of the Supreme Being. They are otherwise called Guebres. On the conquest of Persia, by the Mahometans, they removed to India. Zoroaster was the original founder of their sect. They regard it as a great crime to extinguish fire of any kind; and have lamps in their temples, which, they assert, have burnt for many ages.

Perse-drove, Cambridgeshire, W. of Wisbeach.

PERSEPOLIS, supposed to be anciently the capital city of Persia, properly so called. It was taken by Alexander the Great, who was persuaded, when in liquor, by the courtesan Thais, to set it on fire. It is thought to be the same as what is now called Kilmanar, of which there are magnificent ruins now remaining. There are inscriptions, in characters, and in a language that now cannot be read, and which show that this place must be extremely ancient; almost all parts of the ruins are full of sculptures, representing men and beasts. It is 50 miles NE. of Schiras, and 200 SE. of Ispahan.

Pershal, Stafford. near Eccleshall.

PERSHORE, a neat old town of Worcestershire, containing 2 churches and about 300 houses. It is a considerable thoroughfare in the lower road from Worcester to London, and has a manufacture of stockings. It is seated on the N. side of the Avon, near its junction with the river Bow, 9 miles ESE. of Worcester, and 102 WNW. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

PERSIA, a large kingdom of Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have had their particular kings kings. Its power and extent have greatly varied both in ancient and modern times, and its present boundaries are not exactly known, especially towards Russia, Tartary, and India. In the general outline, it is bounded on the N. by Russia, the Caspian Sea, and independent Tartary; on the E. by India; on the S. by the Arabian Sea, and the Persian Gulf; and on the W. by Georgia, Armenia, Curdistan, and Arabia. Persia is divided into the following provinces; Schirvan; Adirbeitzan Ghilan; Mezanderan, with Taberistan; Persian Irak, or ancient Parthia; Chulistan; Farcistan; Kerman, or Kerlistan; Mecran; Segeitan; Sablestan; and Chorasan; including Asterbat and Dagestan. Candahar is generally considered as a province of Persia, although it is now an independent kingdom. The chief rivers are the Tygris and Amuc. In the N. and E. parts, it is mountainous and cold, in the middle and SE. parts sandy and desert; and in the S. and W. level and extremely fertile, though for several months very hot. The soil produces corn, and all sorts of culinary herbs, plants, roots, and pulse, and the country abounds with poultry and game, generally very thin, white, and good. They have cotton in great abundance, and among other domestic animals, camels, buffaloes, oxen, sheep, goats, and horses, wonderfully gentle, sprightly, slender, and finely proportioned, the best travellers in the East; mules in great request, and asses of the Arabian breed, reckoned the best in the world. In several places naphtha, a sort of bitumen, rises out of the ground, and they have mines of gold, silver, iron, Turkey-stones, and salt, but the first two of these are not worked, on account of the scarcity of wood. They have a great deal of cotton cloth, some pearls, and a large quantity of silk, beside manufactures of silk, and very fine carpets. They have also the various sorts of fruits, fairer and better than the choicest Europeans; excellent wine, and a great number of mulberry-trees, with the leaves of which they feed the silk-worms; likewise dates, pistachio-nuts, and trees which produce manna. They are generally Mahometans, of the sect of Ali. Ipahan is the capital.

PERSIAN GULF, a large gulf of Asia, between Persia and Arabia Felix. The entrance near Ormus is not above 30 miles over, but within it is 180 in breadth, and the length, near Ormus to the mouth of the Euphrates, 420 miles.

Perfint, Hampsh. near Rumsey. Perth, Bedfordf. near Swinhead.

PERTH, a very handsome town of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name, containing about 11,000 inhabitants. It consists, chiefly, of one wide street, well paved, but ill built; from which two others branch off, at right angles, on each side. The kings of Scotland before James II. in 1437, were crowned at Scone, and generally resided at Perth, as the metropolis of the kingdom. The town is supposed to have increased one-third in buildings, since the year 1745. The manufacture of linen and cotton here is very considerable; 150,000*l.* being annually exported, with about 50,000*l.* worth of salmon, and 10,000. worth of wheat and barley. Perth is agreeably seated (with a beautiful approach to it,) on the western bank of the Tay, which is here crossed by an elegant stone bridge of 9 arches, (to which the tide comes up, the river being navigable for small vessels,) 38 miles NNW. of Edinburgh.

Perthneer-Chapel, near Monmouth.

PERTSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the shires of Inverness and Aberdeen; on the E. by Angusshire and the Frith of Tay; on the SE. and S. by the counties of Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, and Stirling; and on the W. by Dumbartonshire and Argyleshire. It extends about 60 miles from N. to S. and upwards of 50 from E. to W. The northern district, called Athol, is uncommonly wild and mountainous; the 5 others, viz. Braedalbane, Gourie, Monteith, Stormont, and Strathern, are more champaign, and fertile in corn and pasture.

PERTH AMBOY, a sea-port in the county of Middlesex, and state of New Jersey, situated on a neck of land, included between the river Raritan and Arthur Kill Sound. It lies open to Sandy Hook, has one of the best harbours on the continent, and is 25 miles SW. of New York.

Perton, Staffordshire, near Wolverhampton.

PERTUIS, a town in the department of the Mouths of the Rhone, 10 miles N. of Aix.

Pertwood, Wilts, NW. of Hindon.

PERU, a large country of S. America, bounded on the N. by the river of Guayaquil, which divides it from New Granada; on the S. by the depopulated territory of Atacama, which parts it from Chili; on the E. by a horrible desert of more than 500 leagues in extent, which separates it from the provinces of Paraguay and Buenos Ayres; and on the W. by the Pacific Ocean. Its extent from N. to S. is from 420 to 450 leagues, and from E. to W. from 100 to 120 leagues. It was stripped of the kingdom of Quito, which has generally been considered as a part of it, in 1718, and of those provinces, at the distance of 40 leagues E. of Lima, which, towards the E. now constitute the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, in 1778. It scarcely ever rains in this country, and they hardly know what lightning and thunder are, unless toward the tops of the mountains, the tops of which are covered with snow to a very great height; among them are several volcanoes, which burn continually, and sometimes such torrents of water fall down from thence, as overflow the country for a considerable space. Earthquakes are so very common here in the valleys, that the inhabitants reckon from them as a series of dates. The best houses are made of a sort of reeds, like bamboo-canes, and covered with thatch, or palm-leaves. They have a kind of galleries or balconies, but there is no walking along the floors without making the whole structure shrink or shake. Here are large forests on the sides of the mountains, which advance near the sea; but the trees are different from those in Europe. The birds are much superior to the European for the beauty of their plumage; but their notes are disagreeable. There are few birds near the sea, and the monkeys also keep at a distance from it. The bird called the toucan, which is remarkable for having a bill as large as its body, is called the preacher by the Spaniards, though it is as mute as a fish. It has been generally said there are lions here, but that which they call so, is more like a wolf than a lion, and never attacks man. The tigers are said to be as large and as fierce as those of Africa, though not of the same colour; however, there are but very few of them. Serpents are very common, and several sorts of them dangerous; particularly the rattle-snake, which does not get away from men like the rest. There are several insects like those in Europe, but they are vastly larger. The earth-worms are as long as a man's arm, and as thick as his thumb; there are also spiders covered with hair, and as large as a pigeon's egg. The bats are of a monstrous size, and will suck the blood of horses, mules, and even of men who sleep in the fields; and they have entirely destroyed the great cattle, which the mil-sionaries had introduced into a country N. of Peru. The famous bird called a condor, or condor, is, perhaps, the largest in the world; for it is said to make nothing of carrying off sheep and heifers. The animal called the guanaco, or camel sheep, is peculiar to S. America, and has something of the shape of a camel, but without any bunch on its back. There are also two other animals pretty nearly like the guanaco, in shape, viz. the vicuna and the lama, which last, the Indians use as a beast of carriage, for any load under a hundred weight. The two former are also of great service in mines, carrying metals in such rugged roads as would be impracticable to any other beast. Peru is partly inhabited by the Spaniards, who conquered it, and partly by the native Americans. The latter, who live among the forests, form, as it were, so many small republics, which are directed by a Spanish priest, and by their governor, assisted by the original natives, who serve as officers under them. They go naked, and paint their bodies with a red drug, called rocu. Their skins are of a red copper colour; and they have no beards, nor hair on any part of their bodies except their heads, where it is black, long, and coarse. From a mixture of the native Americans and Spaniards, arises a third kind, called Mestics, who are accounted illegitimate; however, they have all the privileges of Spaniards, and are the persons who carry on trades; as the former think it beneath them to meddle with any thing of this sort. These Mestics behave in a more tyrannical manner over the real Americans, than even the Spaniards themselves. They have a great number of fruits, plants, and trees, not known in Europe; the Spaniards also have introduced here many herbs, plants, and trees from Europe, which thrive very well, and produce delicious fruits. A great part of the territory of Peru is occupied either by barren and rugged mountains; by sandy plains, which reach from one extremity of the coast to another; or by lakes of many leagues in extent, some of which are situated on the very summits of the mountains. The breaks, however, and the valleys, which enjoy the benefit of irrigation, present an extensive range of delightful plains, filled with cities and towns, the climate whereof is highly salubrious and agreeable. Its commerce has been considerably augmented, since the arrival of merchant vessels from Spain, by Cape Horn, has been permitted, and since the removal of those restrictions, by which the province was oppressed in the time of the galleons, and the fairs of Porto-Bello and Panama. The manufactures consist almost entirely of a few friezes, worn by Indians and negroes; and there are some manufactures of hats, cotton cloths, drinking glasses, &c. but inconsiderable in number. The mines are, in fact, the only source of the riches of Peru. In 1790, 534,000 marks of silver, and 6038 of gold, were smelted and refined in the royal mint of Lima; and, in the same year, 5,162,239 piastres, in both materials, were coined there. About half of the silver, which is annually smelted and coined in this province, is extracted from the mines of Gualgayoc and Pasco; the former in the district of Truxillo, and the latter situated at the northern extremity of the Pampas de Bombon. The mine of Guantajaya, in Arequipa, and that of Guarochiri, in Lima, do not, however, flourish in proportion to the richness and abundance of their metals; this arises from the difficulty of procuring necessaries for working, subsistence, &c. The fishery is exclusively in the hands of the Indians, but these being unskilful mariners, and unprovided with proper boats and fit instruments, venture but a small distance out to sea. Hence a scarcity and dearth of fish is experienced in Lima, and in all the places along the coast. The bad and uneven roads, together with the delay and expence of carriage, almost entirely obstruct the internal commerce of this province, and render the subsistence of the inhabitants precarious, and dependant on foreign aid. Peru is governed by a viceroy, and is divided into the archbishopric of Lima, and the bishoprics of Arequipa, Cusco, Guamanga, and Truxillo; each of which is subdivided into jurisdictions. Lima is the capital.

PERUGIA, a town in the pope's territories, capital of Perugiano. It is a handsome and populous city, with a university, and three academies. The churches, and many other buildings, public and private, are very handsome. It is 75 miles N. of Rome.

PERUGIA, a lake of Italy, 8 miles from the city of that name, in the province of Perugiano. It is almost round, about 10 miles in diameter, and contains three islands. It was formerly called Lacus Thrasimenus, near which the consul Flaminius was defeated by Hannibal.

PERUGIANO, a province in the pope's territories; E. of Tuscany, about 25 miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth. The air is very pure, and the soil fertile in corn and good wine. The capital is Perugia.

Peryton, Somerset. near Wellington.

Pery-Town, Kent, near Westwell.

PESCARA, a town and river of Abruzzo Citra.

PESCHIERA, a town in the Veronese.

Pescotter, a river in Cardigansh. which runs into the Tavy, opposite Iistrodefyne.

PESENAS, a town in the dept. of Herault, seated on the river Herault, 12 miles NE. of Beziers.

Pesnall, Suffolk, W. of Yoxford.

Pessebury, Hertfordshire, near Sawbridgeworth.

PEST, a free town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the E. side of the Danube, opposite Buda.

Peston, Shropsh. near Chirbury.

PETCHE-LI, a province of China, the chief in the whole empire; bounded on the E. by the Yellow Sea; on the N. by the great wall; on the W. by Chan-si; and on the S. by Chang-tong and Honan. It contains Peking, the principal city in the empire, on which 140 towns depend, besides a vast number of villages. The air is temperate, unless when the wind blows from the N. and there is a rainy season in summer; but it seldom rains very long, or at any other time. The soil is fertile, and produces the various sorts of corn; and there is plenty of cattle, pulse, and fruits. They have also mines of coal, which is their only fuel. There is a great variety of animals, of which a sort of cat is most remarkable, it having long hair about its neck and head, like the lion, and hanging ears. All the riches of China are brought into this province, particularly to Peking.

Petches, Essex, by Tinchinglefield.

PETER AND PAUL, ST. or PETRO-PAULOWSKOI, a town and port of Kamtschatka, in the Russian government of Irkutsk. The town consists of some miserable log-houses and a few conical huts. Capt. King places it in lat. 53. 0. 38. N. and lon. 158. 43. E.

PETERBOROUGH, an ancient city of Northamptonshire, with some woollen manufactures of cloth and stockings. It is so named from a monastery dedicated to St. Peter, founded here in the year 655, by Peada, son of Penda, king of Mercia. It is not a large place, having but one parish-church, besides the cathedral, but the market-place is spacious, the streets are regular, and there is a handsome market-house, over which are kept the assizes and quarterly sessions. It has a separate jurisdiction extending over 32 towns and hamlets hamlets, wherein the magistrates appointed by royal commission, are vested with the same power as judges of assize. The cathedral, formerly a monastery, is a most noble structure, full of curious work. The W. front, which is 156 feet in breadth, is reckoned the most stately of any in England. It is seated on the river Nen, (over which it has a wooden bridge, and which is navigable to Northampton, by barges laden with coals, corn, malt, timber, &c.) 30 miles SSW. of Boston, and 81 N. of London. Market on Saturday.

Peterborough, in Monaghan, Ulster.

Peter-Church, Hereford, on the river Doier, in the Golden Vale. Petterley, Bucks, in Missenden parish.

PETER-LE-PORT, St. a town in the SE. part of Guernsey, consisting of one long, narrow street. It is defended by two castles, the Old Castle and Cornet Castle; the latter is situated on a rock, separated from the land by an arm of the sea, 600 yards wide, and not fordable but at low water in great spring tides. Here is a good road for shipping; and the pier, a noble work, formed of vast stones joined together with great art and regularity, affords not only security to vessels, but a pleasant and extensive walk to the inhabitants, with a fine prospect of the sea and the neighbouring islands.

PETERHEAD, a handsome town of Aberdeenshire, situated near the mouth of the river Ugie, with an excellent harbour, defended by a new pier. A considerable trade is carried on, both in the fishery, and to the Baltic for the productions of the North. Here is also a manufacture of sewing thread. The mineral spring here, of a powerful diuretic quality, and the sea-bathing, bring a great resort of company. It lies a little to the N. of Buchaness, 24 miles NE. of Aberdeen.

Peter's St. Kent, in Thanet Isle. Peter's St. Suffolk, S. of Bungay. Peter's St. Worcester, near Droitwich. Peter's Chapel-in-the-Wall, St. Essex, at the mouth of Blackwater river.

PETERSBURGH, a town of Virginia, seated on an unhealthy spot, on the S. side of the river Appamatox, 18 miles S. of Richmond.

PETERSBURGH, the metropolis of the empire of Russia, in the government of the same name, is seated on the river Neva, near the Gulf of Finland, and is built partly upon some islands in the mouth of that river, and partly upon the continent. So late as the beginning of this century, the ground on which Petersburgh now stands was only a vast morass, occupied by two small fishermen's huts. The Czar Peter the Great, first began to build here in the year 1703, erecting a small tent or hut for himself, and some wretched wooden hovels. At first, being designed only for a place of arms in the Swedish war, the public edifices and private houses were built only with timber, the town had no other fortifications than a mean rampart of earth, nor were the streets paved. But after the victory of Pultowa, and the conquest of Livonia, Peter determined to render this infant city the capital of his vast empire. Upon this, he ordered the citadel to be built with stone, the admiralty to be walled in with the same materials, and all the buildings to be erected in a handsome and more durable manner, and gardens to be laid out. In 1714, he removed the council to Petersburg, and elegant houses were erected, in a straight line, for the public offices, which, in 1718, were also translated hither. In Peter's time, this city became gradually large and splendid, and having received additional improvements from his successors, it is now justly ranked among the largest and most elegant cities of Europe. At present, it is about 6 English miles in length, and as many in breadth, but it has neither gates nor walls. The streets, in general, are broad and spacious; and three of the principal ones, which meet in a point at the admiralty, are at least two miles in length. Most of them are paved, but a few are still suffered to remain floored with planks; and, in several parts of this metropolis, wooden houses, scarcely superior to cottages, are disgustingly blended with the public buildings. The brick houses are ornamented with a white stucco, which has mistakenly led several travellers to say, that they are built of stone. The mansions of the nobility are vast piles of building, furnished with great cost, in the same elegant style as at Paris or London; they are situated chiefly on the S. side of the Neva, either in the admiralty quarter, or in the suburbs of Livonia and Moscow, which are, indeed, the finest parts of the city. The views upon the banks of the Neva exhibit the grandest and most lively scenes imaginable. That river is, in many places, as broad as the Thames at London: it is also deep, rapid, and as transparent as crystal; and its banks are lined on each side with a continued range of handsome buildings. On the N. the fortress, an academy of sciences, and the academy of arts, are the most striking objects. On the opposite side are the imperial palace, the admiralty, the mansions of many of the Russian nobles, and the English line, so called because (a few houses excepted) the whole row is occupied by English merchants. In the front of these buildings, on the S. side, is the quay, which stretches for 3 miles, except where it is interrupted by the admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embanked, by order of the late empress, by a wall, parapet, and pavement of hewn granite. Petersburg, although it is more compact than the other Russian cities, and has the houses, in many streets, contiguous to each other, yet still bears a resemblance to the towns of this country, and is built in a very straggling manner. It has been lately inclosed within a rampart, the circumference of which is 14 miles. Notwithstanding all the improvements it has received by succeeding sovereigns, and particularly the late empress, who may, without exaggeration, be called its second founder, it is still, as Mr. Wraxall observes, "only an immense outline, which will require future empresses, and almost future ages, to complete." From its low and marshy situation, it is subject to inundations, which have occasionally risen so high, as to threaten the town with a total submerision. The opposite divisions of Petersburg, situated on each side of the Neva, are connected by a bridge on pontoons, which, on account of the large masses of ice driven down the stream from the Lake Ladoga, is usually removed when they first make their appearance; and, for a few days, till the river is frozen hard enough to bear carriages, there is no communication between the opposite parts of the town. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 126,700. The value of the exports in British ships, in 1777, amounted to 1,508, 782l. sterling; and the goods imported in the same year, were estimated at 423,942l. Petersburg is 540 miles NNE. of Warsaw. PHAROS, a small island in the Mediterranean Sea, opposite Alexandria, in Egypt, the space between which and the continent forms a spacious harbour. It has a communication with the continent by a stone causeway and bridge. It formerly had an exceedingly high tower upon it, called the Pharos, whence the island took its name. On the top of it were lights for the direction of ships.

PHARZA, anciently PHARSALIA, a town of Turkey, in Europe, in Janna, the ancient Thessaly; famous for the decisive battle fought in its plains, between Julius Cæsar and Pompey. It is an archiepiscopal see, and is seated on the river Enipeus, 10 miles S. of Larissa.

PHASIS, or PHASE, a large river of Asia, which crosses the country of Mingrelia, and runs into the Black Sea.

PHEASANTS ISLE. See FAISANTS.

PHENICIA, a country of Turkey, in Asia, extending from Arabia Deserta to the Mediterranean; bounded on the N. by Syria Proper, and on the S. by Palestine. The principal towns are Tripoly, Damascus, and Balbec. It is but a small territory, but has been greatly celebrated for being the inventor of navigation, and, according to some, of letters. Its inhabitants were the first, which we have any account of, that traded with Britain for tin. They frequently sent colonies to different parts of Europe and Africa, where they founded considerable towns.

Philack, Cornwall, on St. Ives Bay.

PHILADELPHIA, called by the Turks ALLAHIAH, an ancient city of Natolia. It contains about 11,000 inhabitants, among whom are 2000 Christians, who form four churches or congregations. It is seated at the foot of the mountain Tinolus, 40 miles ESE. of Smyrna.

PHILADELPHIA, the capital of Pennsylvania, and latterly of all the United States of N. America, is situated on a neck of land at the confluence of the rivers Delaware and Schuylkill. The length of the city from E. to W. that is from the Delaware to the Schuylkill, upon the original plan, is 10,300 feet, and the breadth, N. and S. is 4887 feet. Not two-fifths of the plot covered by the city charter, are yet built upon. The inhabitants, however, have not confined themselves within the original limits of the city, but have built N. and S. along the Delaware, 2 miles in length. The circumference of that part of the city which is built, if we include Kensington on the N. and Southwark on the S. is about 5 miles. Market Street is 100 feet wide, wide, and runs the whole length of the city from river to river. Near the middle of it, it is intersected at right angles by Broad Street, 100 feet wide, running nearly N. and S. quite across the city. Between the Delaware and Broad Street, are 10 streets, nearly equidistant, running parallel with Broad Street; and between Broad Street and the Schuylkill, are 9 streets, equidistant from each other. Parallel to Market Street are 8 other streets, running E. and W. from river to river, and intersecting the cross streets at right angles. All these streets are 50 feet wide, except Arch Street, which is 65 feet wide, and all the streets which run N. and S. except Broad Street, are also 50 feet wide. There were 4 squares of 8 acres each, one at each corner of the city, originally reserved for public uses: and in the centre of the city, at the intersection of Market Street and Broad Street, is a square of 10 acres, reserved in like manner, to be planted with rows of trees for public walks. Most of the houses have a small garden and orchard; and from the river are cut small canals, equally agreeable and beneficial. The wharfs are fine and spacious; the principal one is 200 feet wide, the water of which is so deep, that a vessel of 500 tons burden may lay her broadside to it. The ware-houses are large, numerous, and commodious; and the docks for ship-building are so well adapted to their purposes, that 20 ships have been sometimes seen on the stocks at a time. This city was founded in 1682, by the celebrated William Penn, a Quaker, who, in 1701, granted a charter, incorporating the town under the government of a mayor, recorder, 8 aldermen, 12 common council-men, a sheriff, and clerk. The quakers, from this period, acquired a political consequence in the western hemisphere; while their brethren in Europe were, and still continue, excluded from sharing in the full right of citizenship, by partial and impolitic laws. Philadelphia, in 1749, numbered 2070 houses, and about 11,600 inhabitants. In 1792, it contained 5000 houses, in general, handsomely built of brick, and about 40,000 inhabitants. The state-house is a magnificent building erected in 1735. In 1787, an elegant court-house was built on the left of the state-house: and on the right a philosophical hall. South of the state-house is the public gaol, built of stone, one of the most elegant and secure structures of the kind in America. Here, likewise, is a public observatory, and several other public buildings. A university was founded here during the war: its funds were partly given by the state, and partly taken from the old college. The places set apart for public worship, are 26 for Christians of different denominations, and a synagogue for the Jews. In 786, 910 vessels were entered at the custom-house in Philadelphia; and in 1787, the number was 780. The principal exports are wheat, flour, Indian corn, flax-seed, beef, and rice. Philadelphia is 97 miles SW. of New York, 356 SW. of Boston, and 118 N. of the entrance of the Delaware into the Atlantic Ocean. Lat. 39 57. N. lon. 75. 8. W

PHILIP ISLANDS, two islands in the S. Pacific Ocean; discovered by Captain Hunter in 1791, and named after Arthur Philip, Esq. governor of New S. Wales. They are about 5 miles asunder; but almost joined together by a long sandy spit, above water, which reaches, for about two thirds of the distance from the easternmost, or largest island, to the most westerly, which is the smallest. They are covered with shrubs, have few tall trees on them, and the land is low. The eastern island is in lat. 8. 6. N. lon. 140. 3. E.

PHILIPPI, an ancient town of Macedonia, seated on the confines of Romania, 10 miles from the Gulf of Connessa, and 67 E. of Salonichi. It was enlarged by Philip, father of Alexander the Great, who gave it his own name. It was near this place, commonly called the plains of Philippi, where Cassius and Brutus, two of the assassins of Cæsar, were defeated by Mark Anthony and Augustus. It is an archbishop's see, but greatly decayed, and badly peopled. An amphitheatre, and several other monuments of its ancient grandeur, remain. Lat. 41. 13. N. lon. 24. 25. E.

PHILIPPINE, or MANILLA ISLANDS, a very large cluster, or group of islands, in the Eastern Indian Sea, first discovered by Magellan in 1521. They are said to be 1200 in number, of which 5 or 600 are of importance. The air is very hot and moist, and the soil fertile in rice, and many other useful vegetables and fruits. The trees are always green, and there are ripe fruits all the year. There are a great many wild beasts and birds, quite unknown in Europe. The inhabitants are not all of one original. The principal of these islands are Manilla, or Luconia; Mindanao; Samar, or Tanday, sometimes called Philippina; Masbate; Mindoro; Luban; Paragoia, or Paragua; Panay; Leyta; Bohol; Sebu, Cibau, or Zebu; Negro's Negro's Island; St. John's and Xolo, or Sooloo. In the year 1564, Don Louis de Valasco, viceroy of Mexico, sent Michael Lopez Delagatpes thither with a fleet from Mexico, and a force sufficient to make a conquest of these islands, which he named the Philippines, in honour of Philip II. then on the throne of Spain. They have ever since remained subject to that crown. Lat. from 6. 30. to 18. 15. N. lon. from 113. 13. to 127. 13. E.

PHILIPPINES, NEW, otherwise called PALAOS, islands in the E. Indian Sea, between the Moluccas, the old Philippines, and the Ladrones. They are said to be 87 in number, but they are little known to Europeans.

PICKERING, a town in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, seated in a vale, to which it gives name. It has an old castle in which a court is kept for the hearing of all causes under 40 shillings, in the district called the Honour or Liberty of Pickering. It is 26 miles NE. of York, and 223 N. by W. of London. A plentiful market for corn on Monday.

Pickering Grange, Leicest. near Hucklefot. Pikeflock, Shropshire, between Drayton and Newport. Picket, Dorset. in the parish of South Perrot. Picketh-End, Herts, NW. of Hemel Hempstead. Pickets, or Newbury, Herts. in Aldenham parish. Pickball, or Pickbill, Yorkthire, NW. of Thirsk. Pickbill, Middlesex, in the parish of Waltham Cross. Pickle-Scot, Shrop. near Shrewsbury. Pickmere, a river in Cheshire. Pickmere, Cheshire, by Great Budworth. Pickrells, Essex, near Fyfield. Pickwell, Leic. near Burrow, S. of Melton-Mowbray. Pickwell, or Pidekeswell, Devon. near Barnstaple. Pickwick, Wilts, NW. of Corsham. Pickworth, Linc. near Fokingham.

PICO, an island the most populous of the Azores, about 45 miles in circumference. The mountain which gives name to the island, and which terminates, like Teneriffe, in a peak, reputed by some writers equal to it in height, is filled with caverns, which vomit out flames, smoke, and ashes. The cattle here are various, numerous, and excellent in their several kinds; and the vine and its juice are in equal perfection. Besides cedar and other timber, there is a kind of wood, solid, hard, and veined, which, when finely polished, resembles a rich scarlet tabby. This tree is felled only for the king's use, and grows the more beautiful the longer it is kept. The inhabitants live wholly on the produce of the island, in great plenty and comfort. Lat. 38. 29. N. lon. 28. 21. W.

Picotes, Herts, near Bishop-Stortford. Pictan, Ches. on the Gowry, near Delamere Forest.

PICTS WALL, a famous barrier, built, by the Romans, against the Picts, of which some small remains are yet visible. It began at the entrance of Solway Frith, in Cumberland, and running by Carlisle, was continued from W. to E. across the N. end of the kingdom, as far as Newcastle, and ended at Tinnmouth. It was first built of earth by the Emperor Adrian, in 123; Severus afterwards built it of stone, with turrets at every mile; and Ætius, the Roman general, rebuilt it of brick, in 430. It was 8 feet thick, 12 feet high, and about 100 miles in length. There are many Roman coins and other antiquities found near it.

Piddinghoe, Suffex, near Newhaven. Piddington, E. of Durham. Piddington, Oxi. SE. of Bicester. Piddle, or Trent, a river of Dorset. which discharges itself into the sea a little below Wareham. PIEDMONT, a principality of Italy, so named from its being at the foot of the Alps; it is bounded on the N. by Savoy; on the E. by the duchies of Milan and Montferrat; on the S. by the county of Nice, and the territory of Genoa; and on the W. by France. It was formerly a part of Lombardy, but is now subject to the king of Sardinia. It is about 120 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. It contains many high mountains, among which are rich and fruitful valleys, as fertile and pleasant as any part of Italy. In the mountains are mines of several kinds, the forest afford a great deal of game, and the rivers abound with excellent fish. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in raw silk; and the country produces also plenty of corn, rice, wine, fruits, hemp, flax, and cattle. It contains a great number of cities and towns, almost united to each other by villages. There are above 30 rich abbeys in Piedmont, besides a great number of priories, commanderies, and monasteries. The principal rivers are the Po, the Tanaro, the Sturia, and the Doria. Turin is the capital of this country, and of all the dominions of the king of Sardinia.

S. of Bury. Pill, Cornw. SE. of Lestwithiel. Pill, Devon. near Yarnescomb.

PILKOPEN, a town of Samland, in Prussia, situated on a mountain, 30 miles N. of Königsberg. Here was formerly an idol, called Pilkob, which the ancient Prussians worshipped.

PILL, a small town of Somersetshire, with a road for shipping, at the mouth of the Avon, about 4 miles below Bristol. The most beautiful and romantic prospects are presented in continual and striking changes, in navigating the intervening channel. Here rich plantations and beautiful lawns rise upon the view; fertile fields and woods, in some parts clothe the hills to their very summits; while in others, the lofty rocks rising at once from the opposite sides of the river, present the awful appearance of the most tremendous precipices, and seem to mock every attempt of art to reduce their savage aspect. Yet, at the bases of these precipitous rocks, along the banks of this extraordinary channel, where the river and tide find their sinuous way through chasms and fissures of the mountains, and where the largest vessels appear diminutive from the grandeur and sublimity of the surrounding scenery, the seamen find the necessary accommodations for mooring, hauling, &c. in the massive bolts and rings, which have been fixed in the rocks.

Pill, Somerset. S. of Shepton Mallet. Pilamountain, Cornw. NW. of Crantock St. Michael. Pilland, Devonshire, in Pilton parish. Pillaton, Cornwall, by Liver river, SE. of St. Ives. Pillaton-Hall, Staffordshire, between Penkridge and Cannock.

PILLAU, a considerable sea-port of Samland, in Prussia, with broad strait streets, and houses built and furnished in the Dutch taste. It is defended by strong, handsome, and regular fortifications, and has a good harbour. Vessels of great burden take in their loading here, as there is not sufficient depth of water to carry them up to Königsberg. It is situated on a tongue of land, which projects into the Baltic, at the entrance of the Frisch Haff, 22 miles SW. of Königsberg.

Pill-Bridge, Somers. over the Ivel, near Ilchester. Pillerton, Nether and Over, Warwick. SW. of Kingston. Pillesdon, Dorset. SW. of Beminter. Pillesgate, Northamptonshire, near Burghley House. Pilley, Hants, in the New Forest. Pilling-Hall, and Moss, Lancashire, between Garstang and the sea. In 1745, a part of Pilling-Moss was observed to rise to a surprising height; after a short time it sunk as much below the level, and moved slowly towards the S. side, and in half an hour's time it covered 20 acres of land. A man going over the Moss, eastward, when it began to move, perceiving, to his great astonishment, that the ground under his feet moved southward, he turned back speedily, and escaped being swallowed up. A family was driven out of their dwelling-house, which was quite surrounded, and tumbled down. The improved land adjoining that part of the Moss which moved, was a concave, circular tract, of nearly 100 acres; and this was well nigh filled up with moss and water, to the depth, it was thought, in some parts, of five yards.

Pilltown, in Waterford, Munster.

PILNITZ, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony. It is 7 miles SE. of Dresden.

PISA, an ancient, large, and handsome city of Italy, in Tuscany, and capital of the Pisano, with a university. The town is seated on the river Arno, 10 miles distant from the sea, in a very fertile plain. The river runs through Pisa, and over it are three bridges, of which that in the middle is constructed with marble. The city does not contain at present above 16,000 inhabitants, although they were computed formerly at 100,000; and grass is said to grow in the principal streets. The cathedral is a magnificent structure, and on the right side of the choir, is the leaning tower, so much talked of. The grand duke's palace, and the exchange, are magnificent buildings, worth notice. The Pisans were formerly a free, commercial people, and maintained long and bloody wars against the Florentines, who at last subdued them. The neighbourhood of Leghorn, formerly of little or no trade, but now the chief port in the Mediterranean, has contributed greatly to the decay of Pisa. Between Pisa and Leghorn is a canal 16 Italian miles in length. It is 10 miles N. of Leghorn. Lat. 43. 43. N. lon. 10. 17. E.

PISANO, a territory of Italy, and one of the finest countries in Tuscany. It lies along the Mediterranean sea, and is about 47 miles in length, and 25 in breadth.

PISCATAWAY, or PISCATAQUAY, a river of N. America, which runs into the Atlantic, between the district of Main and New Hampshire; its mouth is 60 miles N. of Boston: also a town of Virginia, and a town of Maryland.

PISCO, a town of Peru, in the audience of Lima, with a road well sheltered from the usual winds, and capacious enough to hold a royal navy. Here are about 300 families, among whom there are few whites. It is seated in a country fertile in excellent fruits and good wine, which they send to the rest of the Spanish settlements, about one mile from the sea, (formerly it was on the coast,) and 110 SSE. of Lima.

PISELLO, the most northern cape of Natolia, in Asia, which projects into the Black Sea, opposite the Crimea.

Pisford, Northamp. between Northampton and Harborough.

PISHOUR. See PEISHORE.

Pishill, or Pushill, Oxfordshire, SE. of Britwell. Pissingford Bridge, Essex, over the Roding, near Stapleford. Pislock, Kent, near Rodmersham.

PISTOYA, a handsome and considerable town of Tuscany, with a bishop's see. It contains 27 churches, and 26 convents, besides palaces; the streets are large and handsome, the houses being generally well-built; but notwithstanding this, it is almost deserted, in comparison of what it was formerly; for there are now only 5000 inhabitants. These are loaded with taxes, and mostly very poor. Here is an Academy of Sciences, founded in 1745. It is seated near the river Stella, 20 miles NW. of Florence.

Pisfre, Suffolk, near Ludham.

PITCAITLY WELLS, saline springs, near Perth, in Scotland, whose waters are deemed beneficial in scorbutic cases.

PITTENWEEM, a sea-port of Fifeshire, seated on the N. coast of the Frith of Forth, 21 miles NE. of Edinburgh.

Pitton, Wiltshire, between Winterflow and Clarendon Park.

PITTSBURGH, or FORT-PITT, a town of Pennsylvania, beautifully situated on the western side of the Allegany mountains, on a point of land near the confluence of the rivers Allegany and Monongahela. The town is laid out on William Penn's plan; is a thoroughfare for the vast number of travellers from the eastern and middle states to the settlements on the Ohio: and increases greatly. This was formerly a French fort, called Du Quesne, but was abandoned by their troops in 1758, on the approach of General Forbes, and its name changed to that of Pitt, in honour to the illustrious minister by whom the war was then directed. At this place, the Allegany first takes the name of Ohio. It is 320 miles W. of Philadelphia. Lat. 40. 26. N. lon. 79. 48. W.

PITTSFIELD, a town of Massachusetts.

PITTSYLVANIA, a town and county of Virginia.

Place-House, Kent, near Greane Island.

PLACENTIA, a sea-port of N. America, in Newfoundland, with a harbour, much frequented by ships employed in the cod fishery. The entrance of it, however, is so narrow, that only one ship can pass at a time, but the water is deep enough for the largest, and it is capacious enough to hold 150 sail, which can fish there, secure against all winds, and as quietly as in a river. Near it is the Great Strand, a drying place for fish, lying between two very steep hills, and large enough to dry fish sufficient to load three score vessels. There is also another called the Little Strand. It is seated on a bay on the S. part of the island, in lat. 47. 15. N. lon. 55. 10. W.

PLACENZA, or PIACENZA, a populous town of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a citadel. The public buildings, squares, and fountains, are beautiful, the streets are broad and straight, and one, in particular, called the Stradone, is reckoned the largest and handiomest in Italy, being 3000 feet in length. It contains, besides the cathedral, 1 collegiate, 12 parochial, and 38 other churches; 8 abbeys, 16 convents, and a university, with about 20,000 inhabitants, of whom 2000 are ecclesiastics. It is pleasantly situated in a well-cultivated country, on the river Po, 32 miles NW. of Parma.

PLACENZA, THE DUCHY OF, extends about 30 miles long from N. to S. and from 8 to 15 broad from E. to W. and is politically annexed to the duchy of Parma. It is very fertile and populous, and contains mines of iron, copper, and vitriol, with salt springs, from which they make very white salt. Its principal rivers are the Trebia and Nurra.

PLASENTIA, a town of Guipuscoa.

Plashy-Castle, Essex, on the Western side of the county, SE. of High-Easter.

It was the seat of the High Constable of England, from the earliest times of that office to the year 1400. At present nothing remains of this fortress but a mount, bounded by a high rampart and ditch on the W. side, a brick bridge over it, and part of a gate.

PLASSENDAL, a fortress 3 miles E. of Ostend.

PLASSEY, THE PLAINS OF, in Hindoostan Proper, and in the soubah of Bengal, distant from Moorhedabad about 25 miles S. and from Calcutta 70 N. Near this place, Colonel Clive, in 1757, totally defeated the vast army of the nabob Surajah Dowlah; a victory which laid the foundation of the present British empire in India.

PLATA, an island on the coast of Quito, in Peru, surrounded by inaccessible rocks. It is about 5 miles long, and 4 broad.

PLATA, a rich and populous town of Peru, capital of the province of Los Charcas, with an audience. It has mines of silver, which they have left off working, since those of Potosi have been discovered. It is seated on the river Chiriquio, 500 miles SE. of Cusco. Lat. 19. 16. S. lon. 63. 40. W.

PLATA, or RIO-DE LA PLATA, a large river of S. America, which is formed by the union of the three great rivers, the Paraguay, Uruguay, and Parana. It was discovered in 1515, by Juan Diaz de Solis, a Spanish navigator, who imprudently going ashore with 10 men, they were all murdered by the savages. It crosses Paraguay, and enters the Southern Ocean, in lat. 35. S. It is 150 miles broad at its mouth; at Monte Video, above 100 miles higher up the river, the land is not to be discerned on either shore, when a vessel is in the middle of the channel, and at Buenos Ayres, 200 miles higher still, the opposite shore is not to be discerned from that town. This river, for near 200 leagues (from the conflux of the Paraguay and Parana, to its mouth) is interspersed with delightful islands; it abounds with surprising plenty and variety of fish, the water is clear, sweet, and wholesome, and the banks are frequented by a great number of very beautiful birds. It sometimes overflows its banks, and fertilizes the adjoining lands, like those of Egypt.

PLATA, LA, a province and archbishopric of S. America, in the government of Buenos Ayres. It is divided into 14 jurisdictions, and is situated on both sides the river Plata, extending 200 leagues from N. to S. and 100 from E. to W. The climate is very moderate and healthy, but the country is generally infested by serpents.

W. of Belvoir-Castle. Plurinden, Kent, near Wood-Church.

PLURS, or PIURO, formerly a large and flourishing town of the Grisons country, containing three churches, many large houses, a stone bridge over the river Maira; but it was totally overwhelmed by the fall of Mount Conto, under which it was imprudently built, on August 25, 1618. When this terrible catastrophe happened, the cloud of dust and rubbish was so great, as to cover the heavens like smoke, and even to extend as far as Chiavenna, from which town the spot, formerly occupied by Plurs, is about four miles distant. Parts of the ancient walls, and the ruins of a country-house, are, at present, the only remains of its former existence.

Plush, Dorset. by Buckland-Newton. Plusterwyne, Gloucester. in Woolaston parish.

PLUVIERS, or PITHIVIERS, a town in the dept. of the Loiret, 20 miles ENE. of Orleans.

Plym, a river of Devonshire, which rises in Shepiston parish, and after a course of 7 miles, becomes navigable for small vessels near Plympton; two miles below which, it runs into Plymouth Sound.

PLYMOUTH*, a large and populous sea-port of Devonshire, from a mere fishing town is become one of the largest in the county, and one of the chief naval magazines in the kingdom, owing to its excellent port or harbour, which is capable of safely containing 1000 sail. There are, properly speaking, however, 3 harbours, viz. Catwater, Sutton, Pool, and Hamoaze. The first is the mouth of the Plym, and affords a safe and commodious harbour for merchants' ships, but is seldom entered by ships of war. The second is frequented by merchant ships only, and is almost surrounded by the houses of the town. It is in itself well calculated to give complete protection to such ships as are moored in it, and has lately been farther secured by an extensive pier. The third inlet, which is the mouth of the Tamar, is the harbour for the reception of the British navy, being fitted out with moorings for near a hundred sail, and having good anchorage for a much greater number. It is defended by a fort on St. Nicholas Island, and other forts, mounted with near 300 guns, and particularly by a citadel, erected in the reign of Charles II. between the sea and the town, which contains a large storehouse, and 5 regular bastions. This last is situated on the hill, called the Haw, which overlooks the town, and is a good land-mark for mariners. What is called THE DOCK, is a separate town, situated about 2 miles up the Hamoaze, and is now nearly as large as Plymouth itself. Here are two docks, the one wet, the other dry, built in the reign of William III. and two others, which have been built since, hewn out of a mine of slate, and lined with Portland stone. Plymouth Dock is furnished with large magazines, storehouses, &c. containing arms, stores, and all things necessary to equip a fleet. Here are also spacious and commodious barracks, for the marines, with houses for the officers, clerks, &c. The town is well supplied with fresh water, first brought hither, from a place 7 miles off, at the coast of Sir Francis Drake. It has a good pilchard fishery, drives a considerable trade to the Straits, and to Newfoundland, and is seated between the mouths of the rivers Plym and Tamar, 43 miles SW. of Exeter, and 216 W. by S. of London. Lat. 50. 22. N. lon. 4. 10. W. Markets on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

PLYMOUTH, a sea-port of Massachusetts, in N. America, seated at the S. end of Plymouth-Bay, 15 miles SE. of Boston. It is the first town that was built in New England.

PLYMPTON, a populous town of Devonshire, seated on a stream, which about a mile below, runs into the river Plym, 5 miles E. of Plymouth, and 218 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Plympton, St. Mary's, near Plympton. Plymtree, Devon. E. of Bradninch.

PLYNNIMON, or SNOWDON, a very high high mountain in Cardiganshire, on the borders of Montgomeryshire. On its E. side rise the Severn and Wye; and from the W. side flow the Ryddal and Ystwith.

Po, a large and celebrated river of Italy, which has its source at mount Viso, in Piedmont. It runs through Monferrat, the Milanese, and Mantua; thence it passes to the borders of the Parmesan, and a part of the Modenese; and having entered the Ferrarese, it divides itself at Ficheruolo, and enters the Adriatic by a number of mouths. It passes by Moncalier, Turin, Casal, Cremona, Ferrara, &c. In its course it receives several rivers, and often overflows its banks, doing a great deal of damage; the reason of which is, that most of those rivers descend from the Alps, and are increased by the melting of the snow.

Pockley, Yorks. NE. of Helmsley.

POCKLINGTON, a town of the E. Riding of Yorkshire, seated on a stream which falls into the Derwent, 14 miles SE. of York, and 196 N. by W. of London. Market on Saturday.

POIRINO, or POVERINO, a town of Chieri, Piedmont, 15 miles SE. of Turin.

POISSY, a town in the department of Seine and Oise, seated near the edge of the forest of St. Germain, 3 miles NNW. of St. Germain.

POITIERS, an ancient town, capital of the department of Vienne. It would be one of the most considerable places in France, were its population in proportion to its extent; but it includes a number of gardens and fields within its circuit; and the inhabitants are estimated at 21,000. It has several Roman antiquities, particularly an amphi theatre, which is partly demolished. There is also a triumphal arch, which serves as a gate to the great street. The principal manufactures are stockings, woollen caps, gloves, and combs. Vipers are found in the environs in such numbers, that they are exported even to Venice, to make treacle. In 1856, a memorable battle was fought near this town, between the English and French, in which the latter were defeated. The English army, which amounted to only 16,000 men, was commanded by Edward the Black Prince; that of the enemy, commanded by King John, was estimated at 60,000. King John and his son Philip were both taken prisoners and brought to England. This town is seated on a hill, on the river Clain, 52 miles SSW. of Tours.

POITOU, a ci-devant province of France, lying S. of the Loire. E. of the sea, and W. of Marche and Berry; it is fertile in corn and wine, and feeds a great number of cattle, particularly mules. It now forms the three departments of Vendee, Vienne, and the Two Sevres.

Pokenbourn, Cornwall, near St. Earth.

POLACHIA. See PODLACHIA.

POLAND, a large country of Europe, bounded on the W. by Pomerania, Silesia lesia, and Moravia; on the S. by Hungary and Moldavia; on the N. by Prussia, Courland, and Russia; and on the E. by Russia. Poland, in its utmost latitude, included formerly 13 provinces; viz. Great Poland, containing the palatinates of Posenia, Kalisz, Siradia, Leuciecz, and Rawa; Cujavia, containing the palatinates of Brzeskic and Wladislaw; Maffovia, containing the palatinates of Cracow, Sandomir, and Lublin; Podlachia, or the palatinate of Bielsk; Little or Red Russia, containing the palatinates of Chelm, Belez, and Lemburg, Podolia and Kiof, containing the palatinates of Podolia and Bracklaw; the palatinate of Kiob and Volhinia. Besides these, Lithuania has been considered as a part of Poland; as likewise Samogitia and even Courland. The late government was monarchical and aristocratical; all the acts of state being in the name of "the king and republic of Poland." The king was the only elective sovereign in Europe: he was chosen by a general diet, called together by the archbishop of Gnesna, who is the chief minister of the republic during the interregnum. After his coronation, the king might dispose of the vacant benefices, and the offices both civil and military. He had a settled revenue of 140,000*l.* a year, but could not, by his own authority, raise any new taxes, or change any law. The aristocracy consisted in the senate and general diet. The senate was composed of the bishops, great officers, palatines, and governors of towns, who, with the king, regulated the affairs of the kingdom, so as to prevent him from doing any thing against the liberty of the country. The general diets, which are assemblies of all the nobility, met every two years, or oftener when there was any important affair on the carpet. The Poles, or Polanders, are large and robust. The peasants are poor, miserable, clownish, and mere slaves to the noblesse. The Polish towns are mostly built of wood, and the villages, consist of mean huts. The nobles have from time immemorial resided in their seats or castles, in their own villages, maintaining themselves by agriculture, breeding of bees, grazing, and hunting. Such was the state and constitution of Poland, before the memorable year 1772, when a partition of the country, projected by the king of Prussia, was effected by that monarch, in conjunction with the empress of Russia and Maria Theresa, empress of Germany. By this partition, Great Poland, Polish Prussia, (the cities of Dantzic and Thorn excepted) and part of Lithuania, were annexed to Prussia; Little Poland and Red Russia, to Austria; and the remaining, and greater part of Lithuania, Courland, Polesia, Podolia, Volhinia, and the palatinate of Kiof, were seized by Russia, so that only Samogitia, Maffovia, and Podlachia, were left to constitute the kingdom of Poland. Of these dismembered countries the Russian part is the largest, the Austrian the most populous, and the Prussian, the most commercial. The population of the whole amounts to near 5,000,000; the first containing 1,500,000, the second 2,500,000, and the third 860,000. The three partitioning powers, moreover, forcibly effected a great change in the constitution. By this the house of Saxony, and all foreign princes, who might be likely to give weight to Poland by their hereditary dominions, were rendered incapable of filling the throne; the faintest prospect of an hereditary sovereignty was removed; the exorbitant privileges of the equestrian order were confirmed in their utmost latitude; and the prerogatives of the crown still further diminished. In 1791, the king and the nation, in concurrence, almost unanimously, and without any foreign intervention, established another constitution. By this the broils of an elective monarchy, by which Poland, on almost every vacancy of the throne, had been involved in the calamities of war, were avoided, the throne being declared hereditary, in the house of Saxony. The rights and privileges of all orders in the republic, (the king, the nobles, the citizens, and the peasants,) were alike equitably consulted. In a word, it was not, on the one hand, the haughty despot dictating a constitution to his people, nor on the other, a proud aristocracy, or a mad democracy, that wrested from their sovereign his just prerogatives; but it was the universal wish of the nation, the sentiment that inspired which, was universal happiness. A few of the nobility, however, discontented at the sacrifices of some of their privileges, repaired to the court of Russia; and their representations concurring with the ambitious views of the empress, she sent an army into Poland, under pretence of being guarantee of the constitution of 1772. Her interference was too powerful to be resisted, and this new constitution was overthrown. But the principal object for which the Russian army entered Poland was not yet attained. The empress had planned, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, a second partition of this unhappy country, which actually took place in 1793. By this the empress obtained nearly the remaining part of Lithuania, with the palatinates of Podolia, Podolia, Kiof, and Bratzlaw. Beside the voivodships, or provinces of Posen, Gnesen, Kalish, Siradia, Wielun, Lenschitz, Cujavia, Doozryn, Rawa, part of Plotzk, &c. with the city and monastery of Czestokow (the Loretto of Poland) and its rich treasures, the king of Prussia obtained the great object of his wishes, the cities of Dantzic and Thorn. Some attempts were made, by a few patriotic noblemen, to deliver their country from its oppressors, and they were at first successful; but the brave Kosciuszko being taken prisoner, and his army defeated, no further efforts were made. Kosciuszko was carried into Russia, and the king formally resigned his crown at Grodno, in 1795. Since then the country has undergone a farther partition, and is now entirely swallowed up by the rapacity of the dividers of the spoil. Poland therefore is at present a country, but no nation; and the indignant Pole, in reviewing its past history and present state, may exclaim with a sigh, "Such things were."—By the constitution, of 1772, the Romish religion is declared the established; but although the Dissidents continue excluded from the diet, the senate, and the permanent council, they are capable of sitting in the inferior courts of justice, and enjoy the free exercise of their religion. The universities of Poland, are Cracow, Wilna, and Posen. The air is generally cold, and they have but little wood; however, it yields such plenty of grain, that near 4000 vessels and floats, most of which are laden with corn, annually pass down the Vistula to Dantzic: 80 or 90,000 oxen are also driven every year out of Poland. They also export large quantities of leather, furs, hemp, flax, linseed, hops, saltpetre, honey, wax, tallow, hides, ship and house timber, pitch, pot-ash, horned cattle, horses, and other commodities, but these are greatly over-balanced by the imports; namely, wine, spices, cloths, silk, stuffs, fine linen, plate-copper, brass, steel, furs, &c. they have also mines of salt, of great depth, out of which they dig rock-salt. The principal rivers are the Dnieper, the Vistula, the Bug, the Dniemen, the Dnieister, and the Bog. Warsaw is the capital.

Polbrook, Northamp. by Oundle. Polder's Farm, Kent, near Sandwich. Pole, Cumberl. S. of Penrith. Pole, Kent, in Southfleet. Polehill, Herts, E. of Hodson.

POLOTSK, a town, capital of a government in Russian Lithuania, on the Duna, 168 miles SE. of Riga, by the government of which it is bounded on the NW.

Polperry, Cornw. a harbour between two hills, W. of Killagarth, by Talland Point, where plenty of fish are taken. Polres, Kent, in Harbledown parish. Polrudden, Cornwall, W. of Trewardreth Bay. Near it is dug the best freestone in the country. Under Polrudden-Hill is a deep cave. Pollden, Surry, near Mickleham and Leatherhead. Polgrave, Hants, between Farcham and Portsmouth.

Polsham,

Polsham, Somersetshire, SW. of Wells. Polsted, Suffolk, SW. of Hadley. Polsted, Surry, in Compton parish.

POLTEN, ST. or ST. HYPOLITE, a town in the archduchy of Austria.

Polterworgy, Cornwall, W. of Camel-ford. Poltimore, Devon. near Exeter. Polton's, Kent, near Ashe. Polverbach, S. of Shrewsbury. Polwhele, Cornwall, NE. of Truro.

POLYSTILLO. See ABDERA.

POMEGUE, one of the three small islands of Marseilles, near the island of If.

POMERANIA, a province of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, with the title of a duchy. On the N. it has the Baltic, on the E. Pomerania, and on the W. Mecklenburg. One part of it belongs to the king of Prussia, and the other to the Swedes. It is watered by several rivers, of which the Oder, the Pene, the Rega, the Persanet, the Wipper, the Stolp, and the Lebo, are the most considerable. The air is pretty cold, but compensated by the fertility of the soil, which abounds in pastures and corn, of which a great deal is transported into foreign countries. The geese are remarkably large; and in general, the dried Pomeranian geese, hams, sausages, and salmon, pass for the best in Germany. It is a flat country, about 250 miles in length, and 75 in breadth. It contains many lakes, woods, and forests, and has several good harbours, particularly Stetin and Stralsund. It is divided by the Oder, into the Hither and Farther Pomerania; and the river Pene, for a considerable part of its course, separates the territories of Sweden and Prussia in this duchy. Stetin is the capital of the Prussian part, and Stralsund of the Swedish.

POMERELIA, a late district of Poland, having Prussia on the E. Pomerania on the W. the Baltic on the N. and Poland on the S. It has been lately seized by the king of Prussia, and now forms a part of Southern Prussia. Dantzick and Stargard are the principal places.

Pomeroy, in Tyrone, Ulster.

Ponallon, Cornwall, E. of Bescastle.

Pond, Cornwall, near Plymouth. Pond, Middlesex, NE. of Hounslow. Ponder's-End, Middlesex, in Enfield parish, on the banks of the New River, near Edmonton.

PONDESTURIA, a town of Montserrat.

PONDICHERRY, a town of Hindoostan, about 4 leagues in extent, the houses of which are as regularly laid out as if it had been all built at once. The Europeans build with bricks, but the Indians use only wood, in the manner which we call lath and plaster. In 1693, this town was taken by the Dutch, who erected 7 regular bastions here, and other fine fortifications, so as to render it one of the most complete fortresses in India. It was ceded, however, to the French by the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697, (for the trifling sum of 5000*l.*) who, thereupon, made it the chief seat of their East-India Company. The English took it in 1761, and destroyed the fortifications, but restored it to the French by the treaty of Paris, in 1763. In 1793 it was again taken by the English. It is situated on the coast of Coromandel, 75 miles SSW. of Madras. Lat. 11. 56. N. lon. 80. 0. E.

PONDICO, a small uninhabited island of the Archipelago, 2 miles N. of Negropont.

Pond-Street, Middlesex, near Hampstead Ponds.

PONFERRADA, a town of Leon.

Ponghill, Podhill, or Pohill, Devon. N. of Crediton.

PONS, a town in the department of Lower Charente, with a mineral spring, 10 miles SSE. of Saintes.

PONS, ST. DE THOMIERS, a town in the dept. of Herault, seated in a valley, wherein are fine marble quarries, 21 miles NW. of Narbonne; also a town of Catalonia.

Pons Belli, Yorkshire, E. Riding near Aldby. Ponsonby, Cumberland, near Gosforth, by the river Calder. Pont, a river in Northumberland, which runs into the German Ocean at Blythe's Newk.

PONT-A-MOUSSON, a considerable town in the dept. of Meurthe. It had once a university, which was removed in 1768 to Nancy. It is seated on the river Moselle, which divides it into two parts, 12 miles NNW. of Nancy.

PONT-ARLIER, a town in the department of Doubs, seated on the river Doubs, near Mount Jura.

PONT-AUDEMER, a town in the department of the Eure, 13 miles NW. of Louviers, and 85 NW. of Paris.

PONT-DE-CE, a town in the department of Maine and Loire, seated on the river Loire, 3 miles SSW. of Angers.

PONT-DE-L'ARCHE, a town in the department of Eure, 5 miles N. of Louviers, and 62 NW. of Paris.

PONT-DE-VAUX, a town in the dept. of Ain, seated on the river Reffouffe, 16 miles NW. of Bourg-en-Bresse.

PONT-DE-VESLE, a town in the department of Ain, with a manufactory of stuffs, stuffs called Augustines, and also of tapestry for the coverings of arm-chairs and sofas, of the same kind as those of Augsburg. It is seated on the river Velle, 12 miles NNW. of Bourg.

PONT-DU-GARD. See GARD.

PONTE-DE-LIMA, a town of Douro, Portugal, seated on the river Lima, 13 miles NW. of Braga, and 190 N. of Lisbon.

PONTEBA, or PONTE IMPERIAL, a town of Carinthia;

PONTEBA VENETA, a town of Friuli.

PONTEFRACT, or POMFRET, in the time of the Saxons called KIRKBY, a town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, situated in a rich soil, noted for its nursery grounds, and large plantations of liquorice and skirworts. Its castle, now in ruins, has been the scene of various tragical events in the English history. Richard II. after being deposed, was starved or tormented to death here; and here Anthony, earl of Rivers, and Sir Richard Grey, were murdered by order of king Richard III. It is situated at the conflux of the rivers Aire and Dun, 22 miles SSW. of York, and 175 NNW. of London. A great show of horses begins on February 5. Market on Saturday.

Pontesbury, and Pontesford, Shropsh. on the Mele, SW. of Shrewsbury.

PONTE-STURA, a town of Montferat, seated at the confluence of the Stura and Po.

PONTE-VEDRA, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated almost at the mouth of the river Leris; it is famous for its fishery of sardines (a kind of pilchards) which makes its principal riches.

PONT-GIBAUT, a town in the dept. of Puy de Dome. Near this place is the village of Rore, with a silver mine, and a vinous fountain of mineral water. It is 10 miles WNW. of Clermont.

PONTHIEU, before the revolution, a small country in Picardy, situated between the rivers Canche and Somme.—Abbeville was the capital.

Pontiland, or Pont-Eland, Northumberland, 6 miles NW. of Newcastle.

PONTIVY, a small town in the dept. of Morbihan, with a manufacture of linen. It is seated on the river Blavet, 26 miles N. of Vannes.

PONT-L'EVEQUE, a town in the dept. of Calvados, seated on the river Tonque, 10 miles N. of Lisieux.

PONTOISE, a town in the department of Seine and Oise, built in the form of an amphitheatre. It was taken by the English in the year 1345 by a singular strata-gem. The ground being covered with snow, the assailants dressed themselves in white, with ladders painted white, and scaled the walls before the centinels could perceive their approach. Charles VII. however, retook it by storm in 1432. It is seated on an eminence, on the rivers Oise and Vienne, 17 miles NW. of Paris.

PONT-ORSON, a town in the dept. of the Channel, seated on the river Coesnon, with a tide harbour, near the sea, 20 miles SSE. of St. Malo.

PONT-REMOLI, a town of Tuscany.

PONT ST. ESPRIT, a small, ill-built town in the dept. of Gard. It is seated on the river Rhone, over which is a fine stone bridge, built in the middle of the thirteenth century; it consists of 19 great, and 4 small arches. The extreme lightness of the structure, compared with the depth, rapidity, and width of the river, fills the mind with astonishment. To facilitate the passage of the water in time of floods, apertures have been made through each pier, about 6 feet above the common level of the river; and to lessen the extreme rapidity of the Rhone, the bridge is not built in a right line, but in the form of a curve. Pont St. Esprit is 17 miles S. of Viviers.

PONT ST. MAXENCE, a town in the dept. of Oise, seated on the river Oise, 5 miles N. of Senlis.

PONT-SUR-SEINE, a town in the department of Aube, seated on the river Seine, 4 miles NNE. of Nogent-sur-Seine, and 55 SSE. of Paris.

PONTYPOOL, a town in Monmouthshire, noted for a manufactory of japaned ware. It is seated on the river Avon, which turns several mills for the working of iron plates, 15 miles SW. of Monmouth, and 146 W. by N. of London. Market on Saturday.

PONT-Y-PRIDD. See TAAFE.

PONZA, or PONTIA, a small island on the coast of Naples, in the Gulf of Gaeta, belonging to the duchy of Parma.

POOL, a town of Dorsetshire, consisting of about 1000 houses, mostly built of stone, but low. The barbour here is one of the best in the Channel for merchant ships, admitting vessels of 400 tons burden up to the quay, and the ground is every where soft. Pool rose first into consequence, when the ancient town of Wareham fell to decay. It now ranks pretty high among the English sea-ports, and its trade and population are rapidly increasing.

increasing. Two hundred and thirty fail of shipping, burden 21,301 tons, and employing about 1500 men, belong to this port. Of these, about 140 ships are employed in the foreign trade, and in the Newfoundland fishery, which is the principal branch of business here, as also to the Baltic, Norway, America, Portugal, Greenland, &c. and the remainder in its fine coasting trade, (particularly in corn and coals,) and in fishing. The customs, in 1770, amounted to 13,747l. Near the mouth of the harbour is a bank, from which vast quantities of oysters are carried, to be fattened in the creeks of Essex and the Thames. It is situated upon a peninsula, projecting into a capacious bay, called Luxford Lake, or Pool Harbour, which branches into many creeks, and forms several islands, 40 miles WSW. of Winchester, and 105 SW. of London. Markets on Monday and Thursday.

Pool, Devonshire, in Tiverton parish. Pool, Cornw. in Minhenoit parish. Pool, Yorkshire, E. of Otley. Pool, or Pole-Gains, Wilt. NE. of Malmbury.

POPAMADRE. SEE MADRE DE POPA.

POPAYAN, a province of Terra Firma, washed on the W. by the South Sea, and bounded on the E. by New Granada, and by Quito on the S. It is about 440 miles long, and from 70 to 240 broad. The temperature and soil vary according to the situation of the country, in the plains, or on the sides of the mountains. In some places it is rather cold than hot, and in others the reverse; while at Popayan, the capital, there is a perpetual spring throughout the year. It is more subject, however, to tempests of thunder and lightning than any other of the known parts of America, and frequent damages are done here by earthquakes. In general, the soil produces a great abundance of grain and fruits, and breeds vast numbers of cattle and sheep, some of which are sold in the towns, and others are driven to Quito. Popayan is one of the best trading countries in Terra Firma. It has a transitory commerce with Carthagena, when the galleons arrive there: as also a reciprocal one with Quito, sending thither horned cattle and mules, and receiving cloths and baize in return. Its active commerce consists in dried beef, salted pork, roll-tobacco, hogslard, rum, cotton, ribbons, and other small wares.

POPAYAN, the capital of the province of the same name, is the constant residence of the governor, who is always chief magistrate or corregidor. The magistracy, or corporation, as in all other cities of this country, consists of regidores, who are persons of distinction, with the corregidor at their head; and from them are annually chosen two ordinary alcades, for maintaining order in the city. Popayan is the see of a bishop, and contains several convents and a university. The inhabitants are about 25,000. It is 190 miles NNE. of Quito.

POPE, DOMINIONS OF THE, or the ECCLESIASTICAL STATE, a country of Italy, bounded on the N. by the territories of Venice, on the E. by the Adriatic; on the SE. by the kingdom of Naples; and on the S. and SW. by the Mediterranean, Tuscany, and Modena; extending from SW. to NE. 240 miles, and about 60 in its mean breadth. It is divided into the following provinces: the Campagna of Rome; St. Peter's Patrimony; Umbria, or Spoleto; Ancona; Urbino; Romagna; the Bolognese; the Ferrarese; the Orvietan; Sabina; duchy of Castro; county of Castello; and territory of Perugia. Some authors have observed, that considering the pope's dominions generally consist of a fertile and excellent soil; that his harbours, both on the Gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean, are advantageously situated for trade; that he receives considerable sums from Spain, Germany, &c. which might be supposed to be no small ease to his subjects; that his country is visited by foreigners of distinction, who cause much wealth to circulate; the pontifical government seems well calculated for happiness, and the country might be supposed to be very flourishing. But the very reverse of this is the case. The country is ill cultivated, and thin of inhabitants, the Bolognese alone excepted. Trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and were it not for the fertility of the soil, which furnishes the inhabitants with dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such, that they would be absolutely starved. This indolence is not wonderful, since they know, that the more they acquire, the more will be demanded of them. Their numerous holidays are great impediments to the exertions of industry; and the number of young sturdy beggars, who stroll about as pilgrims, instead of increasing the common stock by their industry, lie as a dead weight on their fellow-subjects. Various other causes might be mentioned, as the multitude of hospitals and convents; the inconceivable wealth which lies useless in these convents, and in the churches; the inquisition, and the rigour of the papal government. Hence it is, that in no part of Europe are to be found people more wretched than the pope's subjects. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independent head of the church, and invested with sovereignty over all Christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. His arrogant pretensions are so well known, that it is needless to expatiate upon them. The reformation begun by Luther dispelled the delusion in many parts of Europe; and the progress of learning, and the spirit of free enquiry, has enlightened many even of the Romish countries, where the papal political system is treated with contempt. The origin of this monstrous usurpation, which for ages held the Christian world in the most degrading subjection, belongs more properly to ecclesiastical history. The pope has the title of Holy Father, and Holiness, and he is elected at every vacancy, from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled his Eminence; and their number was fixed by Sixtus V. at 70, but this number is seldom complete. Every nation of the Roman Catholic religion has a cardinal for its protector. Beside the ecclesiastical state, the pope is possessed of the duchy of Benevento, in the kingdom of Naples, worth about 6000 crowns a year. The annual revenue of the pope is computed to be 8,700,000 scudi, or upward of 2,000,000l. sterling. This pontiff bears arms, and, as an emblem of his pastoral office, the crozier, or crook, forms a part of the insignia. His military force is inconsiderable. His body-guard consists of 40 Swiss, 75 cuirassiers, and 75 light horse. His naval force consists of a few galleys, stationed at Civita Vecchia. Rome is the capital.

POPERINGUE, a town of Flanders county, situated on a river of the same name, 6 miles NNW. of Ypres.

Pope's, Herts, in the parish of Hatfield. Bishop's. Pope's-Hall, Kent, near Hartlip. Pope's-Hole, Surry, on the river Wey, in Frensham parish. Pophall, Suffolk, W. of Haslemere. Popham, Hampshire, between Basingstoke and Oldstoke. Poplar, Middlesex, so called from the trees of that name with which it once abounded, is situated on the Thames, E. of Limehouse, in the parish of Stepney. It contains upwards of 1000 houses.

POPO, or PAPA, a territory of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, about 8 leagues in extent. The soil is flat and sandy, without either hills or trees, and the inhabitants have scarce any houses to dwell in, beside the king's village, which is situated in an island in the midst of a river. Their chief trade is in slaves.

Poppleton, Upper and Nether, Yorks. E. of Hesley-Moor. Popshall, Kent, near Coldred.

PORCAH, a Dutch town of Travancore, in Hindoostan, situated on the coast of Malabar, 75 miles NW. of Travancore.

PORCO, a town and jurisdiction of La Plata, in S. America, situated on the W. of Potosi, and extending about 20 leagues. Here is the mountain of Porco, from whose mine the Yncas extracted all the silver for their expences and ornaments; it was accordingly the first worked by the Spaniards after the conquest. It is about 25 leagues distant from the city of La Plata.

Porkellys, Cornwall, W. of Penryn. Porkington, Shropsh. NW. of Olwestry. Pork, Old, Durham, N. of Bishop-Aukland. Porkthorp, Yorkshire, W. of Kilham. Porlait, or Porloyd, a river in Carnarvonsh. Portland, alias Poringland, Great and Little, S. of Norwich.

PORLOCK, a town in Somersetshire, with a quay and small pier, and a few vessels usually employed in fetching coals and lime from Wales. In the centre of the bay is a decoy for catching wild-fowl. It is seated on the Bristol Channel, at the bottom bottom of a commodious bay, 14 miles N. by W. of Dulverton, and 167 W. of London. At present there are only three markets in a year, viz. on Thursday before May 12th, Thursday before October 9th, and Thursday before November 12th; but formerly a market was held here every Thursday.

PORRENTUI, a neat and populous town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, capital of the dominions of the bishop of Basle, and the principal place of his residence. The episcopal palace (which has been lately repaired and augmented) stands upon an eminence overlooking the town. It is 22 miles SW. of Basle.

PORSELOU, or PORSELOUC, a rich and commercial town of Siam, surrounded with bastions, constructed by some French engineers. It is situated on a large river which runs into the Gulph of Siam, in lat. 17. 48. N. and lon. 100. 49. E.

PORTLAND, a peninsula in Dorsetshire, 3 miles S. of Weymouth, nearly 7 miles round, and exceedingly strong both by nature and art. It is surrounded by inaccessible rocks, except at the landing place, where there is a strong castle, called Portland Castle, built by King Henry VIII. There is but one church in the island, and that stands so near the sea, that that it is often in danger from it. The whole peninsula is little more than one continued rock of white free-stone, about 9000 tons of which are exported annually. It was first brought into repute in the reign of James I. and is now used in London, Dublin, and other places, for building the finest structures. The inhabitants are about 1300.

PORTLAND, a sea port of N. America, capital of Cumberland county, in the province of Main. It is seated on a peninsula, on which formerly stood part of Falmouth, and has an excellent harbour.

Port-Ninian, one of the Copland Isles, in Down, Ulster.

PORTO. See OPORTO.

PORTO-BELLO, a sea-port town of Panama, with houses mostly built of wood, but, in some, the first story is of stone, and the remainder of wood. It is a very unhealthy place, and is inhabited chiefly by mulattoes. It consists of one principal street, with others crossing it; it has also two squares, a great church, and two convents. At the time of the great fair, however, it is one of the most populous places in the world, the merchants often paying 1000 crowns for lodging in a middling chamber, with a closet, during the fair, and four, five, or six thousand for a lodging in larger houses. Columbus discovered the harbour in 1502, and, from its extent, depth, and security, named it Porto-Bello, or the Fair Harbour. Its mouth is well defended by Fort St. Philip, or Iron Castle; and nearer the town is another large castle, and a small fort. All these were partly demolished, and the town was taken by Admiral Vernon, with only six ships of war, in 1739. It is situated on the northern coast of the isthmus of Darien, 60 miles N. of Panama. Lat. 9. 33. N. lon. 79. 45. W.

Portkeewet, Monm. SE. of Chepstow.

PORTO-LONGONE, a small, but strong sea-port town, on the SE. coast of the Isle of Elba, with a good harbour, and a fortress built upon a rock, almost inaccessible. The king of Naples puts a garrison here, though the place belongs to the prince of Piombino. It is 2 miles SE. of Porto Ferraio.

Porton, Wilts. between Newton-Tony and Salisbury. Porton, N. and S. Dorsetf. near Poorslock.

PORTO-PEDRO, a sea-port of Majorca.

PORTO-PRAYA, a town on the E. side of St. Jago, one of the Cape de Verd islands, situated on a sharp rock, in a bay of the same name. Here is a good harbour, seldom destitute of a considerable number of foreign shipping. The outward-bound Guinea and India ships, whether English, French, or Dutch, generally touch here for water and refreshments, but few of them call on their return to Europe. While the mariners and passengers are on shore, the whole coast resembles a fair, every place being filled with hogs, bullocks, fowls, goats, figs, plantains, and cocoa-nuts, which the natives exchange for shirts, drawers, handkerchiefs, breeches, hats, waistcoats, and all manner of clothing. There is a fort on the summit mit of a hill, that entirely commands the harbour, which, were it properly mounted with cannon, and sufficiently garrisoned, would be a place of great strength. Lat. 14. 54. N. lon. 28. 37. W.

PORTO-RICO. See JUAN-DE-PUERTO-RICO.

PORTO-SANTO, an island of the Atlantic, on the coast of Africa, the least of the Madeiras, not much exceeding 5 leagues in compass. It produces wheat and corn in abundance; it also breeds oxen, wild hogs, and rabbits in incredible numbers. The most valuable articles of commerce, however, are the gum, called dragon's blood, honey, wax, and fish. It has one good harbour, and good mooring in a bay, where ships going or returning from India, stop to rest and refresh, which, indeed, is all the trade the inhabitants enjoy. Lat. 32. 58. N. lon. 16. 20. W.

PORTO-SEGURO, a government on the coast of Brasil, in the jurisdiction of Bahia. It is a fertile country, and the capital, of the same name, is built on the top of a rock, at the mouth of a river, with a safe and convenient harbour, in lat. 16. 45. S.

PORTO-VECCHIO, a sea-port in a bay on the E. coast of Corsica. Lat. 41. 42. N.

PORTO VENERO, a sea port of Genoa.

 PORT-PATRICK, a sea-port of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, confined by the sea on one side, and on the other by overhanging rocks and hills. Formerly the harbour was a mere inlet between two ridges of rocks, which ran into the sea, and was only fit for receiving flat-bottomed boats; but now there is one of the finest quays in Britain erected here, with a reflecting lighthouse, and above a dozen trading vessels, of from 40 to 60 tons burden, sail and return regularly. A number of vessels also come occasionally from other ports. It is much noted for its ferry to Donaghadee, in Ireland, from which it is about 20 miles distant. It is computed that 11,000 head of cattle, and 2000 horses are annually imported from Ireland to this place. Here are four elegant packet-boats for the conveyance of the mail and the accommodation of passengers; and the mail coaches now go regularly from London and Edinburgh to Port-Patrick on the one side, and between Dublin and Donaghadee on the other. The imports and exports have greatly increased of late years. The population of the parish amounts to upwards of 1000. It is about 107 miles SW. of Edinburgh, and 487 NW. of London.

Port-Raman, situated in one of the Copper Islands, in Down, Ulster.

PORTREE, a town on the Island of Skye, one of the Scotch Hebrides. The inhabitants trade chiefly in black cattle, small horses, and kelp.

Port Renard, in Limerick, Munster.

PORT-ROYAL, a sea-port of Jamaica. It was once one of the finest and most flourishing sea-port towns in America, abounding in riches and trade, but on June 9, 1692, it was destroyed by a dreadful earthquake, which seemed to shake the very foundations of the island, and which buried nine-tenths of the town 8 fathoms under water; in 1702, it was laid in ashes by a terrible fire; in 1722, it was reduced to a heap of rubbish, by one of the most dreadful hurricanes and inundations of the sea ever known; and, in 1744, it again suffered greatly by a hurricane. Warned by these extraordinary calamities, which seemed to mark out this place as a spot devoted to destruction, the custom-house and public offices were removed by an act of assembly, and no market suffered to be held here for the future. It contains, at present, about 200 houses laid out in 3 handsome streets, with several cross lanes, a fine church, a navy-yard, an hospital, and barracks for a regiment of soldiers. It is built on a small neck of land, which juts out several miles into the sea, and is defended by a strong fort, kept in good repair, which has a line of near 100 pieces of cannon. The harbour is one of the best in the world, and 1000 ships may ride therein, secure from every wind that can blow. It is 6 miles SE. of Spanish-Town, and as much by water, but 20 by land, SW. of Kingston. Lat. 18. 0. N. lon. 76. 40. W.

PORT-ROYAL, an island on the coast of S. Carolina, the space between which and the neighbouring continent, forms one of the most commodious harbours in those parts. It is 12 miles in length, and 5 in breadth. The town on the N. shore is called Beaufort. Lat. 32. 24. N. lon. 80. 10. W.

PORT-ROYAL, in Nova-Scotia. See ANNAPOLIS.

PORT-SANDWICH, a harbour in the Island of Mallicollo, in the S. Sea.

Port St. Ann, in Down, Ulster.

PORT ST. MARY'S, a sea-port of Spain, in Andalusia. The English made a descent here in 1702, with a design to besiege Cadiz, but without success. It is 10 miles NE. of Cadiz.

Portsmouth, Hants, 4 miles from Portsmouth.

PORTSEA, an island of Hants, about 14 miles in circuit, between Portsmouth Harbour and Langstone Harbour. It is a low tract, separated from the main land by a shallow creek, over which is a bridge. At the SW. extremity of it is situated the town of Portsmouth; adjoining to which is the town of Portsea, built on Portsmouth-Common, on condition, that if the enemy should land, the houses were to be thrown down without compensation to the owners.

Portsham, Dorsetshire, 2 miles from Abbotsbury. Portsholm, or Portmead, near Huntingdon, encompassed with the Ouse. Portslade, Sussex, E. of New Shoreham.

Port Slaty, situated in one of the Copland islands, in Down, Ulster.

* PORTSMOUTH, a town of Hampshire, situated on the Island of Portsea. It was anciently defended by a wall of timber, covered with earth; a bastion to the NE.; and two forts of hewn stone at the mouth of the harbour, begun by Edward IV. and augmented by Henry VII. Queen Elizabeth fortified it with new works. King Charles II. directed great alterations, established new wet and dry docks, storehouses, rope-yards, &c. and raised several forts after the modern manner; which works were augmented in the reign of James II. Succeeding princes have made great additions since to their strength, extent, and magnificence, so that it is now justly considered as the most regular fortress in Britain. Within these few years, government has bought more ground for additional works, and it may be made impregnable by land as well as sea, since a shallow water may be brought quite round it. The least number of men employed continually in the yard is 1000. The docks and yards resemble distinct towns, &c. under a government separate from the garrison. Here is also a fine arsenal for laying up the cannon. The harbour is one of the finest in the world, as there is water sufficient for the largest ships; and it is so very capacious, that the whole English navy may ride here in safety. The principal branch runs up to Fareham; a second to Portchester; and a third to Portsea Bridge. Besides these branches, there are several rithes, or channels, where the small men of war ride at their moorings. Opposite the town is the spacious road of Spithead, where the men of war anchor when prepared for actual service. It has one church and two chapels, one in the garrison, and one in a part of the town, called the Common, for the use of the dock. It is 20 miles SE. of Winchester, and 72 SW. of London. Lat. 50. 47. N. lon. 1. 1. W. Markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of N. America, the largest in the state of New Hampshire, situated at the mouth of Piscataqua River. Its harbour, which is one of the finest on the continent, is well defended by nature both against storms and an enemy, and it has a light-house at the entrance. Also a town in Virginia, a town in N. Carolina, and a sea-port town on the W. coast of the island of Dominica, near the northern extremity.

PORTSOY, a handsome sea-port of Banffshire, about 6 miles N. of Cullen. It has several fishing and trading vessels, with some manufactures of snuff and sewing thread.

PORTUGAL, the most western country of Europe, about 400 miles in length, and 180 in its mean breadth, bounded on the W. and S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the E. and N. by Spain. Though Spain and Portugal are in the same climate, yet the air of the latter is much more temperate than that of the former on account of the neighbourhood of the sea. Corn is not very plentiful in this country, because the inhabitants do not attend much to husbandry; for this reason they import Indian corn from Africa, which is made use of by the peasants here instead of wheat. There is a great number of barren mountains; and yet they have plenty of olives, vineyards, oranges, lemons, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins. They have some horned cattle, whose flesh is generally lean and dry. They also make a great deal of salt with the sea water, especially in the Bay of St. Ubes, whence a great deal is exported. The Portuguese shipping little frequent the other countries of Europe or the Levant, their voyages lying rather to Brasil, and their different colonies on the coast of Africa, from which last they chiefly import negroes, gold, and ivory. They receive from their foreign settlements sugar, tobacco, rum, cotton, indigo, hides, Brasil and other woods for dying, and many excellent drugs. Beside these, they import gold and silver, with diamonds and other precious stones from America. The annual produce of gold in Brasil, may be estimated, without exaggeration, at near two millions sterling. The fleet which goes every year to Brasil, generally sails and returns in 7 or 8 months.

months. They trade likewise to their East India settlements of Goa, Diu, and Macao; but this traffic, once so important and considerable, is now greatly declined. The horses of Portugal were formerly in great esteem, but the inhabitants are now so fond of mules, that horses are scarce. Towards the frontiers of Spain there are mountains in which they formerly got gold and silver; and the river Tajo was anciently noted for its golden sands; but now the Portuguese do not think them worth minding. There are also mines of iron, tin, lead, with some quarries of marble. The principal rivers are the Tajo, the Douro, the Guadiana, the Minho, the Mondego, and the Lima. Portugal is divided into six provinces, namely, Estramadura, Beira, Entre Minho e Douro, Tral-os-Montes, Alentejo, and Algarva. The government is monarchical; but the royal authority is bounded by the fundamental laws of the kingdom; for the sovereign cannot raise any more taxes than were settled in 1674. Portugal was anciently called Lusitania; but by a writing now extant, dated 1069, it appears that the name of Portugal was then used for the whole kingdom. It is probably derived from a town on the river Douro, anciently called Cale, opposite to which the inhabitants afterwards built another town, naming it Portucale, now the flourishing city of Oporto. In Portugal are about 900 convents, mostly very rich; it also contains one patriarch, three archbishops, and ten bishops, besides others in America, Africa, the East Indies, &c. The Portuguese are indolent, and so fond of luxury, that they mostly spend their wealth in the purchase of foreign merchandise. Lisbon is the capital.

Portumna, in Galway, Connaught, 74 miles from Dublin. It is seated on the river Shannon, where it falls into Lough Derg.

Portwood-Hall, Cheshire, by Stockport.

Poscomb, between Thame and Watlington.

POSEGA, a town and county of Sclavonia.

Poside, Derbyshire, in the High Peak.

Posiers, Kent, near Borden. Poslingford, Suffolk, N. of Clare.

POSNANIA, or POSEN, a town and palatinate of Great Poland, annexed to the Prussian dominions in 1773. It contains several churches and convents, and has a considerable trade with Germany, being a staple town. The bishop's see is the most ancient in Poland. It is seated on the river Warta, 27 miles W. of Gnesna, and 145 WNW. of Warsaw.

Posterwood, or Postern, Derbys. near Belper. Post-Down, Hants. Post-House, Yorks. N. of Wakefield. Postling, Kent, N. of Hithe. Postlip, Glouc. in Winchcombe parish. Poston, Heref. near Peter-Church. Postwick, SE. of Norwich, on the Yare.

POTOMACK, a fine river of N. America, navigable near 300 miles. It rises in the NW. part of Virginia, and separates that state from Maryland, through almost its whole course, till it enters the Chesapeake, between Smith's Point and Point Look-out.

POTOSI, a town of S. America, in the jurisdiction of La Plata, and government of Buenos Ayres, containing about 60,000 Indians, and 10,000 Spaniards, many of whom are possessed of immense fortunes. There is the best silver-mine in all America, in a mountain in form of a sugar-loaf, the colour of whose soil is of a reddish brown. Silver has been as common in this place as iron is in Europe; however, it is almost exhausted; at least they get but little from it, in comparison of what they did formerly; and the mountain itself is said to be little better than a shell. The country about this place is so naked and barren, that they are obliged to get their provisions from the neighbouring provinces. It appears from the public accounts, that silver to the value of 9,282,382l. sterling, has been annually taken from these mines. Here is always a great demand for European goods. It is seated at the bottom of the mountain of Potosi, 170 miles SSE. of La Paz.

Potterels, Herts, near N. Mims. Pottern, Wilts, near Devizes. Potter-Newton, Yorks. well watered and pleasantly situated, though in a sandy, barren soil, 12 miles E. of Bedford, and 48 N. by W. of London. Market on Saturday.

Pottrase, a river in Cumberland, that runs into the Irthing above Over Denton.

POTZDAM, a town in the Middle Marche of Brandenburg, Upper Saxony, partly rebuilt by the late king of Prussia, for the owners, with new, regular, and grand buildings, instead of the old houses which formerly stood there. The palace, or pleasure seat, of the king of Prussia, is very curious and magnificent, and built upon a beautiful spot. Here is also an important foundry for arms, and some manufactures of silk, velvet, and other stuffs. Its garrison is generally composed of the king's guards, both horse and foot, with other battalions. Potzdam is seated upon an island, about 10 miles in circumference, which is formed by the rivers Spree and Havel, 15 miles SW. of Berlin.

POUGHKEPPSIE, a town of N. America, capital of Dutchess County, in the state of New York. It is situated on the E. side of Hudson's River, N. of Wappinger's Creek.

PRADES, a town in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, seated on the river Tet, 22 miles WSW. of Perpignan.

PRAGILAS, a town of Piedmont.

PRAGUE, a city of Germany, in the circle of Schlan, capital of the kingdom of Bohemia. It comprehends three towns, the Old, the New, and the Little Town, and is about 15 miles in circumference, being built upon seven mountains. Here are 92 churches and chapels, with about 40 cloisters. The inhabitants are estimated at 83,000, of whom about 12,000 are Jews. The river Moldaw, or Muldaw, runs through the town, and separates the Old from the New. There is a handsome bridge of 18 arches over it, built with freestone, 1770 feet in length, and 35 in breadth, having a strong tower at each end. The Old Town is very populous; the houses are wholly built of stone, for the most part, three stories high, and the streets, in general, narrow. There are two large structures, one of which is the old palace, where the ancient kings resided. The finest ornament of this part is the university, frequented by a great number of students. The Jesuits had a magnificent college here; and it is here the Jews reside, where they have 9 synagogues. The New Town surrounds the Old, and contains fine structures, handsome gardens, and large streets. The little town was built on the spot where where there was a forest; and there is a poplar-tree yet standing, which they affirm has grown there about 1000 years. The principal buildings are the Royal Castle, the Radshin, and the Strawhouse. The first of which contains a hall, 100 paces long, and 40 broad, without any pillar to support the roof. The country around it is fertile and pleasant. Prague was taken by storm, by the French, under Marshals Belleisle and Broglio, in 1741, but they were soon cooped up by the Austrian forces, and after enduring great hardships from famine, and making a brave defence, they partly found means to escape, and partly obtained a free retreat. In 1744, the Prussians made themselves masters of this capital, but quitted it again the same year. They besieged it again in 1757, but without success. It is 75 miles SSE. of Dresden, 158 SSE. of Berlin, and 235 NNW. of Vienna. Lat. 50. 5. N. lon. 14. 50. E.

PRINCE OF WALES'S ISLANDS, a congeries of islands, supposed to extend from New Holland to New Guinea. They were discovered by Captain Cook.

PRINCE'S

PRINCE'S ISLAND, an island on the W. coast of Africa, 90 miles in circumference, discovered in 1471. The air is wholesome, and the land fertile, in the various tropical productions. On the N. coast is a town, containing about 200 houses, and a good harbour. It is subject to Portugal. Lat. 1. 49. N. lon. 6. 40. E.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, a small island in the Straits of Sunda, near the NW. extremity of the Island of Java. It is very woody, and not much cleared. The inhabitants are Javanese, whose rajah is subject to the sultan of Bantam; and their customs are similar to those of the natives about Batavia. It is visited by European ships for wood, water, and turtle, which latter is got here in great abundance. The best anchoring place is in lat. 6. 41. S. lon. 105. 17. E.

Princethorp, Warwicksh. two miles S. of Wolfston, near Dunsmore-Heath.

PRINCETON, a village in the state of New Jersey, noted for a large college, a handsome stone edifice, founded in 1738, and called Nassau Hall. It is 52 miles from New York, and 43 from Philadelphia.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY'S ISLAND, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, lying WNW. of Tench's Island. It is pretty high, and seems to be about 70 miles in circuit. It is well wooded, and there were a number of clear cultivated tracts, on which something was growing that had the appearance of Indian corn, or sugarcane. Several large and well-constructed houses were seen among the trees. This island has a luxuriant and picturesque appearance, and is supposed to be fertile and well peopled. The natives were quite naked, and seem to be the same sort of people of those of the Tench's Island, and their canoes of the same construction. It was discovered by Captains Ball and King in 1790. A high mountain, rising in the centre of it, was called Mount Philip. Lat. 1. 32. S. lon. 149. 30. E.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY'S ISLAND, an island of the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis in 1767. Lat. 19. 0. S. lon. 141. 6. 6. W.

PRINCE WILLIAM'S SOUND, an inlet on the NW. coast of America, discovered by Captain Cook in 1778. The men, women, and children, are here all clothed alike. Their ordinary dress is a sort of close robe, which sometimes reaches only to the knees, but generally down to the ankles. They are composed of the skins of various animals, and are commonly worn with the hairy side outward. The men often paint their faces of a black colour, and of a bright red, and sometimes of a blueish or leaden hue; but not in any regular figure. The women puncture or stain the chin with black, that comes to a point in each of their cheeks. Their canoes are of two sorts; the one large and open, the other small and covered. The framing consists of slender pieces of wood, and the outside is composed of the skins of seals, or other sea animals, stretched over the wood. Their weapons, and implements for hunting and fishing, are the same as those used by the Esquimaux. Our knowledge of the animals of this part of the continent is entirely derived from the skins that were brought by the natives for sale. These were principally of bears, common and pine martins, sea-otters, seals, racoons, small ermines, foxes, and the whitish cat, or lynx. The birds found here were the halcyon, or great kingfisher, which had fine black colours; the white-headed eagle; the humming-bird; geese; small ducks; and black sea-pyees, with red bills, like those they had seen at Van Diemen's Land and New Zealand. Few vegetables of any kind were observed here, and the trees that chiefly grew about the Sound were the Canadian spruce pine, some of which are of considerable size. Lat. 60. to 61. N. lon. 147. 0. W.

PRINCIPATO CITRA, a province of Naples, bounded on the N. by Lavoura and Principato Ultra; on the E. by Basilicata; and on the S. and W. by the Mediterranean; about 65 miles in length, and from 12 to 30 in breadth. The soil is fertile in wine, corn, oil, saffron, and silk; and they have several mineral springs. The principal towns are Salerno, Amalfi, and Sorrento.

PRINCIPATO ULTRA, a province of Naples, bounded on the N. by Lavoura and Molise; on the E. by Basilicata and Capitanata; on the S. by Principato Citra; and on the W. by Lavoura; about 50 miles in extent from E. to W. and 30 from N. to S. The principal towns are Benevento, Avelino, and Conza.

It has a manufacture of cotton.

PROVENCE, a ci-devant province of France, on the Mediterranean, having Piedmont on the E.; and the Rhone, and the country of Venaissin, on the W. The air is very different; for near the Alps it is cold, on the sea-coast hot, and in the middle temperate. In that which was called Upper Provence, the soil is fertile in corn and pastures: but in the lower, it is dry and sandy. It produces, however, wine, oil, figs, almonds, prunes, and pomegranates, especially along the sea-coast from Toulon to Nice. There are orange and citron trees in the open fields; and many medicinal plants, mineral-waters, and mines of several kinds. It now forms the departments of Var, the Lower Alps, and the Mouths of the Rhone.

PROVIDENCE, the most flourishing town in the state of Rhode Island, has a considerable manufactory of cloth, and a large foreign and domestic trade. It contains 700 houses, and upwards of 4300 inhabitants. Here is a noble college called Rhode Island College; also an elegant church for the Baptists; two for the Congregationalists; with others for other denominations. Providence is seated on both sides of the river of the same name, about 36 miles SW. of Boston.

PROVIDENCE, a river of N. America, which rises in Massachusetts, and falls into Bristol Bay a little below the town of Providence, in Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, one of the Bahama Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, the second in point of size, but the best and most improved of those that are planted by the English. They import provisions from Carolina, which they lay up in store-houses, for the use of such ships as put in here. The island produces peas, Indian wheat, salt, and Braslette wood; and fish of various kinds are found in the greatest plenty on the coast. It is about 30 miles in length, and 8 in breadth. Lat. 25. 2. N. lon. 77. 20. W.

PROVIDENCE, a small island in the Atlantic Ocean, which the English buccanniers formerly fortified, and defended against the Spanish guarda costas. It is about 150 miles E. of the Mosquito shore. Lat. 13. 25. N. lon. 80. 44. W.

PROVINS, a town in the depart. of Seine and Marne, famous for its mineral-waters, and excellent conserves of roses. It was of note in the time of Charlemagne; but though large, it is not populous. It is 47 miles SE. of Paris.

PRUCK, a town of Stiria.

Pruddo-Castle, Northumb. near the Tyne, 8 miles W. of Newcastle. Prumsted, Norfolk, NW. of Hickling.

PRUSSIA, a large country of Europe, bounded on the N. by the Baltic and Samogitia, on the E. by Lithuania, on the S. by Poland, and on the W. by Pomerelia; about 180 miles in length, and near 100 in breadth, where broadest. It is a very fertile country, producing a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn; and the sea, rivers, and lakes supply them with great plenty of fish. Prussia also abounds with flocks, and herds, and fine horses. Its chief commodities are wool, honey, wax, pitch, pit-coal, hops, and buck wheat. Here is plenty of game, as white and common hares, elks, deer, roebucks, and wild boars; but the forests are, at the same time, infested with lynxes, wolves, foxes, bears, wild asses, and uri, a species of buffalo. The hides of these last, which are extremely thick and strong, are sold to foreigners at a great price. Here is neither salt, wine, nor minerals, but yellow amber (for the sake of procuring which the Romans penetrated into and subdued this country) is found in great quantities on the Samland shore. There are several large lakes, besides the rivers Vistula, Pregel, Memel, &c. About 4 months of the year are temperate, warm, and pleasant; but the autumns are often wet, and the air in winter is cold, piercing, and severe. The manufactures in glass, linen, cloth, metals, &c. are rapidly increasing. The inhabitants inhabitants are a mixture of native Prussians, (who appear to be genuine Germans) Lithuanians, and Poles. The Teutonic order had sovereignty in Prussia about 300 years; after which Prussia was added to the dominion of the electoral house of Brandenburg, and in 1704 it was raised to a kingdom, by the Elector Frederick, who, with his own hands, put the crown on his head, and on that of his consort, at Königsberg. Prussia is divided into three parts, Samland, Natangen, and Oberland. Königsberg is the capital.

PRUTH, a river which rises in Red Russia, in the Carpathian Mountains, or in the SW. part of the new kingdom of Galicia, crosses part of Lemburg, afterwards runs through all Moldavia, and falls into the Danube near Renay, in Bessarabia.

PRZEMISLAW. See PREMESLAW.

PRZEMYSŁ, a town of Lemburg, Poland, 37 miles W. of Lemburg.

PSKOF, or PLESKOF, a government and large town of Russia. The government, once a republic, was formerly included in that of Novogorod. The town is seated on the river Velika, at the extremity of the Lake Piepus, 80 miles S. of Narva, and 136 SSW. of Petersburg.

Publow, Somerset. NE. of Pensford. Puckeridge, Herts. N. of Ware. Puckington, Somerset. NE. of Ilminster. Puckelechurch, Gloucester. 7 miles E. of Bristol. It was once the residence of some of the west Saxon kings, of whose great buildings some ruins are yet visible. Here king Edmund was stabbed with a dagger by an outlawed robber. Puckston, Somersetshire, W. of Wrinton.

PUDDAR, or PADDAR, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in the SE. part of Agimere, and dividing the provinces of Cutch, and Guzerat, falls into the Gulf of Cutch, 30 miles S. of Janagur.

PULO-CONDORE. See CONDORE.

PULO-DINNING, a small Dutch E. India island, near the peninsula of Malacca.

PULO-TIMOAN, a pretty large island on the E. coast of Malacca. It is mountainous and woody, but produces rice, and the cabbage and cocoa-nut trees, in great plenty. Ships often touch here for taking in wood, water, and other refreshments, and there is great plenty of green turtles. Commodore Byron land here in 1705. Lat. 3. 12. N. lon. 104. 25. E.

PULO-WAY, an island near Sumatra, peopled by men banished from Achen, from which it is distant about 9 leagues. Lat. 5. 50. N. lon. 95. 39. E.

Pulstath, Cornw. SW. of Jacobstow.

Pulters, Herts, near Hinxworth. Pulton, Gloucestershire, N. of Cricklade.

PULTOWA, or POLTOWA, an indifferently built town of Russia, in the government of Ecaterinollay, rendered famous by the decisive battle which was fought here, in 1709, between the Czar Peter Peter I. and Charles XII. king of Sweden, wherein the latter was totally defeated, wounded, and obliged to fly into Turkey: 8000 men were left dead on the field, and the remaining 16,000 compelled to surrender at discretion. It is 100 miles SW. of Belgorod. Lat. 49. 26. N. lon. 34. 25. E.

PULTUSH, a town of Masovia; in Poland.

Pulweston, Northumberl. near Wark-Castle.

PUNA, an island in the South Sea, about sixty miles in circumference, and containing about three hundred inhabitants, chiefly Casts and Spaniards. Its only town, which is of the same name, and consists of about fifty houses, under a lieutenant and a priest, is situated on the NE. coast, at the head of a harbour, where there is very good anchorage for large ships. This island lies at the entrance of the Bay of Gujaquil, 90 miles N. of Paira. Lat. 3. 17. S. lon. 81. 6. W.

Punchardin, Devonf. NW. of Barnstaple. Punchin End, Herts, between Hemsted and Berkhamsted. Punknoll, Dorsetf. in Portisham parish. Punknor, Dorsetshire, by Abbotsbury. Punburn, Herts, in Hatfield parish, near Cheshunt-Common. Punsonby, or Ponsonby, Cumb. between Egremont and Ravenglass.

PUNTA-DEL-GUDA, the capital town of St. Michael, one of the Azores, with a harbour and citadel.

PURBECK, ISLE OF, a healthy tract of Dorsetshire, with a deep clay soil, to the S. of Pool Bay; about 10 miles long, and 6 over. It is nearly insulated by the sea, the river Frome, and Luxford Lake, and has been long famous for its stone, which is in great demand for both paving and building. The principal quarries lie at its eastern extremity, near Swanwick, whence the stone is exported. It is of the calcareous kind, distinguished into numerous sorts, the finest of which take a polish, and deserve the name of marble. These are nearly black; and some abound in shells, and are used for chimney-pieces, hearths, &c. Tobacco-pipe clay is dug up in several parts of this island; the finest is near Corfe-Castle, of which much is exported, particularly for the Staffordshire potteries. Purbeck contains 2 hundreds, 1 town, and 9 parishes.

Purbright, Surry, in Woking parish. Purfleet, Essex, on the Thames, 19 miles from London; has some very extensive lime-works, also a considerable public magazine for gunpowder, which is deposited in several detached buildings that are all bomb-proof. Purford, Surry, near Byfleet and Newark, by the river Wey. In this parish is a lake, 2 miles about, called Sheer Water Lake. Purland, Somersetshire, near Hestercomb. Purleigh, Essex, N. of Cold-Norton. Purley, Berks, NW. of Reading.

PURRYSBURG, a town of S. Carolina, built and peopled by a colony of Swifs from Neufchatel, under the conduct of a Monsieur Purry. It is seated on the river Savannah, 64 miles WSW. of Charleston.

Purser's-Crofs, Middlef. in Fulham parish. Purflow, Shropf. near Clunbury. Purston, Great and Little, Yorkf. PUY, LE, a populous town in the depart. of Upper Loire, seated on the mountain Anis, near the river Loire, 40 miles NNE. of Mende. It has manufactures of lace and silk stuffs.

PUY-CERDA, a considerable town of Spain, in Catalonia, capital of Cerdagne. It is 45 miles NW. of Girona.

PUY-DE-DOME, a depart. of France, part of the late Auvergne, and comprising almost all Limagne, a territory about 12 leagues long, by 6 broad, one of the most pleasant and fertile in France; in which are seen, under the same point of view, orchards, meadows, vineyards, and arable land, in a word, every kind of cultivation imaginable. The borders of this basin, or circular plain, are mountainous, now covered with habitations, herds, and flocks; but once so many volcanoes, which exhibited to the inspection of the learned the most extraordinary phenomena. Clermont is the capital.

PUY-EN-ANJOU, a town in the dept. of Maine and Loire, 10 miles SW. of Saumur, and 160 SW. of Paris.

PUY-LAURENS, a town in the dept. of Tarn,

Tarn, 8 miles SW. of Castres, and 23 E. of Toulouse.

PUZZOLI, a celebrated, but now inconsiderable town of Italy, situated on the Bay of Naples. The temple of Jupiter Serapis in this town is accounted a very interesting monument of antiquity; being quite different from the Roman and Greek temples, and built in the manner of the Asiatics; "probably," says Dr. Moore, "by the Egyptian and Asiatic merchants settled at Puzzoli, which was the great emporium of Italy, till the Romans built Ostia and Antium." The ruins of Cicero's villa, near this place, are of such extent, as to give a high idea of the wealth of this great orator.

PWLLHELLY, a large town in the S. part of Carnarvonshire, seated on the sea-side between two rivers, 6 miles E. of Newin, and 243 NW. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Pyddington, Northamp. NW. of Oulney. Pykeden, Northumberl. in Mitford manor. Pyle, a river of Monmouths. which runs into the Olwy, 2 miles NE. of Usk. Pyle, Cheshire, in Delamere-Forest. Pyle, Cheshire, near Delamere-Forest. Pymore, Dorsetshire, a little N. of Bridport. Pynham, Suffex, near Arundel.

PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT, structures formerly counted one of the Seven Wonders of the World. These surprising monuments of antiquity, which baffle the researches of the deepest antiquary, to fix with precision their origin, are built upon a rocky bottom, at the foot of the high mountains which run along the ancient course of the Nile, and separate Egypt from Lybia. Various have been the conjectures how and when they were built, yet no two authors agree exactly about them; however, this is certain, that they are extremely ancient, and that there is no account in any author of credit, when or for what reason they were founded: most imagine they were designed for tombs, though there is no discoverable entrance into two of them. There are many of these edifices at a greater distance in the desert, of which very little notice is taken by travellers. The principal pyramids are ESE. of Gize, a village on the western shore of the Nile. There are 4 of them that deserve the attention of the curious; for though there are 7 or 8 others in the neighbourhood, they are nothing in comparison of the former: the two largest pyramids are 500 feet in perpendicular height. The plain they stand on is a continual rock, almost covered with a moving sand, in which are great numbers of shells and petrified oysters. The most northern of these great pyramids is the only one that is open; and those who enter it, and clamber up to a sort of room, find a tomb, or sarcophagus, which shows by its dimensions, that men were of the same size then as now. The external part is chiefly built of great square stones, of an equal size, without either lime or cramps of any metal. This pyramid is three hours journey from Old Cairo, and the entrance into it is on the N. side. The opening leads successively to five different passages, which, though running upward, downward, and horizontally, tend all toward the S. and terminate in two chambers, the one underneath, and the other in the centre of the pyramid. In the upper chamber is the sarcophagus just mentioned; it is of granite, and if struck with a key, sounds almost like a bell. The ascent to the top of the pyramid on the outside is by steps, which are the height of each stone, the lowermost of which is 4 feet high, and 3 broad; but they were not originally designed for this purpose. The base at the N. side of it is 693 feet, and as the pyramid is exactly square, the other sides must be of the same length. If we imagine 4 equilateral triangles, mutually inclining till they all meet in a point at the top, we shall then have a true notion of the dimensions and figure of this pyramid; the perimeter of each triangle comprehending 2079 feet, and the perimeter of the basis 2772 feet. Whence the whole area of the base contains 480,049 square feet, or 14 acres and somewhat more. However, the top does not end in a point, but in a little flat, or square, where some imagine the Egyptian priests made their astronomical observations. One of the pyramids, about 150 feet high, is built with bricks of uncommon dimensions, supposed by some to have been the work of the enslaved Israelites; who, according to Josephus, were obliged, under Pharaoh, to cut canals for the Nile, build walls, and erect pyramids.

PYRENEAN MOUNTAINS, or PYRENEES, mountains which divide France from Spain, and extend from the Mediterranean to the ocean, being about 212 miles in length. They have different names, according to the different places in which they stand. There are only 5 passages over them from one country to the other; the 3 principal of which are from St. Sebastian to St. Jean de Luz, from Pampeluna to St. Jean de Luz, and from Jonqueira to Perpignan. These mountains yield great quantities of timber, with abundance of pitch and tar.

PYRENEES, EASTERN, a department of France, W. of the Mediterranean, and containing the late province of Roussillon. Although great part of it is mountainous, it is fertile; producing corn, excellent wines, olives, oranges, and leather of a superior quality. Perpignan is the chief town.

PYRENEES, LOWER, a department of France, bounded on the S. by Spain, and on the W. by the Atlantic; it is composed of the provinces of Bearn, Navarre, and part of Gascony. Pau is the capital. See NAVARRÉ.

PYRENEES, UPPER, a department of France, bounded on the N. by the dept. of Gers, and on the E. by the dept. of Upper Garonne; it is composed chiefly of the late province of Bigorre. It produces excellent horses and good partridges. Its valleys are very fertile; furnishing rye, millet, Spanish corn, and flax. The mountains have mines of lead, iron, and copper, and quarries of slate, fine marble and jasper. Tarbes is the capital.

PYRMONT, a town and county of Westphalia. At a little distance from it are mineral waters, of a vinous, acid taste, well known throughout Europe, and much frequented. It is 12 miles SW. of Hameln, and 40 SW. of Hannover.

PYRNA, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony. Near it is a very fine quarry of stone, which is transported to different places by the river Elbe, on which it is seated, 10 miles SE. of Dresden.

PYSECK, a town of Prachin, in Bohemia.

Pyworthy, Devonshire, near Houlsworth.

Q U A

QUACKENBRUCK, a town of Westphalia, in Osnaburg.

QUADAY, or CUADAC, a sea-port of Asia, in Tonquin, seated on a river of the same name.

QUADIN, a town in Upper Egypt, seated on the Nile, between Esne and Dander. It is remarkable for a great number of valuable and ancient monuments.

Quadage, Devonshire, in the parish of Houlsworth. Quadrang, Lincolnshire, SE. of Dunnington. Quare, Wilts, on the Madder, near Wilton. Quainton, Bucks, NW. of Aylesbury.

QUAKU, or QUAQUA, a district of Acambou, in Guinea, on the Gold Coast. The manufacture of cotton habits, called Quaqua gowns, forms a considerable branch of trade here.

Quaney, Camb. near Mildenhall-Fen.

QUANG-SI, an inland province in the S. of China, situated to the NE. of Tonquin. It produces plenty of rice, being watered by several large rivers. The southern part is a flat country, and well cultivated; but the northern is full of mountains covered with trees. It contains mines of all sorts; and particularly a gold mine. They have a particular tree, of whose pith they make bread; and there are little insects which produce white wax. A prodigious number of wild animals, curious birds, and uncommon insects are found here. The capital is Quie-ling, or Kouei-ling.

QUANG-TONG, QUAMTUM, or CANTON, a province of China, bounded on the E. by Kiang-Si and Fokien, on the S. by the ocean, and on the W. by Tonquin and Quang-si. It is diversified by valleys and mountains, and yields two crops of corn in a year. It abounds in gold, jewels, silk, pearls, tin, quicksilver, sugar, brags, iron, steel, saltpetre, ebony, and several sorts of odoriferous wood; beside fruits of all sorts. They have lemons of the size of a man's head; and another sort which grows out at the trunk of the tree whose rind is very hard, and contains a great number of little cells full of an excellent yellow pulp. They have also a tree, whose wood is remarkably hard and heavy, and thence is called iron wood; and a prodigious number of ducks, whose eggs they hatch in ovens. A great number of small barks are loaded with these ducks, and carried to feed on the sea-shore, where, at low water, they find shrimps, oysters, and other shell-fish. These small fleets generally go in companies, and the ducks mix together on the shore; but when night approaches, they are collected together by beating on a basin; they immediately form themselves into different flocks, and each returns to the vessel it belongs to. The mountains are covered with a sort of oifers, which creep along the ground, and are so tough that they make baskets, hurdles, mats, and ropes of them. Canton is the capital.

Quantock Hills, in Somerset. Quantock's Head, E. and W. Somerset. near Watchet. Quarendon, Bucks, in Beartoh parish, Aylebury-Vale. Quarendon, Leic. 2 miles N. of Mountfrel. Quarington, 4 miles SE. of Durham. Quarington, Lincoln, near Sleaford. Quarington, or Quaiberington, Kent, in Mertham parish. Quarleson, Dorset. SW. of Blandford. Quarley, Hants, NW. of the Wallops. Quarndon, near Derby. Quarnford, Stafford. in Alstonfield parish. Quarr, Dorset. in Purbeck Isle, a little E. of Haycroft. Quarr, Isle of Wight, between Newport and St. Helen's. Quarry Hill, 4 miles from Durham.

QUARTEN, a town of Switzerl. near Wallentadt Lake, 5 miles E. of Glarus.

Quat, Shropshire, on the Severn, E. of Chelmarsh. Quatford Shropshire, on the Severn, a mile below Bridgnorth.

QUEBEC, a large and handsome city of America, the capital of Lower Canada, founded by the French in 1608. It is built on a rock, and is divided into the upper and lower town. The river, which, from the sea hither, is about 4 or 5 leagues broad, narrows all of a sudden to the breadth of a mile. The harbour is safe, spacious, and commodious, and about 5 fathoms deep. It is flanked by two bastions, that are raised 25 feet from the ground, which is about the height of the tides at the time of the equinox. The castle stands on the brow of a rugged hill, 60 fathoms above the town. The fortifications are irregular, yet the place, from its situation, is capable of making a stout defence. The lower town is chiefly inhabited by merchants, whose trade is considerable. The noblest structure in the whole city is the palace where the governor resides. In 1711, a body of land forces, under Brigadier-general Hill, were sent with a design to conquer Canada; but the expedition failed through the selfishness of the admiral in sailing too near the Seven Isles, several ships being lost, with a number of sailors. In 1755, it surrendered to the English, after a victory obtained by the brave General Wolfe, who fell in the engagement. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles, in lat. 46. 55. N. and lon. 70. 51. W.

QUEDA, a kingdom of Asia, on the W. coast of Malacca, tributary to Siam. The principal town, however, which is of the same name, is subject to the Dutch.

Here are mines of tin and lead, of which metal they export large quantities to Persia, Arabia, and India. It has a good harbour, and is 300 miles WNW. of the city of Malacca. Lat. 6. 40. N.

Quedgley, 3 miles S. of Gloucester.

QUEDLINGBURG, a town of Halberstadt, Upper Saxony, with a famous abbey, whose abbeys is a prince of the empire. The inhabitants live by brewing, husbandry, and feeding of cattle. It is 7 miles SSE. of Halberstadt.

* QUEENBOROUGH, an ancient, but poor town of Kent, in the Isle of Sheppey, situated at the mouth of the river Medway. The chief employment of the inhabitants is oyster-dredging, oysters being here in great plenty, and of a fine flavour. It is 15 miles NW. of Canterbury, and 48 E. of London. Markets on Monday and Thursday, if not disused.

Queen-Camel, Somersetshire.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis in 1767. It is 6 miles long and 1 wide. Lat. 19. 18. S. lon. 138. 4. W.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S SOUND, a Sound at the N. extremity of the southern island of New Zealand, near Cook's Strait, lying in lat. 41. 0. S. and lon. 184. 19. E. The climate here is much more mild than at Dusky Bay; and though there is not such plenty of wild fowl and fish, that defect is amply compensated by a greater variety and abundance of excellent vegetables. Most of the hills about the Sound consist of an argillaceous stone, of a greenish grey, or blueish, or yellowish brown colour. A green talcous, or nephritic, which the jewellers call jadde, is likewise very common here, together with hornstone, shingle, several sorts of flinty stones and pebbles, some loose pieces of basaltes, strata of a compact mica, or glimmer, with particles of quartz. Hence Captain Forster thinks there is great reason to suppose, that this part of New Zealand contains iron ore, and perhaps several other metallic bodies. The country here is not so steep as at Dusky Bay, and the hills near the sea-side are, in general, of an inferior height, but covered with forests equally intricate and impenetrable. The dogs here are of the long-haired sort, with pricked ears, and much resemble the common shepherd's cur; but they are very stupid.

QUEEN'S COUNTY, a county in Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 25 miles square; bounded on the N. by W. by King's county and part of Tipperary, on the E. by Kildare and part of Carlow, and on the S. by Kilkenny. It was formerly full of woods and bogs, but is now much improved. It contains 50 parishes, about 15,048 houses, and 82,000 inhabitants. Maryborough is the capital.

Queen-Court, Kent, near Olpringe.

Queen-Hill, Worcest. by the Severn, S. of Upton. Queen-Lodge, or Manor, Wilts, in Clarendon-Park. Queen Moor, Somersetshire, near Weston. Queen-Park, Warwicksh. W. of Kenilworth.

QUEEN'S FERRY, a town of Linlithgowshire, seated on the Frith of Forth, where it is not more than 2 miles wide. It is a much frequented ferry, and is 9 miles W. of Edinburgh.

QUENTIN, ST. a town in the dept. of Aisne, with a considerable manufactory of lawns and cambrics. Near this place, in 1557, the Spaniards gained a signal victory over the French, and afterwards took it by storm. It is seated on an eminence, near the Somme, 21 miles S. of Cambray, and 83 N. by E. of Paris.

QUERCI, a ci-devant province of France, divided into the Upper and Lower, and fertile in corn, wine, and fruits. It now forms the department of Lot.

QUERFURT, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of a county of the same name.

QUERKEINESS, or KERKEINESS, anciently CERCINA, two islands on the coast of Tripoli, containing several villages.

Quern, Gloucester. by Cirencester.

QUESNOY, a small, but strongly fortified town, in the depart. of the North. It was taken by the allies, under the Duke of Ormond and Prince Eugene, in 1712, and retaken by the French the same year. It is seated in an extensive plain, on the little river Ronelle, 9 miles SSE. of Valenciennes.

Quebiack, Cornwall, E. of Liskard. Quevington, Gloucester. near the Coln and Fairford.

QUIBO, or QUEYPO, a town of Costa Rica, in Mexico, near the S. Sea.

QUIBERON, a small peninsula in the dept. of Morbihan, to the N. of Belleisle; also a small island, called the Point of Quiberon, separated from the peninsula by a channel: the sea next it is called the Bay of Quiberon. It is remarkable for an ill-conceived and unfortunate expedition against France, of English troops and emigrants, in 1795. A terrible slaughter was made of these last devoted men, who seem, on this occasion, to have formed the solemn hope; they were pushed foremost in attack, and left behind in retreat.

Quickbury, Essex, W. of the Rodings. Quickwood, Herts, by Baldock. Quidenham, Norfolk, by E. Harling. Quin-Hall, 5 miles from Cambridge.

QUILLEBEUF, a small town in the dept. of Eure, seated on the river Seine, 8 miles SW. of Caudebec, and 22 W. of Rouen.

Quin, in Clare Munster.

QUINCEY, a town in the depart. of the Seine and Marne, 6 miles SW. of Meaux.

QUINCEY, a village in the dept. of Aube, situated on the little river Ardusson, near Nogent upon the Seine, and at no great distance from the city of Troyes. In this parish, is the foundation or convent of The Paraclete, a place interesting to the readers of English poetry, as it will ever recall the delightful epistles of Pope and Cauthorn. Mr. Pope's description, however, is only ideal and poetical, there being neither rocks nor pines to be seen here; nor is it a kind of ground (being in a vale) which ever seemed to encourage such objects. The superstructure of the Paraclete is, probably, not the same as the twelfth century produced; but the vaulted part, part, as the arches are all pointed, are imagined, with reason, to be such. A low building, adjoining, has, however, marks of real antiquity, and seems to have been the public hall where Abelard gave his lectures; for, in the walls on each side, are small horizontal apertures, that have strong appearances of benches. In the abbatial vault, which, being small, is much crowded, the bones of the unfortunate lovers, Abelard and Eloisa, are deposited; by these, Eloisa appears to have been much taller than Abelard. In the convent are, or lately were, only twenty-two sisters.

QUINGEY, a town in the dept. of Doubs, 12 miles SW. of Besançon.

QUINTIN, a town in the dept. of the North Coast, 8 miles SW. of St. Brieux, and 200 W. of Paris.

QUISTELLO, a town of Mantua.

QUITEVA, or KITEA, a town of Dahah, a country of Africa, partly dependent on Morocco.

QUITO, a town of S. America, capital of an audience, seated in a pleasant valley, between two chains of the Andes, on higher ground than the rest of habitable Peru, being above 300 yards higher than the level of the sea. It is a bishop's see, and contains seven convents and a university. All sorts of merchandise and commodities are exceedingly dear, on account of the difficulty of bringing them hither. The inhabitants amount to between 50 and 60,000. Lat. 0. 13. S. lon. 77. 50. W.

QUITO, an audience in the viceroyalty of Terra Firma, S. America, lying between two chains of the Andes, and bounded on the N. by Popayan, and on the W. by the Pacific Ocean; its extent is not known. The lands are generally well cultivated, and there are a great number of towns and villages inhabited by the Spaniards, or native Americans.

Every village is adorned with a large square, and the church stands on one side of it. The streets are generally straight, and respect the four quarters of the world; and, indeed, all the roads are laid out in a line, crossing each other, insomuch that the general aspect of the country has the appearance of a large garden. It might be imagined this is a very hot country; but it stands so high, and so near the mountains, perpetually covered with snow, that the air is very temperate. There are no noxious animals; for the tigers and serpents are below in the forests. They have no vicunas, or guanacoes here, but they have an animal of the same kind, called by the natives lamas. They have the various sorts of materials proper for dying, and several sorts of fruits and plants, which have been brought from Spain, beside those that naturally grow here. They have also imported beeves and sheep. In the N. part they get a great deal of gold. The commerce here is principally carried on by Europeans. This province consists of 9 jurisdictions: Ibarra; Otabala; Quito; Latacunga; Riobamba; Chimbo, or Guaranda; Guayaquil; Cuenca; and Loja. After the conquest by the Spaniards, Quito was annexed to Peru; but a new government having been since erected at Santa Fé de Bogoda, it was dismembered from Peru and annexed to New Granada.

QUIXOS, a district of Quito, in S. America.

QUIZAMA, a maritime country of Africa, in Angola, stretching along the river Coanza. It is mountainous, and little cultivated; but the Portuguese get here abundance of honey, wax, and salt.

RADNOR, NEW, a very ancient town of S. Wales, in Radnorshire, formerly the county-town; but the assizes are now held at Presteign. It has one extraordinary privilege, that of keeping a court of pleas for all actions, without being limited to any particular sum. It is seated near the spring head of the river Somergil, or Hendwell, (which rises in the Hendwell pool, and empties itself into the Lug, a little below Presteign) 24 miles NW. of Hereford, and 156 WNW. of London. Market on Saturday. The principal fair on St. Luke's Day, O. S.

RADNORSHIRE, a county of S. Wales, 25 miles in length, and 22 in breadth; bounded on the E. by Shropshire and Herefordshire; on the W. the SW. and S. by Cardiganshire and Brecknockshire; and on the N. by Montgomeryshire. It is divided into 6 hundreds, which contain 4 market towns, 52 parishes, about 3160 houses, and 18,960 inhabitants. The E. and S. parts of this country are tolerably level, and productive of corn; the other parts are rude and mountainous, devoted chiefly to the rearing of horned cattle, sheep, and goats. The NW. angle is an absolute desert, and almost impassable. Radnor is the county-town, but the assizes are held at Presteign.

RAMSEY, a town of Huntingdonshire, formerly famous for its wealthy abbey, and hence called Ramsey the Rich. Part of the gate-house yet remains, with a neglected statue of Ailuin, the founder, the epitaph of whose tomb is reckoned one of the oldest pieces of English sculpture extant. Ailuin is therein styled kinsman of the famous king Edward, alderman of all England, and the miraculous founder of this abbey. It is seated on the fens, among rich ground, proper for tillage and pasture, and near the meers of Ramsey and Whittlesey, which abound with fowl, and excellent pikes and eels, 12 miles NNE. of Huntingdon, and 69 N. of London. Market on Saturday.

RAMSEY, an island of S. Wales, on the coast of Pembrokehire, about 2 miles in length, and a mile and a half broad. About the beginning of April, such numerous flocks of migratory birds, of several sorts, resort hither, as would appear incredible to those who have not seen them. Among them are the elug, called in Cornwall, a kiddaw, and in Yorkshire, a scout, razor-bill, puffin, and harry-bird. These two last breed in the rabbit holes, but the two former on the bare rocks, without any sort of nest. Near it are several small ones, known by the name of the Bishop and his Clerks. It is 4 miles SSW. of St. David's.

REZAN, or RIAZAN, a government of Russia, bounded on the N. by the government of Vladimirskoi; it was formerly a province of the government of Moscow. The country is populous and fertile in corn, and had formerly its own princes. Rezan is the capital.

RHAYADERGOWY, a town of Radnorshire, seated in a hilly country, on the river Wye, 18 miles NW. of Radnor, and 177 WNW. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Rhaytylarsard, Carnarvonshire.

RHE, a very populous island on the W. coast of France, comprised in the dept. of La Vendée, from the coast of which, and that of Lower Charente, it is separated by the Straits of Breton, about 7 miles wide. It is about 16 miles in length and three in breadth. Its products are very bitter wine, and abundance of salt. The inhabitants make excellent brandy, and the liquor called anisette. Their principal food is fish, and and shell-fish are plentiful on the coast. The principal town is St. Martin de Rhe.

RHEIMS, a large, ancient, and celebrated city, in the dept. of the Marne, containing about 30,000 inhabitants. Before the revolution, it was the see of an archbishop, who was the first duke and peer of France, and always crowned the king. The principal church, built before the year 406, is a very curious Gothic structure. In the church of St. Remy, (under the altar of which the corpse of St. Remifus is preserved in a magnificent shrine,) was lately kept, La Sainte Ampoule, a vial filled with a red, congealed liquor, always used in the coronation of the kings of France, who, since Clovis, have been successively crowned at Rheims. The remains of an amphitheatre, a castle, a triumphal arch, and 3 gates of the city, which, to this day, bear the names of Pagan deities, viz. the Sun, Mars, and Ceres, are among the remarkable monuments of the Romans, still preserved here. Rheims is a long, narrow city, with low houses, but the grand square is very magnificent. Here are considerable manufactures of flannel, coverlets, and other woollen and silk stuffs; and their wine and gingerbread are excellent. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by hills, on the river Vesle, 75 miles ENE. of Paris.

RHENEN, a town of Utrecht, situated on the river Leck, 20 miles NNE. of Bois Le Duc.

RHINE, a great river of Europe, which rises in three streams, in the Grison Alps, which unite into one. The principal branch descends from the mountain of St. Gothard, and passes through the lakes of Constance and Zell. After it has crossed part of Germany and the Netherlands, watering Basil, Huninguen, Strasburg, Worms, Mentz, Coblentz, Bonne, Cologne, Dusseldorf, Rees, Emmerick, &c. it divides itself into two branches, one of which preserves the name of the Rhine, and loses itself in the sands W. of Leyden. The other takes the name of the Lech, or Leck, and falls into the Merwe, 5 miles NW. of Dordrecht.

RHINE, LOWER, a circle of the empire of Germany, bounded by the circles of Westphalia, Upper Rhine, Franconia, Suabia, and by the duchy of Luxemburg, and France. It contains the electorates of Mentz, Treves, and Cologne, the palatinate of the Rhine, and some smaller states. The elector of Mentz is the director.

RHINE, LOWER, a depart. of France, having the Rhine to the E. and forming the northern part of the ci-devant Alsace. Strasburg is the capital.

RHINE, UPPER, a dept. of France, S. of the dept. of the Lower Rhine. Colmer is the capital.

RHINE, UPPER, a circle of the empire of Germany, divided into two parts, the Upper and Lower. The lower part comprehends the territories of the landgraves of Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Hesse-Rhinfeldt; the counties of Nassau, Solms, Hanau, Isenburg, Seine, Wied, Wingenstein, Aartzfeld, and Waldeck, with the abbeys of Fulda and Hirschfeld, and the imperial towns of Francfort, Fridburg, and Wetzlar. The upper part of the circle of the Upper Rhine lies to the W. of that river, and comprehends the bishoprics of Basle, Strasburg, Spire, and Worms, with the duchy of Deux-ponts; the counties of Sponheim, Sarbruck, Falkenstein, and Linange, and the imperial towns of Worms and Spire. The summoning princes are the bishop of Worms and the elector palatine.

RHINLAND, a district of S. Holland, which lies on both sides the Rhine. Leyden is the capital.

RHINTHAL. See RHEINTHAL.

RHIN ZABERN, or SAVERNE, a town of Spire, in the circle of Upper Rhine.

RHODE ISLAND, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the N. and E. by Massachusetts, on the S. by the Atlantic, and on the W. by Connecticut. These limits comprehend what has generally been called Rhode Island and Providence Plantations. It is divided into 5 counties, which contain 29 townships. It is as healthful as any part of N. America, but is principally a country for pasture, and not for grain, the farmers here, raising great numbers of the finest and largest neat cattle in America. They also export large quantities of excellent butter and cheese. In the rivers and bays are plenty of cod, halibut, mackarel, and other fish, to the amount of more than 70 different kinds. Providence and Newport are the two chief towns. About 600 vessels enter and clear annually, at the different ports of this state.

RHODE ISLAND, an island of N. America, in the state of the same name. It is about 13 miles long from N. to S. and 4 miles wide, and is divided into three townships, Newport, Portsmouth, and Middleton. The soil is of a superior quality. This island is a noted resort of invalids from the southern climates. It is exceedingly pleasant and healthful, and celebrated for its fine women, so that travellers have called it, with propriety, the Eden of America.

RHODES, an island of Asia, on the S. side of Natolia, and in the Mediterranean Sea, about 40 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. The air is good, and the soil is extremely fertile in excellent corn, from the numerous springs which water it, although it is, in itself, dry and sandy, but badly cultivated. It is famous for having been the residence of the knights of Jerusalem till the year 1523, when the Turks got possession of it. The principal town is of the same name, and is an archbishop's see; it has a good harbour, with a narrow entrance between two rocks, on which are two towers. Here, in all probability, stood the famous Colossus, a statue of bronze, 70 cubits high. It was reckoned one of the seven wonders of the old world, for a ship, with all its sails, might pass between the legs. It was thrown down by an earthquake, 56 years after it was first erected; and when the Saracens became masters of this island in the year 665, near 900 years after its fall, they knocked it in pieces, with which they loaded 900 camels. The knights of Jerusalem took it from the Saracens in the year 1309, and kept it till it was taken from them by the Turks. It is inhabited by Turks and Jews, for the Greeks and other Christians are obliged to live in the suburbs. The number of inhabitants, in the whole island, is estimated at about 36,500. Lat. 36. 24. N. lon. 28. 25. E.

Rhodes, Lancashire, NW. of Manchester. Rhodley, Northumberland, near Morpeth.

Rich-Hill, in Armagh, Ulster.

Richell, Essex, NW. of Hatfield-Regis.

RICHENVEIR, a town in the dept. of the Upper Rhine, 6 miles NNW. of Colmar.

Richmond, a populous village in Surry, anciently called Sheen, but Henry VII. gave it the name of Richmond, from that district in Yorkshire, whereof he had been earl. Here was a palace the favourite residence of Queen Elizabeth, and in which she closed her illustrious career; it is still distinguished by its beautiful royal gardens, which, in the summer season, are open to the public; and in these is a noble observatory, built by the late Sir W. Chambers in 1769. In this, among other fine instruments, are particularly to be noticed a mural arch of 140 degrees and 8 feet radius; a zenith sector of 12 feet; a transit instrument of 8 feet, and a 10 feet reflector by Herschel. The present palace, which is finely situated, is a very plain edifice, built by the Duke of Ormond, who had obtained a grant of some lands about Richmond from King William III.; but, on that duke's attainer, it devolved to the crown. An elegant stone bridge, of 5 semicircular arches, was erected over the Thames here, in 1777. Near this village also is an extensive royal park. It is 9 miles WSW. of London.

Richmond-Hill, its summit is a most delightful spot, commanding a truly beautiful, luxuriant, and diversified prospect, (deservedly celebrated by the sweet poet, "who sung the seasons and their change," by Dr. Smollett, and by other writers of genius, "sensibly alive to the beauties of nature,") of the "Enchanting vale of Thames," with the royal palaces, magnificent seats, glittering towns, charming pleasure-grounds, hills, groves, swelling lawns, meadows, pasture grounds, corn-fields, &c. &c. on its banks. The landscape from this favourite situation, exhibits a picture of the most elegant simplicity, nature decorated with the greatest neatness, the most exquisite embellishments of rural scenery; in short, an elysium, charming the eye with undecipherable variety. It takes in a view, more or less distant of the city of London, of Windsor Castle, Hampton Court, Petersham, Esher, Ham, Harrow, Highgate, Hampstead, with other parts of Middlesex and Surry.

* RICHMOND, a large town in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, containing many handsome houses, built of free-stone, with a flourishing manufactory of yarn stockings, and of woollen knit caps for seamen. It is pleasantly seated on the river Swale, over which it has a stone bridge, 40 miles NW. of York, and 230 NNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

RICHMOND, a town of N. America, capital of the state of Virginia. It has an elegant state-house, and stands on the N. side of James River, at the foot of some falls, which are seven miles in length; to obviate the inconvenience of which, a canal has been lately undertaken. It is 60 miles N. by W. of Williamsburg.

RIEUX, the name of a town in the respective departments of Upper Garonne, Morbihan, Ille and Vilaine, Aude, and Lower Alps.

RIEZ, a town in the department of the Lower Alps. It is a small, populous place, but was formerly much larger than it is at present. It is 35 miles NE. of Aix.

RIGA, a large, populous, and opulent city of Russia, capital of the government of Riga, or Livonia. Next to Peterburgh, it is justly considered as the most commercial town in the whole empire. The trade is chiefly carried on by foreign merchants, who are resident in the town; but those of the English factory enjoy the greatest share of the commerce. The principal exports are corn, hemp, flax, iron, timber, matts, leather, tallow, &c.; its principal imports are salt, cloth, silks, wine, wine, grocery wares, and salted herrings. The masts grow mostly in the districts which border on the Dnieper, and are sent up that river to a landing-place, from which they are transported to the Duna; but they can only pass the last-mentioned river in the spring, or about three weeks after the snow begins to melt, on account of the numerous shoals. They are then formed into floats of from 50 to 200 pieces, usually from 70 to 80 feet in length, and descend the stream to Riga. The hemp, which is brought from the Ukraine and Poland, employs two years in its passage to Riga. It is conveyed in barks of from 2 to 300 tons burden. Within the fortifications are about 9000 inhabitants, and in the suburbs 15,000, exclusive of a garrison of 1000 men. Here is a floating wooden bridge over the Dwina, or Duna, 40 feet in breadth, and 2600 in length. In the winter, when the ice sets in, this bridge is taken to pieces and removed, and in the spring it is replaced. Riga was finally obliged to submit to Peter the Great, in 1710. It is 5 miles from the mouth of the Duna, and 160 NE. of Konigsberg. Lat. 56. 53. N. lon. 24. 25. E.

* ROCHESTER, an ancient, but little city of Kent, believed to have been a Roman station, from the bricks in the wall, and the Roman coins and other antiquities tiquties that have been found here. It was formerly much larger than at present, having now only one parish church, besides the cathedral; but it once had another, and of later times has been gradually increasing by the addition of some new houses and streets, on the high side of the town. It consists chiefly of one principal street, which is paved. The houses are generally inhabited by tradesmen and inn-keepers; no sort of manufactory being carried on here. It has two free-schools, the one called the King's, and the other the City School. There is here also an alms-house for six poor travellers, who are supplied with a supper, a bed, and breakfast, and with fourpence to carry them forward on their journey; but they are to stay no longer than one night; and it is remarkable, that an inscription over the door intimates, that "rogues and proctors are excepted." The narrow stone bridge over the Medway, consisting of 21 arches, was built in the reign of Edward III. partly at the expence of Sir John Cobham and Sir Robert Knolles, out of the spoils they had taken in France. The corporation has jurisdiction over the great oyster-fishery in the several creeks of the Medway, which is now in a flourishing state. ROME, a famous city of Europe, founded 748 years before the Christian æra. It was formerly three times as large as it is at present; and is now one of the largest and handsomest cities of Europe. It is divided into 14 quarters, or wards, called Riones, which contain 81 parishes, about 200,000 inhabitants, including strangers, 2827 priests, 3847 monks, 1910 nuns, 1665 students, and 1470 paupers. The number of inhabitants has gradually increased during the whole of this present century. Some of the principal streets are of considerable length, and perfectly straight. That called the Corso is the most frequented. Here the nobility display their equipages during the carnival, and take the air in the evenings, in fair weather. The Strada-Felice, and the Strada-di Porta-Pia, are also very long and noble streets. There are no lamps lighted in the streets at night; and all Rome would be in utter darkness, were it not for the candles which the devotees sometimes place before the Madonas, or statues of St. Mary; these appear glimmering, at vast intervals, like stars in a cloudy night. The footmen carry dark lanterns behind the carriages of people of distinction. Rome, at present, exhibits a strange mixture of magnificent and interesting, and of common and beggarly objects. The former consist of palaces, churches, fountains, and, above all, the interesting remains of antiquity. The latter comprehend all the rest of the city. The church of St. Peter, in the opinion of many, surpasses, in size and magnificence, the finest monuments of ancient architecture. Its length is exactly exactly 730 feet; the breadth 520; and the height, from the pavement to the top of the cross, which crowns the cupola, 450. The Pantheon is the most perfect of the Roman temples which now remain. "In spite," says Moore, "of the depredations which it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and Popes, it still remains a beautiful monument of Roman taste. The pavilion of the great altar, which stands under the cupola of St. Peter's, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass, which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after all, and with the weight of 1800 years upon its head, has still a probability of outliving its proud, capacious rival." From the circular form of this temple, it has obtained the name of the Rotundo. Its height is 150 feet, and its breadth nearly the same. There are no windows; the central opening in the dome admitting a sufficiency of light. The rain which falls through this aperture immediately drills through holes, which perforate a large piece of porphyry, that forms the centre of the pavement. Being converted into a Christian temple, the Pantheon, originally erected to the honour of all the gods, is now dedicated to Mary, and to all the martyrs and saints. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the Amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one half of the external circuit still remains; from which a pretty exact idea may be formed of the original structure. According to a computation of Mr. Byres, it could contain 85,000 spectators. The Campidoglio is an elegant structure, raised on part of the ruins of the ancient Capitol. The ancient Forum is now a cow-market; and on the top of the beautiful column of Trajan, 120 feet high, is the statue of St. Peter, instead of that of Trajan, &c. The Romans say, that the church of St. John Lateran is the most ancient of all the churches of Rome, and the mother of all the churches in Christendom. To this temple every new pope constantly goes first, in a magnificent procession, to take possession of his see. The church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, celebrated for its magnificent columns of granite, &c. was built by Constantine. The pope has three superb palaces, of which the principal is the Vatican, near St. Peter's church, said to contain upwards of 4400 apartments. The library of this palace is the largest and most complete in the world; rich, especially in manuscripts in all languages, and of all ages, of which there are said to be about 4000. In Rome, the connoisseur will meet with innumerable paintings by the greatest masters, and with the chef-d'œuvres of sculpture, &c. The castle of St. Angelo is said to serve more to keep the city in awe, than to repel any foreign attack. Rome is seated on the river Tiber, which runs through part of it, in lat. 41. 54. N. lon. 12. 55. E.

ROMHILD, a town of Henneburg, in Franconia.

* ROMNEY, NEW, a town in Kent, once a very large place, containing five churches, a priory, and an hospital, with a good harbour; but since the sea retired from it, in the reign of Edward I. it is much reduced. The two great meetings for all the Cinque Ports are held here on the Tuesday after St. Margaret's Day. ROSETTA, a town in Egypt, called by the natives, RASCHID, founded in the 8th century. It is near two miles in length, has no streets perfectly straight, nor any remarkable squares, but the houses, built with terraces, and standing afunder, have an air of neatness and elegance. They have a great manufactory of striped and other coarse linens; but its chief business is the carriage of goods hence to Cairo; for all European mer- chandise is brought hither from Alexan- dria by sea, and carried by boats to Cairo; as all the productions of Egypt are brought to the port of Alexandria. The Europeans have their vice-consuls and factors here. The country to the N. has pleasant gardens, full of orange, lemon, and citron trees, and almost all sorts of fruits, with a variety of enchanting groves of palm-trees with flowers scattered among them; and when the fields are green with rice, it adds greatly to the beauty of the country. The rice sown round it, is, by very rigorous laws, appropriated to the use and consumption of Constantinople only. It is seated on the western branch of the river Nile, 25 miles NE. of Alexandria, and 90 NNW. of Cairo. Lat. 31. 22. N. lon. 3. 45. E.

ROSS-SHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Sutherlandshire; on the W. by sea; on the S. by Invernesshire; and on the E. by the Friths of Murray and Dornock, and the county of Cromarty. From N. to S. it extends near 60 miles, and upwards of 70 from E. to W. The NW. part of this county is desolate and dreary, presenting nothing to the eye but vast piles of rocky mountains, with summits broken, and aspiring into every form. The E. side feeds great numbers of black cattle, horses, goats, and deer, has woods of fir of great extent, and is fruitful in corn and herbs. It has also abundance of land and sea fowl, and is well supplied with fish, particularly herrings, in the extensive locks and bays found on the coasts. In the woods is the beautiful bird called Capercailzie, or Cock of the Wood; it is of a bright azure colour, and almost as large as a common turkey. On the tops of the mountains is found the ptarmigan, a simple-bird, not quite the size of a partridge. It is often indebted for its safety to its grey colour, which resembles the stones among which it lodges. In winter its colour changes to a pure white like the snow, in which it often buries itself. The inhabitants of the the W. and S. parts speak the Erfel language, which is also understood on the E. coast, where, however, English is generally spoken. The principal towns are Tain, Dingwall, and Fortrose. The Island of Lewis is included in this county.

Roffellan, in Cork, Munster.

ROSTOCK, a trading town of Mecklenburg, formerly one of the Hanseatic towns, with a good harbour. It is the best town in this country, containing 3 parish churches, with a university and several handsome public buildings. It is divided into three parts, the Old, the New, and the Middle Town. Both the civil and criminal jurisdiction are vested in its own magistracy, yet they annually pay 55 rix-dollars as an urbor, or original tribute to the dukes, as also the sum of 600 florins, in consideration of the grant of an excise. Rothwell, Lincolnsh. SW. of Thongcast. Rothwell, Yorksh. between Wakefield and Leeds. Rotington, Cumb. N. of St. Bees, near the Bluff promontory, or great cliff, called St. Bees Head. It abounds with several sorts of sea fowl; plenty of excellent samphire grows here.

ROTTERDAM, a city and celebrated sea-port of Holland, next to Amsterdam the most considerable place in the United Provinces, for size, the beauty of its buildings, trade, and opulence. There are so many fine deep canals here, that the largest ships may conveniently unload at the very doors of the warehouses. The town is governed by a regency, consisting of 24 counsellors, out of which are elected 4 burgomasters, a grand bailly, and 7 echevins. It is more frequented by the British merchants than Amsterdam, because the ice goes away sooner, and a single tide, in two or three hours, will carry a vessel out into the open sea. The principal public buildings are, the town-house, the bank, the East and West-India Houses, the arsenal, and the College of Admiralty. On the east side of the city is a large basin and dock, for building and launching vessels employed in the service of the Admiralty, and the East-India Company. Here is an English Presbyterian church, which being of the established religion, the minister is paid by the States; and which is not the case with the Presbyterians in England and Scotland, they make use of an organ. Here is also an English episcopal church, whose minister is paid partly by a salary from the English government, and partly by a subscription of the congregation. Some of the houses are built in the old Spanish style, with the gable ends embattled in front; but there is a considerable number of modern brick houses, which are very lofty and spacious, particularly on that magnificent quay called the Bomb-Tees. On this quay is a handsome Jewish synagogue. The statue of Erasmus, in bronze, stands in an open place, at the head of one of the canals; and in a narrow street, leading from the statue to the great church, is still shown the house in which he was born, with an inscription in front, to his honour. Rotterdam is seated on the river Rotter, at its confluence with the Maese, 13 miles S. of the Hague, and 30 SSW. of Amsterdam. Lat. 51. 55. N. lon. 4. 26. E.

British

ROUEN, a city, the capital of the dept. of Lower Seine, before the revolution, the capital of Normandy, and the see of an archbishop. It contains upwards of 7000 houses, and 36 parish churches. The streets, however, are narrow, crooked, and dirty, and the houses are mostly of wood. Notwithstanding this disagreeable appearance, it is one of the most opulent, commercial, and important places in France. It is 2 leagues and a half in circuit; and (its six suburbs included) is computed to contain 73,000 inhabitants. The principal public buildings are, the Great Hall of the Palace, in which the late Parliament of Rouen met; the Old Castle; and the principal church, near which is a public library. In the market place is a statue of the celebrated Maid of Orleans, who was burnt here by the English, for a witch. The linens of Rouen, particularly what are called the Siamoise, are much esteemed. There are also manufactures of cloth, and a manufactory of oil of vitriol, the only one in France. The suburb of St. Sever, situated on the other side of the Seine, communicates with the city by a bridge of boats which rises and falls with the tide, and is made to open so as to admit the passage of ships. This bridge is paved, and is 270 paces long. Rouen is seated on the river Seine, 50 miles SW. of Amiens, and 70 NW. of Paris. Lat. 49. 27. N. lon. 1. 10. E.

ROXBURGHSHIRE, a county of Scotland, sometimes called Teviotdale, and containing the districts of Teviotdale, Liddesdale, Eufdale, and Eskdale. It is bounded on the N. by Berwickshire, on the E. and S. by the English counties of Northumberland and Cumberland, and on the W. by the shires of Dumfries and Selkirk. From N. to S. it extends near 30 miles, and about 18 from E. to W. The principal rivers are the Tweed, Teviot, and Liddel: the principal mountains are those called the Cockraw, whence a range of high hills run westward, dividing Scotland from England, in many places impassable. The face of the country exhibits a rough, irregular appearance of moor-fes, hills, and mountains, interspersed with narrow valleys, well watered, and fertile in corn and oats. The hills, however, feed great numbers of sheep and cattle. On its borders were the famous Battle, Battable, or Debateable Lands, claimed by the borderers of both nations. The principal towns are Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick, Melrose, and Roxburgh, which last town, with its castle, is situated near the Teviot, 19 miles SW. of Berwick, and 32 SE. of Edinburgh.

RUSSIA, a large empire, partly in Asia, and partly in Europe, bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean; on the S. by Great Tartary, the Caspian Sea, and Persia; on the E. by the N. Pacific Ocean; and on the W. by Sweden, Poland, and Lapland. There were three countries that had the name of Russia; namely, Red Russia; White Russia, which comprehends Lithuania; and Black Russia, which comprehends the governments of Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, and Yaroslav; and hence his imperial majesty takes the title of emperor of all the Russias. This empire, exclusive of the late acquisitions from the Turks and from Poland, may be likened to an oblong square, whose longest sides are about 2000 miles each. The seas of Russia are, the Baltic, the White Sea, the Frozen Ocean, the Black Sea, and the Caspian Sea. There are also five large rivers, namely, the Dnieper, Volga, Don, Duna, or Dwiner, and Oby. A country of such vast extent must lie in different climates, and the soil must be as different. The most fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland; inasmuch that the inhabitants are able to supply their neighbours with corn; the N. part is not only more cold, but very marshy, and over-run with forests, inhabited chiefly by wild beasts. Beside domestic animals, there are wild beeves, rein-deer, martens, white and black foxes, weasels, ermines, and sables, whose skins make the best furs in the world. They had very few vines before Peter the Great caused them to be planted in different places. In Russia are large quantities of cotton and silk, with which they make the various sorts of stuffs; skins, furs, Russia leather, talc, tallow, hemp, Russia cloth, honey, wax, and almost all the merchandises of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries. This vast empire has been divided by the late emperors into 42 governments: namely, Petersburg, Olonetz, Wiburgh, Revel, Riga, Pskof, Novogorod, Tver, Smolensko, Polotsk, Mohilef, Orel, Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, Yaroslav, Vologda, Archangel, Kostroma, Nishnei Novogorod, Kasan, Simbirske, Penza, Tambof, Voronetz, Kursk, Novogorod-Severskoi, Tchernigof, Kiof, Kharkof, Catharinenslaf, Caucasus, Saratof, Ufa, Viatka, Perm, Tobolsk, Kolyvan, Irkutsk, and the country of the Cossacks. The inhabitants, in general, are robust, great eaters, and fond of brandy. They use bathing bathing, but smoke no tobacco, lest the smoke should dishonour the images of the saints, which they have in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of snuff, made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. They were formerly accounted the rudest, and most ignorant people in the world, and many of them are now little better. Formerly no Russians were seen in other countries, and they seldom or never sent ambassadors to foreign courts; but now they are more polite, and study the interest of different nations. They had no ships of war, or merchandise, before the reign of Peter I. but in the present reign, powerful Russian squadrons have appeared, not only in the Baltic, but in the Black Sea, and in the Mediterranean. They have images in their churches; and the priests give a passport to those that are dying, addressed to St. Nicholas, who is desired to entreat St. Peter to open the gates of heaven, as they have certified that the bearer is a good Christian. The church is governed by a patriarch, under whom are the archbishops and bishops. Every priest is called a papa, or pope, of whom there were 4000 in Moscow only. Formerly he was thought a learned man who could read and write; but Peter undertook to introduce arts and sciences, and, in 1724, the first university was founded that ever was in Russia; and there is also an academy of sciences at Petersburg, supplied with eminent professors. With respect to dress, a long beard is in high estimation with the people of Russia, notwithstanding the efforts of their monarchs to root it out; and it is only those depending upon government, in the army and navy, who have yet complied with the custom and the wish of the court. Those who retain their beards, retain likewise the ancient dress; the long swaddling coat, either of skins, or of coarse cloth lined with skins; in winter, and in summer, of cloth only. About their middle they have a sash of any colour; but what they most affect, is green or yellow. They wear trowsers instead of breeches and stockings; their limbs are, besides wrapped in many folds of woollen stuffs to keep them warm, and above all they wear boots. Their shirts are fashioned as women's, and their necks, exposed to the cold, have become very hard and impenetrable, from this practice. Government continue to exert every nerve to compel their subjects to adopt the German dress. The clergy alone excepted, none can procure any place, or must expect any favour from court, upon other condition than banishing the Asiatic sheep-skin robes. The dress of the women is the reverse of the men, both in fashion and colour; every part of it being as short and tight as decency will allow, and very gaudy. It is exactly the same with that of the Highland women in Scotland; both have the short jacket, the striped petticoat, and the tartan plaid; and both too, in general, have a napkin rolled about their head. The Russian women are, however, far more rich in their attire; nor is gold lace wanting, any more than the art of painting, to complete the Russian belle. The young generation are modernizing these antique vestments; the stiff embroidered napkin is supplanted by one of flowing silk; the jacket and petticoat are of muslin, or other fine stuffs; and the plaid is exchanged for a silk or satin cloak, in the cold season, lined with fur. The richer class of females wear velvet boots. The dress of the higher ranks is after the French and English fashion; and all must have a covering of fur six months of the year. Thus equipped, the prince and the peasant are hurled in their chaises and sledges through the dreary Scythian winter. The sovereigns of Russia are absolute. They were formerly called Grand Dukes, which is still the title of the apparent. They afterward assumed the title of czar, and, in the sequel, that of emperor. The natives pronounce the word czar, like tzar, or zaar, and this, probably, by corruption, from Cæsar, or emperor; from some fancied relation to the Roman emperors; on account of which they also bear the eagle as a symbol of their empire. The first who assumed the title of czar, was Basil, son of Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470.

RUTLAM, a town of Malwa, in Hindoostan.

Rutland, in Queen's County, Leinster.

Rutland, in Donegal, Ulster.

RUTLAND, the smallest county of England, about 15 miles in length, and 11 in breadth. It is supposed to have received its name from the red colour of the soil, which, in some parts, is a sort of ruddle, staining the fleeces of the sheep. It is bounded on the W. by Leicestershire; on the N. by Lincolnshire, and part of Leicestershire, and on the E. and SE. by Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire. It is divided into 5 hundreds, which contain 2 market-towns, 58 parishes, about 3260 houses, and 20,000 inhabitants. The air is very good, and the soil, in general, fertile, yet very various; producing excellent corn, and feeding a great number of cattle and sheep. The principal rivers are the Welland and the Gwash, or Wash, besides which, it is extremely well watered by a number of small rivers and brooks, which fall into them, and which afford plenty of excellent fish. Oakham is the county town.

RYE, a town of New-York.

RYE, a reduced town of N. Jutland.

* RYE, a handsome, well built, and populous town in Suffex, an appendage to the Cinque Port of Hastings. Its port, however, had been long so choked up with sand, that it could only admit small vessels. This inconvenience was remedied by an act of parliament, in 1761, and the harbour restored, by letting the sea and tides through a canal up to Winchelsea Wall, so that vessels of 300 tons burden may now ride here with safety and ease. It exports corn, malt, hops, timber, and wool, as also kettles, cannon, chimney-backs, &c. from the iron-works at Bakely, 4 miles to the NW. and at Breed; and its fishermen send considerable supplies of soles, turbot, plaice, &c. to the London markets. It is situated on the edge of a cliff (where a modern battery has been planted to annoy privateers) at the mouth of the Rother, with a delightful prospect of the sea, 34 miles SE. by S. of Tunbridge, and 63 SE. by S. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

Rye, or Ree, Herts, near Hodsdon.

* RYEGATE a town in Surry, with a market house, which was formerly a chapel dedicated to Thomas a Becket. It had also formerly a castle, called Holm-Castle, built in the time of the Saxons, some ruins of which are still to be seen; particularly a long vault, with a room at the end large enough to hold 500 persons, where (according to tradition) the barons, who took up arms against King John, held their private meetings. The neighbourhood abounds with fullers-earth and medicinal plants. It is charmingly situated in the vale of Holmsdale, 16 miles E. of Guilford, and 51 S. of London. Market on Tuesday, and a monthly one on Wednesday.

Here are several monuments of antiquity, of which the most famous are the amphitheatre, the aqueducts, and the triumphal arch on the bridge over its river. It is seated on an eminence, near the Charente, 26 miles SE. of Rochefort, and 262 SSW. of Paris.

Saintfield, in Down, Ulster; the linen manufacture is carried on here. St. John's, in Roscommon, Connaught. St. John's Town, in Longford, Leinster. St. Kennis, in Kilkenny, Leinster. St. Mullins, in Carlow, Leinster.

SAINTONGE, a ci-devant province of France, S. of Poitou and Aunis, extending about about 70 miles in length, and 36 in breadth. The river Charente runs through the middle of it, and renders it one of the most fertile tracts in France; and they make the best salt here in Europe. It now forms the dept. of Lower Charente.

SAL, or SALT, an island of Africa, one of the Cape de Verds, about 40 miles in circumference. It is so called from the great quantity of beautiful salt made here, which is the chief production of the island, and is procured from the salt ponds, by the crystallization of the sea-water, which overflows part of it from time to time. Notwithstanding its apparent barrenness, bearing no trees nor verdure, except shrubs, it breeds an incredible number of goats, some asses, a few small horses, and a great variety of sea fowls. A prodigious number of tortoises also lay their eggs here, which alone, would be sufficient to maintain a number of inhabitants; yet all authors agree, that the island is desolate and desert. It is 300 miles W. of the coast of Africa. Lat. 16. 39. N. lon. 21. 59. W.

SALA; or SALBERG, a town of Westmanland, 28 miles W. of Upsal.

SALAMANCA, an ancient, large, rich, and populous city of Leon, in Spain, with a famous university, consisting of 24 handsome colleges. The structure, called the Schools, where all sorts of sciences are taught, is very large and curious, and is built of freestone. The university has 61 professorships, without reckoning the anatomical theatre, and the college of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages. There were formerly 7000 students, sent from all parts of Europe; and there are now upward of 4000. The scholars are all clothed like priests, having their heads shaved, and caps thereon. Salamanca has a large public square, and some fine fountains, but the streets are narrow and dirty. The cathedral is one of the handsomest in Spain, and has a fine steeple. There are also 25 parish churches, 39 convents, 6 hospitals, and about 7000 houses. It is seated partly in a plain, and partly on three hills, being surrounded by walls, without which is a fine Roman causeway, on the river Tormes, over which it has a bridge of 25 arches, and 300 paces long, built by the Romans. It is 37 miles SE. of Miranda, and 88 NW. of Madrid.

SALAMANCA, a town of Yucatan, in Mexico, 150 miles S. of Merida.

SALANCHE, a commercial town in the dept. of Mont Blanc, in the Upper Faucigny, seated on a brook, which soon after falls into the Arve, 25 miles E. of Annecy.

SALANKEMEN, a town of Slavonia.

SALBACH, a village in the margravate of Baden, where Marshal de Turenne was killed, in 1675, as he was viewing the position of the enemy, and giving directions for erecting a battery. It is 2 miles NE. of Baden.

Salbridge, or Sawbridge, Warw. SW. of Willoughby. Salcomb, Devonf. near the Channel, between Brancomb and Sidmouth. Salcomb-Haven, Devonshire, SW. of Dartmouth. Salcot, Verley, and Wigborough, Essex, near Toleshunt and West Merley.

SALINI, one of the Lipari Islands, in the Mediterranean, fertile in wine and fruits. It lies NW. of the Island of Lipari.

SALINS, a considerable town in the dept. of Jura, remarkable for its salt works, the largest of which is in the middle of the town, and for quarries of jasper.

jasper. It is 20 miles SSW. of Befançon, and 200 SE. of Paris.

* SALISBURY, or NEW SARUM, a large and ancient city of Wilts, of which it is the capital. It is situated in a chalky soil, almost surrounded by the Avon and its contributory rivers, and is rendered particularly clean by a small running stream flowing through every street. It has a fine cathedral, crowned by a spire, the most regular and elegant Gothic structure in the kingdom, built in the form of a lanthorn. Its windows are said to be as many in number as there are days in a year. The town-hall is a handsome building, and stands in a spacious market-place. Here are manufactures of flannels, linseys, druggets, Salisbury whites, parchment, hardware, bone-lace, and cutlery. The navigation from Christ-church comes within 2 miles of this city. It is 21 miles NE. of Southampton, and 83 W. by S. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs on January 6th, Tuesday after Epiphany, Lady Day, and the Monday before it, Whit Tuesday, Thursday after Michaelmas, October 2d, and December 29th.

SALISBURY, a town in the respective states of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, N. Carolina, and the Delaware, in N. America.

SALISBURY CRAIG, a hill on the S. side of the city of Edinburgh, chiefly remarkable for a great precipice of solid rock, about a mile in length, and, in some parts, 100 feet high, which passes with some regularity along its brow.

Salisbury-Hall, Essex, near Waltham-stow.

SALISBURY PLAIN, in Wiltshire, extends 25 miles E. of Winchester, and 28 W. to Weymouth, and in some places it is from 35 to 40 miles in breadth. There are so many cross roads in it, and so few houses to take direction from, that Thomas, the eighth earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at the end of each mile stone from hence to Shaftsbury, as a guide to travellers. That part of it, which lies about the city, is a chalky down, like East Kent. The other parts are noted for feeding numerous flocks of sheep, some of which contain from 3000 to 5000 each, and the farmers hereabouts have frequently two or three such flocks. By folding the sheep upon the lands, after they are turned up with the plough, they become very fruitful, and bear very good wheat and other grain. In this plain beside the famous Stonehenge, are traces of many Romish and British camps, sepulchres, &c.

Salkelds, Great and Little, Cumberl. N. of Penrith, are washed by the Eden. At the latter there is a circle of stones, 77 in number, each of them 10 feet high, and before them, at the entrance, stands a single one, which is 15 feet high. They are thought to have been a Druidical work, and are called, by the country people, Long Meg and her Daughters. Within the circles are two heaps of stones, under which dead bodies are supposed to be buried. Mr. Camden thinks this tradition very probable, but his commentator is of opinion that the heaps of stones in the middle of the monument are no original part of it, but that having been gathered off the plowed lands adjoining, they have been thrown together here, as in a waste corner of the field; and as to the great stones, he says, they seem to be monuments, erected at the solemn investiture of some Danish king, like Rollrich stones, in Oxfordshire, and those of Kongstoten, in Denmark, and of Mooresteen, in Sweden.

SALLENS, a neat and new-built town of Kildare, in Leinster, seated on the banks of the Grand Canal, 14 miles from Dublin.

SALLEE, an ancient and considerable town of Benihassen, in the kingdom of Fez. Its harbour was formerly one of the best in the country, but now, on account of a bar that lies across it, ships of 200 tons burden are forced to unload their guns and ballast before they can enter it. There are docks to build ships, but they are seldom used, for want of skill and materials; and as the land insensibly continues to accumulate, it is probable that, very soon, only vessels with oars will be able to enter the river. The road can only be frequented in the fine season, from the beginning of April to the end of September, for when the wind blows from the SSW. (which seldom, however, happens but in winter,) it is no longer safe; and, besides, the shifting of the sands of the bar renders the passage extremely difficult. Here is a battery of 24 pieces of cannon, which commands the road, and a redoubt which defends the entrance of the river. It is a large place, divided into the Old and New Towns, by the river Guero. It has long been infamous for its pirates, which make prizes of all the Christians' ships that come in their way, except there is a treaty to the contrary. It is seated on the river Sallee, formed by the union union of two smaller streams (the Guero and the Satta) 42 miles W. of Mequinez, Lat. 34. 0. N. lon. 6. 31. W.

SALLY, a town of Virginia, situated on the James River, 92 miles W. of Richmond.

SALLYCOE, a town of Georgia, in N. America.

Salley, Yorks. in Craven. Sallows, near Norwich.

SALM, a town and county of Germany, circle of Upper Rhine, insulated in France, 24 miles WSW. of Strasburg.

SALM, a town and county of Germany, insulated in Luxemburg, 38 miles N. of the city of Luxemburg.

SALMAISE, a town in the dept. of the Côte d'Or.

Salmeston, Kent, near Margate. Salmondby, Lincoln. NE. of Horncastle.

Salmons, Kent, near Penhurst.

SALO, a town in the Bresciano, seated near the Lake Garda.

SALOBREANA, a sea-port of Grenada, in Spain, with a strong castle, in which the Moorish kings formerly kept their treasure. It carries on a great trade in sugar and fish, and is seated on a rock, 12 miles SE. of Almunecar, and 36 S. of Grenada.

Salomon's Bridge, Suffex, NW. of Petworth. Salom Wood, Huntingdon. near Old Welton.

SALON, a town in the dept. of the Mouths of the Rhone, seated on the canal of Craponne, 20 miles NW. of Aix.

SALONA, anciently called AMPHISSA, a reduced sea-port town of the late Venetian Dalmatia, celebrated as the retreat of the emperor Domitian. It was anciently a very considerable place, its ruins showing that it was 10 miles in circumference. It is 6 miles N. of Spalatro.

SALONA, a town of Livadia, with a bishop's see. The inhabitants are partly Greeks and partly Turks; but the Jews are not suffered to live here. It is seated on a mountain, on the top of which is a citadel, nearly 22 miles NW. of Livadia.

SALONICHI, formerly called THESSALONICA, a sea-port of Turkey, in Europe, and the principal town in Macedonia, with an archbishop's see. It is large, populous, and rich, being about 10 miles in circumference. It is a place of considerable trade, which is carried on principally by the Greek Christians and the Jews, the former of whom form 30 churches, and the latter as many synagogues. Here is a triumphal arch, almost entire, erected in honour of the Emperor Antoninus, with several churches of extraordinary beauty, now converted into Turkish mosques. That of St. Demetrius has in it above a thousand pillars of jasper, porphyry, &c. The principal merchandise is silk. It is seated at the bottom of a gulf of the same name, partly on the top, and partly on the side of a hill, near the river Varda, 50 miles NNE. of Larissa, and 270 W. of Constantinople. Lat. 40. 41. N. lon. 22. 53. E.

SALOP. See SHROPSHIRE.

Salperton, or Cold-Salperton, Gloucester, between Winchcomb and Northleach.

SALSES, a town, castle, and lake in the dept. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 10 miles N. of Perpignan.

SALSETTE, an island of Hindoostan, lying off the coast of Concan, about 10 miles N. of Bombay. It is about 120 miles in circumference, and is fertile in rice, fruits, and sugar-canes, besides which, they have a trade in dried fish. It has subterraneous temples, cut out of the live rock, in the manner of those of Elephanta. It is only separated from Bombay by a channel half a mile over, which is fordable at low water. In 1750, the Mahrattas took it from the Portuguese; and, in 1774, the English took it by assault from the Mahrattas, and have kept it ever since, agreeably to treaty. It is a most desirable acquisition to the East India Company, as the settlement of Bombay possessed no territory beyond the small island on which it is situated, and depended on foreign supplies for subsistence.

SALSONA, a town of Catalonia.

Salson, Camb. in a vale near Gogmagog-Hills. Salt, Staff. near Ingestre.

SALTA, a town of Tucuman, in S. America, which sends large quantities of corn, wine, meat, hides, and other commodities to most parts of Peru. It contains about 400 houses, 2 churches, and 4 monasteries. The inhabitants have frequent wars with the Indians. They have about 500 men that bear arms, with thrice that number of slaves. It is 50 miles S. of St. Salvador. Lat. 25. 20. S. lon. 66. 30. W.

SALTASH, a town of Cornwall, trading principally in malt and beer. It consists of 3 streets, which are washed clean by every shower of rain. The harbour is capable of receiving vessels of any burden. Here is a ferry over the Tamar to Plymouth Dock, the inhabitants of which generally come to this market by water, rather than go to Plymouth by land, as provisions are much cheaper here; here; and the town boat, in which they go, brings home what they buy. It is seated on the descent of a steep hill, at the mouth of the Hamoaze, four miles and a half NW. of Plymouth, and 220 WSW. of London. Market on Saturday.

Saltbox, Suffex, near Chichester. Saltburn, Yorkf. in Cleveland, near Rocliff. Saltby, Leicest. near Belvoir.

SALT COATS, a sea-port of Ayrshire, containing about 2325 inhabitants. It is one of the principal watering places in the county, (furnishing accommodations in the season for 8 or 400 strangers,) has (and has long had) a manufacture of salt, of which about 2362 bolls are annually made here; a trade in coals, of which, to the average amount of 23,000 tons are dug yearly near the town, a manufacture of sail-cloth, a rope-yard, and docks for building ships, not only for this port, but for other towns. It is situated on the Clyde, 10 miles NNW. of Ayr.

Saltcote, Cumberland, between Newton Marth and Rabycote.

SALTEES, two small islands on the coast of Wexford, in Leinster, about 3 leagues and a half WSW. of Carnfore Point.

SALTEN, a town of Drontheim.

SALT FLEET, a sea-port of Lincolnshire, 33 miles NE. of Lincoln, and 158 N. of London. Market on Saturday.

Saltfleetby, East, Middle, West, or All Saints, Clement, and Peter, Linc. SE. of Saltfleet. Salt-Hill, a village of Berks, 22 miles from London, on the road to Bath. It is finely situated, and has some elegant inns. Salt-Hill, Lincolnf. SW. of Kirton. Saltborp, Wilts, SE. of Wotton Bassett. Salt-House, Norfolk, between Holt and the sea.

Saltibridge, in Waterford, Munster.

Saltley, Warw. NE. of Birmingham. Saltmarsh, Yorkf. SE. of Howden. Saltton, Yorkshire, NE. of Hovingham. Saltorn-Load, Norfolk, a channel in the Marsh Land. Saltrey, Abbey, Breames, Grange, Judith, Mill, and Moins, Huntingdonshire, S. and SE. of Conington. Saltrey, Common, and Drain, are E. of Conington. Saltrum, Devonshire, in Plymstock parish. Saltwater, Suffex, SW. of Chichester. Saltwater Haugh, near Durham, is a remarkable salt-spring in the middle of the river Wear; to be seen chiefly in the summer, when the water falls to the side of the channel. It tinges the stones near it with a red colour, and when boiled, has produced a great quantity of bay salt. Saltwick, Northumb. near Stannington. Saltwood, Kent, a mile NW. of Hythe.

SALTZBURG, a well-fortified city of Bavaria, capital of a territory of the same name, under the archbishop of Saltzburg, who is a sovereign prince. It is populous and well built, although the streets are narrow and ill-paved. The archbishop's palace is a superb structure, and has a magnificent garden, adorned with statues, and planted with uncommon trees. This is his summer house; but that for winter contains 163 apartments, all richly furnished, without reckoning the halls and galleries. The university partly depends on the Benedictine monks, who have a fine library in their monastery. In 1737, a separate college was built here for young gentlemen. The cathedral is built of freestone and marble, and contains five organs. Near Saltzburg are some considerable salt-works. It is seated on the river Saltz, 45 miles S. by W. of Passaw, and 140 WSW. of Vienna.

SALTZBURG, THE ARCHBISHOPRIC OF, a county of Germany, W. of Austria, S. of Upper Bavaria, and N. of Carinthia. It is a mountainous country, but pretty fertile, and contains mines of copper, silver, and iron. No manner of grain is sown here, but hay of a peculiar goodness is produced in every part. Here are considerable manufactures of steel and brass, as appears from the astonishing number of swords, sabres, muskets, cannon, &c. which are to be seen in the armories all over the country. In the archbishopric are 6 cities, and 25 market towns. It extends 100 miles in length, and 60 in breadth. The principal town is of the same name. In 1732, above 30,000 Lutheran Saltzburghers withdrew, with their effects, from the archbishopric, dispersing themselves in the other Protestant countries, and even in the British colonies in America.

SALVADOR, a town of Congo, capital of the country of Pemba, with a large palace, where the king resides, and a Portuguese bishop. It contains several churches, and about 40,000 inhabitants, of whom 4000 are white. The Portuguese live in a quarter by themselves. It is seated on a craggy mountain, in lat. 5. 50. S. and lon. 15. 39. E.

SALVADOR, ST. a large, populous, and handsome city of Brasil, formerly the residence residence of the governor, and containing several religious houses. The inhabitants, who are described as voluptuous, proud, ignorant, and superstitious, carry on a considerable trade. The houses are two or three stories high, and the walls thick and strong, being built of stone. The streets are generally large and straight; yet most of them have so steep an ascent, that they are impracticable to wheel carriages. Here are also many gardens, full of a great variety of fruit-trees, herbs, and flowers. The chief commodities for exportation, are sugar, tobacco, woad for dyers, raw hides, tallow, train oil, Brasil wood, balsam of capivi, ipecacuanha, and other drugs. It is seated on an eminence, 100 fathoms in height, formed by the E. side of the Bay of All-Saints, and the harbour is just below it. Lat. 12. 45. S. lon. 40. 10. W.

SALVAGES, small uninhabited islands, lying to the N. of the Canary Islands. Lat. 30. 11. N. lon. 17. 54. W.

Salvington, Suffex, in Terring parish. Salutation, Yorks. N. Riding, between Bedal and Danby-Wick.

SALUZZO, a town of Piedmont, capital of a marquissate of the same name, with a magnificent and rich cathedral. It is seated on an eminence, near the Po, 20 miles SSW. of Turin.

Salwarp, Worces. near Droitwich, by the river Salwarp, which runs into the Severn, near Worcester.

SALZA, GREAT, a town of Magdeburg, in Lower Saxony, noted for its salt-works.

SALZA, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony.

SAMAR, or TANDAY, one of the Philippine Islands, near the SE. extremity of Luzon, from which it is separated by a narrow strait. It is about 320 miles in circumference, and is full of craggy mountains, among which, however, are many valleys, extremely fertile in rice, yams, cocoa, gaby (a root so called), pepper, honey, wax, sugar-canes, cabbages, Chinese oranges, lemons, figs, and other kinds of fruit, little known in Europe. The woods swarm with birds of almost every description, particularly the common fowl, with shorter legs than ours; among which is also a very small bird, of the diminutive size of the wasp, with colours peculiarly vivid and beautiful, consisting of yellow, mixed with red and blue. Many kinds of monkeys, one of which is remarkably large, roebucks, wild buffaloes, and other quadrupeds, abound in the woods. The iron tree, ebony, and dying wood, grow in every part of the island, and gold dust is found in its more interior regions. The natives, at least, on the sea coast, were formerly Mahometans, but the missionary Jesuits have converted them to the religion and allegiance of Spain. Lat. 12. 15. N.

SAMARANG, a town on the NE. coast of the island of Java.

SAMARCAND, or SARMACAND, (called also MAWARALNAHR,) supposed to be the MARAKANDUS of the ancients, a very large and well-peopled city of Asia, capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the country of the Usbeck Tartars, with a famous academy of sciences, to which the Mahometans resort to study, from all the neighbouring countries. Many of the houses are built of stone, and it is fortified with strong bulwarks of earth. It was formerly the seat of Tamerlane the Great, as it now is of a Tartar prince, and carries on a great trade with Persia, Hindooستان, Chinese Tartary, &c. The silk paper made here is in great request throughout the East. The soil produces pears, apples, raisins, and melons of an exquisite taste. It is pleasantly seated on the river Sogde, 150 miles E. by N. of Bokhara. Lat. 39. 50. N. lon. 63. 20. E.

SAMBALLAS, several islands of America, on the N. coast of the isthmus of Darien. None of them are inhabited, but they are all claimed by the Spaniards. In the long channel between the Samballas and the isthmus, extending from Point Samballas to the Gulf of Darien, the sea is navigable from one end to the other, affording good anchorage and shelter, let the wind blow from what quarter it will.

Samborn, Warwickshire, near Great Coughton.

SAMBRE, a river of the Netherlands, which rises in the department of Aisne, and passing by Landrecy, Maubeuge, Charleroy, &c. falls into the Meuse at Namur.

Dorcas, Somerset. NW. of Milbourn-Port. Samford, Great and Little, Essex, NE. of Thaxted. Samlesbury-Hall, Lancashire, NW. of Blackburn, near a navigable canal, which communicates with all the late inland navigations.

SAMMADE, a town in the dept. of Landes, 9 miles SSE. of St. Sever.

Samnet, or Samehouse, Northumb. W. of Holy Island. Sammons, Essex, between Thorndons and Tilbury.

SAMOGITIA, a province of Poland, S. of the duchy of Courland, and E. of the Baltic, about 150 miles in length, and 90 in breadth. It is full of forests and very high mountains, which feed a great number of cattle, and produce a large quantity of honey. There are also very active horses, in high esteem. The inhabitants are accounted clownish, but honest; and a singular custom is said to prevail here, that no young woman is allowed to go out in the night, without a candle in her hand, and two bells at her girdle. Rosienne and Medniki are the principal places.

SAMOS, an island of the Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia, about 24 miles in length, and 10 in breadth, and extremely fertile. The inhabitants live at their ease, their taxation by the Turks being moderate. They are clothed in the Turkish manner, except a red coif, and their hair hanging down their backs, with plates of silver, or block tin, fastened to the ends. They have abundance of melons, lentils, kidney beans, and excellent muscadine grapes. They have white figs, four times as big as the common sort, but not so well tasted. Their silk is very fine, and the honey and wax admirable. This island abounds with partridges, woodcocks, snipes, thrushes, wood-pigeons, turtle-doves, wheatears and excellent poultry. They have iron mines, and most of the soil is of a rusty colour: they have also emery stone, and all the mountains are of white marble. The inhabitants are about 12,000, who are almost all Greeks, but the monks and priests occupy most part of the island. They have a bishop who resides at Corea.

SAMOTHRACIA, or SAMONDRAKI, a small island of the Archipelago, between Stalimene and the coast of Romania. It is 17 miles in circumference, and pretty well cultivated. Lat. 40. 34. N. lon. 25. 17. E.

SAMOYEDES, THE, once a numerous nation of Tartary in Asia, but now strangely dispersed; some of them are found in small detached bodies among the mountains which lie to the W. of Lake Baikal: others are supposed to be within the Chinese frontiers; while others are scattered among the deserts which extend along the Frozen Ocean; and some nearly as far to the W. as Archangel. They have no longer the use of horses, because the climate of their present country renders their subsistence impossible; but they have still preserved the manners of a pastoral people, and retain the use of moveable habitations, with which they wander from place to place. They neither have, nor appear ever to have had, any kind of regular government. They have a large head, a flat face, high cheek bones, small eyes, a flat nose, a wide mouth, a yellow complexion, large ears, straight, harsh, black hair, a short thick neck, little or no beard, and short legs.

Samford Peverel, Devon. by the river Leman, NE. of Tiverton. Samford-Shiney, Devonshire, SE. of Tavistock. Samson-Grange, Kent, near Margate. Samson's-Hall, Essex, near Colchester. Sambury, Lancashire, on the Ribble, NE. of Preston.

SANDO, a small town and island, situated on the N. coast of Nippon, in Japan.

SANDOMIR, a town of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, the soil of which is very fertile; and it has mines of gold, silver, and copper. It is situated on an eminence near the Vistula, not far from its conflux with the San, 80 miles ENE. of Cracow.

Sandon, Essex, near Chelmsford. Sandon, Herts, a mile N. of Rushden. Sandon, Northumberland, by Corbridge. Sandon, Great and Little, Staffordshire, NE. of Trent, below Stone. Sandown, Kent, in Worth parish. Sandown, Bay and Castle, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Sandown-Castle, Kent, N. of Deal. Sandridge, Devonshire, in Stoke Gabriel parish. Sandridge, Herts, near St. Alban's. Sandringham, Norfolk, near Coughan.

SANDUGAL, a town of Beira.

SANDULIET, a town of Brabant, 11 miles NNW. of Antwerp.

Sandwal, Staffordshire, 5 miles from Wolverhampton.

SANDWICH, a sea-port town of Kent, consisting of about 1500 houses, of most of them old and built with wood, though there are a few new ones built with brick and flints. The members properly belonging to it, as a Cinque Port, are Fordwich, Deal, Walmer, Ramsgate, Reculver, Stonar, and Sar. It was once a considerable sea-port, but is now much decayed, on account of the river Stour, on which it is seated, being so choked up with sand, as to admit only small vessels. By these, however, it exports, chiefly to the London markets, corn, malt, the largest and sweetest carrots, fruits, and seeds, the soil being remarkably good for all sorts of garden stuff. It is 13 miles E. of Canterbury, and 67 E. by S. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, in the N. Pacific Ocean, are 11 in number, and extend in latitude from 18. 54. to 22. 15. N. and in longitude from 150. 54. to 160. 24. W. They are called by the natives, Owhyhee, Mowee, Ranai, Morotoi, Tahoorowa, Woahoo, Atooi, Nee-heeheow, Oreehoua, Morotinne, and Tahooraa, all inhabited except the two last. The climate of these islands differs very little from that of the West Indies in the same latitude, except that it is more temperate; and there are no traces of those violent winds and hurricanes, which render the stormy months in the West Indies so dreadful. There is also more rain at the Sandwich Isles, where the mountainous parts being generally enveloped in a cloud, successive showers fall in the inland parts, with fine weather, and a clear sky, on the sea-shore. Hence it is, that few of those inconveniences, to which many tropical countries are subject, either from heat, or moisture, are experienced here. The winds, in the winter months, are generally from ESE. to NE. The vegetable productions are nearly the same as those of the other islands in this ocean; but the taro root is here of a superior quality. The bread-fruit trees thrive not in such abundance as in the rich plains of Otaheite, but produce double the quantity of fruit. The sugar-canes are of a very unusual size, some of them measuring 11 inches and a quarter in circumference, and having 14 feet eatable. There is also a root of a brown colour, shaped like a yam, and from 6 to 10 pounds in weight, the juice of which is very sweet, of a pleasant taste, and is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are hogs, dogs, and rats; the fowls are of the common common sort, and there are other birds beautiful and numerous, though not various. Goats, pigs, and European seeds, were left by Captain Cook; but the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two districts, in which the breed was entirely destroyed. The inhabitants are undoubtedly of the same race that possess the islands south of the equator; and in their persons, language, customs, and manners, approach nearer to the New Zealanders, than to their less distant neighbours, either of the Society or Friendly Islands. They are, in general, above the middle size, and strong; they walk gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing great fatigue. Many of both sexes are said to have fine open countenances; and the women, in particular, have good eyes and teeth, with a sweetness and sensibility of look, that render them very engaging. There is one peculiarity, characteristic of every part of this nation, that even in the handsomest faces there is a fulness of the nostril, without any flatness or spreading of the nose. They suffer their beards to grow, and wear their hair after various fashions. The dress of both men and women nearly resembles those of New Zealand, and both sexes wear necklaces of small variegated shells. Tattooing the body is practised by every colony of this nation. The hands and arms of the women are also very neatly marked; and they have the singular custom of tattooing the tip of the tongue. Like the New Zealanders, they have adopted the method of living together in villages, containing from 100 to 200 houses, built pretty closely together, without much order, and having a winding path between them. They are generally flanked, toward the sea, with detached walls, which are meant both for shelter and defence. These walls consist of loose stones, and the inhabitants are very dexterous in shifting them suddenly to such places as the direction of the attack may require. In the sides of the hills, they have little caves or retreats, the entrance to which is secured by a fence of the same kind. Some of their houses are large and commodious, from 40 to 50 feet long, and from 20 to 30 broad; while others are mere hovels. Their food consists principally of fish and vegetables, to which they add the flesh of dogs and hogs. The making of canoes, mats, &c. forms the occupation of the men; the women are employed in manufacturing cloth; and the servants are principally engaged in the plantations and fishing. They have various amusements, such as dancing, boxing, wrestling, &c. Their agriculture and navigation bear a great resemblance to those of the South Sea islands. Their plantations, which are spread over the whole sea-coast, consist of the taro, or eddy-root, and sweet potatoes, with plants of the cloth-tree set in rows. The bottoms of their canoes are of a single piece of wood, hollowed out to the thickness of an inch, and brought to a point at each end. The sides consist of three boards, each about an inch thick, neatly fitted and lashed to the bottom part. Some of their double canoes measure 70 feet in length, 3 and a half in depth, and 12 in breadth. They make salt in great abundance, and of a good quality. As the islands are not united under one government, wars are frequent among them. The same system of subordination prevails here as at the other islands, the same absolute authority on the part of the chiefs, and the same unresisting submission on the part of the people. The government is monarchical and hereditary. At Owhyhee is a regular society of priests living by themselves, and distinct, in all respects, from the rest of the people. Human sacrifices are here frequent; not only at the commencement of a war, or signal enterprise, but the death of every considerable chief calls for a repetition of these horrid rites. Yet, apart from these observances, they are acknowledged to be of the most mild and affectionate disposition. They live in the utmost harmony and friendship with each other; and in hospitality to strangers they are not exceeded even by the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands, when their resentment is not kindled by injury. Their improvements in agriculture, and the perfection of their manufactures, are certainly adequate to the circumstances of their situation, and the natural advantages which they enjoy.

Sandwich, and its Bay, Dorset. S. of Purbeck Island; see Swanwich. Sandy, Somerset. near Yeovil. Sandy Acre, E. of Derby. Sandy Capel, Surry, by Esher. Sandy-Hill, Dorset. near Corfe-Castle. Sandy-End, Middlesex, between Chelsea and Fulham.

SANDY HOOK, a small island near the coast of New Jersey, about 7 miles S. of Long Island. It was formerly a peninsula, but the sea broke through the isthmus, and formed it into an island, in the winter between the years 1777 and 1778.

SANPOO. See BURRAMPOOTER.

SANQUHAR, a town or royal borough of Nithdale, in the county of Dumfries, containing about 2600 inhabitants. It is chiefly remarkable for its coal trade, (the coals in this and the adjacent parish, supplying a large tract of country,) and a manufactory of knit worsted mittens and stockings, both coarse and fine. Here are also some beds of fuller's earth and lime-stone. It is seated on the river Nith, 24 miles NNW. of Dumfries.

SANTA-CLARA, a small island on the coast of Peru, in the Bay of Guyaquil.

SANTA-CRUZ, a town on the SW. coast of the island of Teneriff, defended by four small forts and several batteries. The town is very irregularly laid out, and contains about 300 houses, built of stone. The principal street is broad, and has more the appearance of a square than a street, with the governor's house at the upper end. Here is a church, and several convents. The road before the town is the principal one in the island for shelter, capacity, and the goodness of its bottom. It lies, however, entirely open to the SE. and S. winds; but these never continue long, and there is not an instance of a ship's driving from her anchors on shore. Lat. 28. 31. N. lon. 16. 31. W.

SANTA CRUZ, a town of Sus, on the coast of Morocco, with a large and secure harbour. It is seated on the Cape Aguer, or Ger, in lat. 30. 38. N. and lon. 10. 7. W.

SANTA CRUZ, a sea-port of Cuba, on the N. side of the island, 50 miles E. of the Havannah. Lon. 81. 16. W.

SANTA - CRUZ - DE - LA - SIERRA, a town of S. America, capital of a province of the same name in the vice-royalty of Buenos-Ayres. The environs produce great quantities of honey and wax. Lat. 17. 46. S. lon. 65. 14. W.

SANTA-FE, a town of N. America, capital of New Mexico, seated near the Rio-del-Norte, 920 miles NNW. of Mexico. Lat. 36. 50. N. lon. 106. 35. W.

SANTA-FE-DE-BOGOTA, a town of S. America, capital of New Granada, with a university. It is seated on the river Magdalena, in a plentiful country, abounding in corn, cattle, and fruit, with mines of silver in the mountains, 363 miles S. of Carthagen. Lat. 4. 9. N. lon. 73. 5. W.

SANTANDER, a sea-port of Asturias.

SANTAREN, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, containing about 8000 inhabitants. It is situated in a country very fertile in wheat, wine, and oil, near the river Tajo, 45 miles NNE. of Lisbon.

SANTEE, a river of S. Carolina.

SANTEN, a town of Cleves, with fine walks, that run as far as Wesel, from which it is 5 miles distant to the W.

SANTILLANA, a sea-port of Asturias, capital of the eastern part of that province. It is 70 miles E. of Oviedo, and 200 nearly N. of Madrid.

Santon, Cumberland, near Penrith.

Santon, Devonf. in Branton parish. Santon, Lincolnf. near Spittle-in-the-Street.

Santon, Cumberland, in Irton parish. Santon-House, Norfolk, near Brandon-Ferry.

SANTORIN, or ST. ERINI, (anciently called THERA and CALISTE, or the HANDSOME,) an island of the Archipelago, to the N. of Candia, and to the SW. of Naphio. It is about eight miles in length, nearly as much in breadth, and almost covered with pumice stone, whence the soil, in general, must be dry and barren; it is, however, greatly improved, by the labour and industry of the inhabitants, who have turned the most ungrateful spot of ground in the world into a perfect orchard. It affords little wheat, but a great deal of barley and cotton, and a potent spirituous wine, of the colour of rhenish, in profusion; in the exportation of which, to all parts of the Archipelago, and even as far as Constantinople, as also in the manufactory of cotton, their trade principally consists. Fruit is scarce, except figs, and they have neither oil nor wood. They kill their beeves but once a year, and then they put it in pickle. The inhabitants, also, who are all Greeks, are about 10,000 in number; though they are subject to the Turks, they chuse their own magistrates. Pyrgos is the capital, besides which there are four towns and five villages. They have but one spring in the island, for which reason they preserve the rain-water in cisterns. Lat. 36. 10. N. lon. 36. 1. E.

SANTOS, a fortified town in the government of St. Paul, in Brazil, situated on a river, about half a league in breadth and five fathoms deep, in a bay of the same name, about 51 leagues SE. of St. Paul.

SANTOS LOS, a town of Panama.

Santofte-Ferry, Linc. from Yorkshire to the Isle of Axholm.

SANXAY, a town in the department of the Vienne, 6 miles NW. of Lusignan.

SAON, a town in the department of the Drome.

SAONA, an island near the S. coast of St. Domingo, in lon. 68. 58. W. It is about 18 miles long and 3 broad, and abounds with pleasant woods and pastures, though it is wholly uninhabited, or, at least, only frequented by fishermen, at the time when the turtles come on shore to lay their eggs.

SAONE AND LOIRE, a department of France, S. of the dept. of Côte-d'Or, and W. of the dept. of the Jura. Maçon is the capital.

SAONE, UPPER, a dept. of France, so called from a considerable river which rises near Darney in Mount Vosges, and passing by Gray, Auxonne, Chalons, Verdun, Maçon, &c. falls into the Rhone at Lyons. The capital is Vesoul.

SAORGIO, a fortified town of Nice, in Piedmont, situated on the summit of a rock, in the peninsula, almost surrounded by the rivers Roia and Bendola, 17 miles NE. of Nice.

Sapcot, Leicest. SE. of Hinckley. Sapperton, Derby. E. of Uttoxeter. Saper-ton, Gloucestershire.

SAPIENZA, three islands and a cape, with the circumjacent sea, opposite Modon, near the S. coast of the Morea; they are very small, and badly cultivated. Lat. 36. 50. N. lon. 21. 35. E.

Sapington, Kent, near Betham. Sapiston, Suffolk, NW. of Ixworth. Sapley, and its Park and Heath, N. of Huntingdon.

SAP LE, a town in the department of the Orne.

Sapperton, Linc. W. of Fokingham. Sapy, Upper, Heref. N. of Bromyard. Sapy, Lower, or Sapy-Pitchard, Worcester. N. of Bromyard.

SARACENS, the general name of a people, celebrated some centuries ago, who came originally from the deserts of Arabia: Sarra, in their language, signifying a desert. They were the first disciples of Mahomet, and, within 60 years after his death, conquered a considerable part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They invaded France, and kept possession of Spain till the year 1511, when they were finally expelled. They also maintained a war in Palestine a long time, against the Western Christians, and, at length, drove them entirely out of it; but now there are no people known by that name, for the descendants of those who conquered Spain are called Moors.

SARAGOSSA, a large, handsome, well-built city of Spain, in Arragon, with an archbishop's see, a university, founded in 1474, and a court of inquisition. It was originally built by the Phœnicians, who called it Salduba; and the Romans sent a colony here in the reign of Augustus, whence it had the name of Cæsar Augustus, which, by corruption, has been changed into Saragossa. It is adorned with many magnificent buildings, and they reckon here 17 large churches, and 14 handsome monasteries, not to mention others less considerable. The streets are long and broad, but ill-paved and dirty; and the houses are from three to six stories high. The river Ebro runs across the place, dividing it into two; and on its banks is a handsome quay, which serves for a public walk. The Holy street is so large and broad, that it may be taken for a square; and here they have their bull-fights. In this street are the houses of several noblemen's families, particularly that of the viceroy. The cathedral is a large, but irregular Gothic building; but the finest church here is the collegiate one of Nuestra Señora del Pilar, both for its supposed miraculous image, and also for its valuable treasures. This celebrated Madona, or image of St. Mary and the infant, stands on a marble pillar, and with its ornaments is immensely rich; the crown being full of precious stones of an inestimable price; scarce any thing is to be seen but gold and jewels, which, with the silver lamps, wax lights, &c. dazzle the beholder's eye, and a vast number of devotees resort in pilgrimage hither.

Nither. The town-house is a sumptuous structure; in the hall are the pictures of all the kings of Arragon, and in the corner of it a St. George on horseback, with a dragon of white marble under him. Saragossa is seated in a large plain, rendered extremely fertile in fruits, &c. by the winding of the Ebro, on which it stands, and over which it has two bridges, one of stone, the other of wood, (which latter has been thought the most beautiful of its kind in Europe,) 130 miles nearly W. of Barcelona, and 160 NE. of Madrid. Lat. 41. 53. N. lon. 0. 28. W.

SARAMON, a town in the department of the Gers.

SARATOF, or SARATOVSKI, a government of Russia, divided into 12 districts, of which that of the same name is the principal. It was formerly a province of Astracan.

SARATOF, a town of Russia, in the government of the same name, seated on the Volga, 392 miles SE. of Moscow. Lat. 51. 30. N.

SARATOGA, a town of New York, situated on the river Hudson, where, in 1777, a British army, under Gen. Burgoyne, surrendered to the Americans, under General Gates, on a capitulation, whereby they were to have a free passage to Great Britain, on condition of not serving against America during the war. It is 28 miles N. of New York.

SARBRUCK, a town of Treves.

SARBRUCK, or SARBOURG, a town in the dept. of Meurthe, seated on the river Saare, 33 miles E. of Nanci.

SARDAM, or SAENREDAM, a sea-port of N. Holland, where formerly were vast magazines of timber for building ships, and naval stores, with a prodigious number of shipwrights. Here is still seen the hut in which Peter the Great, czar of Russia, resided, while he worked as a shipwright in this town. It has been said, that the ship-builders of Sardam would undertake, on two month's notice, to build a ship of war every week during the year. Sardam is seated on the river Wye, 7 miles NW. of Amsterdam.

SARDINIA, an island of the Mediterranean, 142 miles in length from N. to S. and 60 in its mean breadth from E. to W. It was originally peopled by the Phenicians and Greeks, and called by the latter Ichnusa, Sandialotis, and Sardo. The soil is fertile in corn and wine, and there are a great number of oranges, citrons, and olives. On the coast is a fishery for anchovies and coral, of which they send large quantities to Genoa and Leghorn. Beeves and sheep are numerous, as well as horses, which are very good for labour and the road. They are fed in the little islands about it, which abound in game; and in that of Asinaria are great numbers of turtles. The air is reckoned very unhealthy, from the marshy land. The inhabitants were formerly accounted rude and barbarous, and the Romans banished their state prisoners to this island; but they are much more civilized since, and enjoyed great liberty, till an inquisition was established at Sassari. As the inhabitants are not very industrious, the land is not sufficiently cultivated; nor do they pay much attention to trade. It contains mines of silver, lead, sulphur, and alum; and they make a good deal of salt. In 1708, this island was taken by the English for Charles III. and allotted to the emperor by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713; but, in 1720, it was ceded to the duke of Savoy, as an equivalent for Sicily. The royal revenue is inconsiderable, after the charges of the army and civil officers are deducted. The king of Sardinia keeps his court at Turin, the capital of his Piedmontese territories; but he has a viceroy at Cagliari, which is the capital of this island.

SARDO, or SART, a decayed town of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia. It was formerly called Sardis, and was capital of Lydia, and the seat of the famous king Croesus. It now contains only a few poor huts. However, here is a large caravansary, where there are handsome lodgings for travellers, it lying in the great road from Smyrna to Aleppo; and the Turks have a mosque, which was formerly a Christian church. The inhabitants are now almost all shepherds, who feed their flocks in the neighbouring plains. There are also a few Christians, who employ themselves in gardening. It is about 30 miles ENE. of Smyrna.

Sardon, Great and Little, Stafford. SW. of Cank. Saresden, Oxfordshire, in Churchill parish.

SARGANS, a town of Zurich, capital of a mountainous, but fertile county of the same name, about 15 miles in extent every way. It is governed by a bailiff sent by the eight cantons alternately. The inhabitants are partly Calvinists and partly papists. It is situated on the top of a hill, near some mineral springs, 45 miles ESE. of Zurich.

SARCEL, a sea-port of Tremesen, seated on the sea-coast, 25 miles from Algiers. Lat. 36. 30. N. lon. 2. 15. W.

SARGUEMINE, a town in the dept. of Moselle, seated on the river Sare, 9 miles N. of Sarbruck.

SARK, or SERK, a little island, on, or near the coast of France, about two miles long, and nearly as much wide, and containing about 300 inhabitants. The air is serene and remarkably healthful, and the soil, though generally hot and sandy, affords all necessaries for its inhabitants, particularly apples, of which they make excellent cyder, turnips, carrots, and other roots, with most kinds of grain. Their pasture, though short, is exceedingly sweet, and therefore they have very fine mutton; they have also milk and butter, but their cheese generally comes from England. Ducks, mallards, woodcocks, teal, &c. abound here, and, at some seasons, the cliff-pigeons almost cover the island. Of rabbits they have great plenty, and also a variety of sea-fish. The only manufacture of the island is knitting of stockings, gloves, waistcoats, with which they trade to Bristol and some of the western ports, and return with necessaries, having several small vessels for that purpose.

SARK, LITTLE, a very small island, situated a little to the S. of Sark.

SARK, a river which rises in the E. part of Dumfriesshire, and, for several miles, forms the boundary between England and Scotland. It is formed of two branches, the White and Black, and runs into the Eden, below Milner-Hill, or about 4 miles below Carlisle.

SARLAT, a town in the dept. of Dordogne, 27 miles SE. of Perigueux.

SARAT LOUIS, a fortified town in the dept. of Moselle, seated in a peninsula formed by the river Sare, 32 miles ENE. of Mentz.

Sarnesfield, and Sarnesfield-Coffen, Heref. near Webley. Sarney, N. and S. Gloucef. near Cirencester. Sarnsfolgrin, Carnarvonshire.

SARNO, a town of Principato Citra, 10 miles NW. of Salerno. The environs produce, annually, about 4000 pounds weight of the finest and best wound silk in the kingdom.

SARNO, or SAFATA, a small river of Naples, which rises near a town of the same name, and runs into the Mediterranean, about 10 miles SSE. of Naples.

SAROS, a town of Hungary, noted for a poisonous spring in its neighbourhood. It is 6 miles NW. of Eperies.

SARPEN, a town of Christiansand, in Norway, near which is a dreadful cataract or waterfall, the noise of which is plainly heard at the distance of 20 miles. It drives 17 mills, and is 10 miles WSW. of Frederickstadt.

Sarre, or Sarr-Street, Kent, in the Isle of Thanet. Sarret, Herts, N. of Watford.

SARRE, a river of France, which rises in the dept. of the Vosges, and passing by Sarbruck, Sar Louis, Sarbruck in Treves, falls into the Moselle, a little above Treves.

SARREAL, a town of Catalonia, seated on the river Francoli. In the neighbourhood are quarries of alabaster, so transparent that they glaze their windows with it.

SARRI, a town of Corsica, 11 miles N. of Ajaccio.

SARSANA, a town of Genoa, situated on the river Magra, 45 miles ESE. of Genoa.

SARSINA, a town of Romagna.

SARTE, a dept. of France, S. of that of Orne, and E. of that of Mayenne. It takes its name from a river which rises near Sees, in the dept. of Orne, and passing by Alençon, Frenay le Vicomte, Le Mans, &c. where it becomes navigable, joins the Mayenne near Angiers, 4 miles below which the united streams fall into the Loire. The capital is Mans.

SARUM, NEW. See SALISBURY.

SARUM, OLD, an ancient borough of Wilts, which, though now reduced to a single farm-house, still sends two members to parliament; these are chosen by the proprietors of certain adjacent lands. It once covered the summit of a high steep hill; but there is nothing now to be seen of it but some small ruins of a castle, with a double intrenchment, and a deep ditch. The tracts of the streets and cathedral may be pretty distinctly traced out by the different colour of the corn growing where once the city stood. It is about a mile N. of Salisbury.

SARVERDEN, a town in the dept. of Moselle, seated on the river Sare, 10 miles NNW. of Sarbruck.

SARWAR, a town and county of Hungary, 48 miles SE. of Vienne.

SASERAM, a large town of Hindoostan, in the country of Bahar, seated near a great lake, 55 miles SE. of Benares.

SASSARI, a city of Sardinia, capital of the territory of Lugari, and the occasional residence of the viceroy. It contains near 30,000 inhabitants, and is famous for a fountain called Rossel, which is said to be much more magnificent than the the best at Rome. The inhabitants, indeed, have the following proverb, Gbi none vidde Rossel, non vidde mondo: he that has not seen Rossel, has not seen the world. It is seated in a plain, 6 miles NNE. of Algiers, in lat. 40. 46. N. and lon. 8. 39. E.

SAS-VAN GHENT, a town of Dutch Flanders, small, but regularly fortified. It has five sluices, and is seated on a canal, which communicates with the Scheld and with the Ghent, 8 miles N. of that city.

SASSUOLO, a town of Modena.

SATABAGO, a province of Asiatic Turkey. S. of Imiretta.

SATALIA, or ANTALIA, a sea-port of Caramania, large, strong, and divided into three towns. Here is a superb mosque, which was formerly a Christian church. The country about it is fertile; and the citrons and oranges are excellent. The inhabitants trade in wool, cotton, goat's hair, agaric, gum tragacanth, opium, and bees' wax. It is 134 miles S. of Kiutaja, and 265 S. by E. of Constantinople. Lat. 37. 1. N. lon. 32. 21. E.

Saterleigh, Devonf. on the Bray, SW. of South Moulton. Saterthwaite, Lanc. in the NW. angle of it, between the rivers Fosse and Thuston.

SATGONG, or SATAGONG, an considerable village in the soubah of Bengal. In the 16th century, however, it was a large, trading city, in which the European traders had their factories. It is seated on a creek of the Hooghly River, about 4 miles NW. of Hooghly.

Satridge, Herts. NE. of Thundridge. Satron, Yorkf. E. of Swaledale.

SATTARAH, a town of Visiapour, in Hindoostan, formerly capital of the Mahrattas. It is situated near the source of the Kistnah, 50 miles S. of Poonah.

SAVA, a town of Arabian Irac, in Persia, 60 miles S. of Casbin.

SAVAGE ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, apparently overrun with woods and bushes. It is about 30 miles in circumference, and was discovered and so named by Captain Cook, from the rude, inhospitable behaviour, of the inhabitants, in 1774. Lat. 19. 1. S. lon. 169. 37. W.

SAVANNAH, a town of N. America, in the state of Georgia, of which it was formerly the capital. It is regularly built in the form of a parallelogram, and is seated on a sandy bluff, with banks at least 60 feet high, on the S. side of the river Savannah, 17 miles from its mouth, and 117 SE. of Augusta. Lat. 32. 0. N. lon. 81. 12. W.

SAVANNAH, a river of N. America, which forms a part of the divisional line that separates the state of Georgia from that of S. Carolina. It is formed by the union of the Toogoloo and Keowee, and is navigable for boats of 100 feet keel from Augusta to Savannah, and thence for vessels of 300 tons burden, to its entrance into the Atlantic Ocean, at Tybee-Bar, in lat. 32. 2. N. and lon. 81. W. where it has 16 feet water at half tide.

SAVATOPOLI, or SEBASTOPOLIS, anciently DIOSCURIAS, a town of Mingrelia, situated on the Black Sea.

SAVE, a river of Germany, which rises in Carniola, and runs into the Danube, at or near Belgrade.

SAVERNAY, a town in the department of the Lower Loire, 18 miles NW. of Nantes.

SAVENDROOG, a fortress of Mysore, in Hindoostan, situated on the top of a vast rock, rising half a mile in perpendicular height, from a base of above eight miles in circumference; and divided at the summit by a chasm, which forms it into two hills. These, having each their peculiar defences, form two citadels capable of being maintained independently of the lower works. Walls, cross-walls, and barriers have also been erected at every accessible place. On Dec. 10th, 1791, Colonel Stuart encamped within three miles of the rock, and on the morning of the 21st, at 11 o'clock, the British soldiery made themselves masters of a fortress which had hitherto been considered as impregnable. It is 18 miles W. of Bangalore, and 47 NE. of Seringapatam.

SAVERDUN, a town in the dept. of Arriège, seated on the river Arriège, 15 miles NW. of Mirepoix.

Savernake Forest, Wilts, SE. of Marlborough, about 12 miles in compass, and the only privileged forest for hunting that is possessed by a subject. It is plentifully stocked with large deer, and adorned with many delightful walks and vistas, (cut through the woods and coppices,) 8 of which meet in a point near the centre.

SAVERNE, or ZABERNE, a town in the dept. of Lower Rhine, 18 miles NW. of Strasbourg, and 120 E. of Paris.

SAVERNE DU RHINE, or RHEINZABERN, a town of Spire, 21 miles SSW. of Manheim.

Saveson, Hampshire, NE. of Quarley-Hill. Saughe, a river in Carnarvonshire, which which runs into the Irish Channel, S. of Ticmor Point. Saviors, St. Cornw. near Foy. Saviour's, St. Cornw. near Padstow-Haven.

SAVIGLIANO, a town and fertile district of Piedmont, about 8 miles ESE. of Saluzzo. Also a town of Bari.

Saul, Gloucestershire, 4 miles from Newnham, and 6 from Dursley. Saul, or Sell, Norfolk, between Alesham and Foulsham. Saulden, Bucks, in Mursley parish, near Fenny-Stratford. Sauldon, Devonf. NE. of Stratton, and near the Tamar.

SAULGEN, a town and county in Austrian Suabia.

SAULIEU, a town in the department of Côte-d'Or, where anciently was a college of the Druids; a wood in which they performed their sacrifices, and the ruins of a temple dedicated to the Sun, are yet visible. It is 30 miles W. of Dijon, and 142 SE. of Paris.

SAMUR, a town in the department of Maine and Loire; before the revolution, capital of the Saumurois. Here is a famous bridge over the Loire, built in 1768; it consists of 12 elliptic arches, each 60 feet in diameter. Saumur is 22 miles SE. of Angers, and 160 SW. of Paris.

Saunby, Nottinghamf. SW. of Gainborough, in Lincolnshire.

SAUNDER'S ISLAND. See SIR CHARLES SAUNDER'S ISLAND.

Savock, a river in Lancashire, which runs into the Ribble, near Lea, 3 miles below Preston.

SAVOLAX, a district of Finland, bordering on Russia, about 200 miles in length and 100 in breadth. It is full of woods, lakes, and morasses, and is but thinly inhabited.

SAVONA, a considerable town of Genoa, and, next to Genoa, the best in the republic. It contains several fine churches, and other well-built structures. The Genoese, fearing that it would hurt their trade, ruined the harbour, or, at least, rendered it unfit for large vessels. The country about it is well cultivated, and abounds in silks, and all sorts of fruits. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 20 miles SW. of Genoa.

SAVONIERS, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, situated on the Cher, 8 miles SW. of Tours. Near it are certain caverns, remarkable for their petrifications.

SAVOY, a ci-devant duchy of Europe, anciently called Sabaudia, and now forming the department of Mont-Blanc. In 1792, this country was over-run by the French, the people receiving them as friends rather than as enemies; and, in the same year, it was decreed by the national convention, that it should be an 84th department of France, by the name of Mont-Blanc. See BLANC, MONT.

SAVU, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 24 miles in length, dependent on the Dutch East-India Company. The Dutch, however, have not taken possession of it, but they send sloops to trade with the natives, for vegetables, fruits, fowls, flesh, and other provisions to supply the inhabitants of their Spice Islands. Lat. 10. 35. S. lon. 122. 30. E.

Sauthy, a river in Carmarthenshire, which runs into the Muthy, near Llangadock.

SAUVES, a town in the department of Gard, 12 miles SW. of Alais.

SAUVETERRE, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, 17 miles NNW. of Pau.

SAUVETERRE, a town in the department of Aveyron, 14 miles SW. of Rhodéz.

* SAWBRIDGEWORTH, a town of Hertfordshire, 4 miles S. of Bishop's-Stortford, and 26 N. of London. Market on Wednesday.

SAXENHAGEN, a town of Schawenburg, in Westphalia, 50 miles NW. of Hanover.

Saxham, Cambridgesh. near Newmarket-Heath. Saxham, Great and Little, Suffolk, W. of Bury. Saxilby, NW. of Lincoln, on the Foss-Dyke. Saxlingham, Norfolk, W. of Holt. Saxlingham, Nethergate and Thorp, Norfolk, W. of Lodon.

* SAXMUNDHAM, a town of Suffolk, containing about 400 pretty good houses, but the streets are narrow and not paved.

It has no particular manufacture, and is situated upon a hill, between Woodbridge and Yoxford, in the road to Halesworth, 19 miles NE. of Ipswich, and 89 NE. of London. Market on Thursday.

SAXONY, UPPER, one of the nine circles of the German empire. It is bounded on the E. by Prussia, and a part of Poland and Silesia; on the S. by Bohemia and Franconia; on the W. by the circle of the Upper Rhine, and that of Lower Saxony; and on the N. by the Baltic, and the circle of Lower Saxony. The elector of Saxony was formerly the director; but as the whole circle now is mostly Lutheran, eight assessors are deputed to the imperial chambers, of which the elector of Saxony names two, the elector of Brandenburg two, and the other states name the rest. It comprehends the electorate of Saxony, or Saxony Proper, the principality of Anhalt, the landgravate of Thuringia, the marche of Brandenburg, and the duchy of Pomerania; and these are subdivided into many districts.

SAXONY, LOWER, one of the nine circles of the German empire, is bounded on the N. by the Baltic and the duchy of Sleswick; on the W. by the German Ocean and the circle of Westphalia; and on the S. and E. by the circle of the Upper Rhine, and the circle of Upper Saxony. The directors of this circle are the dukes of Magdeburg, Bremen, and of Brunswick-Lunenbug. It comprehends the archbishopric of Magdeburg, the bishopric of Hildesheim, the archbishopric of Bremen, the bishoprics of Halberstadt, Schwerin, Ratzburg, Lubec, and Sleswick; the duchies of Brunswick Lunenburg, Lawenburg, and Mecklenburg; the principality of Verden; the counties of Reinstein and Blauburg; the free-cities of Hamburg, Lubec, Goltan, Mulhausen, and Northausen, SAXONY, PROPER, or THE ELECTORATE OF SAXONY, in the circle of Upper Saxony, composed of the duchy of Saxony, the greater part of the margraviate of Milnia, a part of the Vogtland, and the N. part of Thuringia, Lusatia, and a part of the county of Henneburg. It is about 75 miles in length, and 62 in breadth, is cut into two unequal parts by the river Elbe, and is a very fertile and trading country, abounding in mines:

Saxted, Suffolk, near Framlingham. Saxthorp, Norfolk, NW. of Alesham. Saxton, Yorkshire, near Aberforth. Sax- ulby, Leicestershire, NW. of Melton-Mowbray.

SCALITZ, or SCALA, a town of Hungary, 32 miles WNW. of Topoltzan.

Scalmarlin-Rocks, in Down, Ulster. They are situated in Donaghadee-Harbour, and, though so smooth and flat that vessels seldom suffer on them, are rather dangerous, being overflowed by the tide.

Scalme-Park, Yorks. between Sherborn and Selby.

SCALP, a curious chasm, or fissure, in a ridge of mountains, 5 miles from Dublin, on the road to the Dargle and Waterfall. It seems as if by an extraordinary convulsion in nature, the mountain had been cracked across, and torn asunder, prodigious heaps of stones, of enormous size, having tumbled down into the rocky chasm. It forms one of the most striking curiosities in Ireland. By breaking down and levelling the prominences of the prodigious piles of massive rocks in the bottom, an easy and good road has been insinuated through the rugged fissure.

SCAMINA, a town of Livadia, 20 miles N. of Athens.

Scamestby, Lincoln. N. of Horncastle. Scampton, 4 miles from Lincoln.

SCANDAROON. See ALEXANDRETTA.

SCARA, a town of W. Gothland, formerly the residence of the kings of Gothland. It is seated S. of the lake Wenner, 66 miles NE. of Gottenburg.

SCARBOROUGH, an ancient, large, and well built town, in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, sheltered from the N. and NE. winds by a high, steep rock, near which are huge, craggy cliffs, almost inaccessible. On the top of this rock is a large green plain, of about 19 acres, with a little well of fresh water springing out of the rock. A noble large castle was erected here by King Henry II. which is now mostly in ruins. This place is greatly frequented on account of its spa well, the waters of which are a compound of vitriol, iron, alum, nitre, and salt, and are both purgative and diuretic, as also for sea-bathing, on which account it is much improved of late years, in the number and beauty of its buildings. The spring was under the cliff, part of which fell down in December 1737, and the water was lost; but, in clearing away the ruins to rebuild the wharf, it was recovered, to the great joy of the town. Here are assemblies and balls, in the same manner as at Tunbridge. Scarborough has a very convenient pier harbour, (reckoned the best, for vessels in stress of weather to put into, between Newcastle and the Humber,) possesses a considerable shipping-trade, and supplies York, and other places, with cod, mackarel, turbot, pickled herrings, &c. It is romantically situated, in the form of a half moon, partly surrounded by the sea, 36 miles NE. by E. of York, and 237 N. of London. Markets on Thursday and Saturday.

SCARBOROUGH, a town and fort of Tobago, taken from the French, by storm, by the English general, Cuyler, April 15, 1793.

Scarcliff, Derbys. near Bolsover.

SCARDONA, a town of Dalmatia.

Scarsbrick, Lancashire, near Marton-Meer and the sea. Scarle, North, Lincoln. SW. of Lincoln. Scarle, South, Nottingham. in the parish of Newark-on-Trent.

SCARLINO, a town of Tuscany.

Scarning, Norf. SW. of E. Dereham.

SCARO, a town of Santorin, in the Archipelago.

SCARPANTO, anciently CARPATHUS, an island of the Archipelago, and one of the Sporades, lying to the SW. of the Isle of Rhodes. It is about 18 miles in length, and 6 in breadth. It abounds in cattle and game, and has mines of iron, quarries of marble, with several good harbours, and particularly one at its principal town on the W. coast. The inhabitants are mostly Greeks.

SCARPE, a river of France, which rises near Aubigny, in the dept. of Calais, washes Arras, Douay, and St. Amand, and runs into the Scheldt at Mortagne, 7 miles SSE. of Tournay.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, a town of Swisserland, capital of a canton of the same name, situated on the N. shore of the Rhine, near a celebrated cataract. It was formerly an imperial town, governed by an aristocracy, but was admitted a member of the Helvetic confederacy in 1501; its territory formed, or lately did, the twelfth canton in rank. The inhabitants of this town are computed at 6000; but the number of citizens or burgeses (in whom the supreme power ultimately resides) is about 1600. From these are elected 85 members, who form the great and little council; the senate, or little council of 25, being intrusted with the executive power, and the great council (including the senate) finally deciding all appeals, and regulating the more important concerns of government. The town is tolerably well built, and is much noted for its wooden bridge over the Rhine. The river being extremely rapid here, had already destroyed several stone bridges of the strongest construction, when, in 1754, Ulric Grubenman, a carpenter of Tuffen, in Appenzel, undertook to throw a wooden bridge of a single arch, over the river, which is near 400 feet wide. The magistrates, however, required that it should consist of two arches, and that he should, for that purpose, employ the middle pier of the old bridge. He has done so; but has contrived to leave it a matter of doubt, whether the bridge is supported by the middle pier, or not. A man of the slightest weight feels it almost tremble under him; yet waggons heavily laden pass over it continually without danger. It is what the Germans call hangerwerk, or hanging bridge; the sides and top of it are covered; the road, which is almost level, is not carried, as usual, over the top of the arch, but (if the expression may be used) is let into the middle of it, and there suspended. The ingenious architect, however, was totally unacquainted with the theory of mechanics. Vessels that go down the Rhine pay a toll here. The inhabitants are about 7000. Schaffhausen is 22 miles N. by E. of Zurich. Lat. 47. 43. N. lon. 8. 41. E.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, the smallest canton of Swisserland, bounded on the N. and W. by Suabia; on the E. by part of Suabia, and the bishopric of Constance; and on the S. by the Rhine. It is about 5 leagues in length, and 3 in breadth, and contains 17 parishes and 10 bailiwicks. The revenues of the state are not very considerable, as will appear from the salary of the burgomaster, or chief of the republic, which barely amounts to 150l. a year. The reformation was introduced here in 1529. The clergy are supported by the state; but their income is barely sufficient for their maintenance, the greatest salary being only 100l. and the least 40l. per annum. The professors of literature also, who are taken from the clergy, are paid by government; and a school is supported at the public expense. Sumptuary laws are in force here, as well as in most parts of Swisserland; and no dancing is allowed except upon particular occasions. The pastures are good, and they export wine; corn is mostly procured from Suabia. The population of the canton, without including the town of Schaffhausen, is estimated at 23,000.

SCHALHOLF, or SKAALHOLT, a town of Iceland, the see of a bishop, (to which belong 163 churches) with a college, a cathedral, and a school. Lat. 64. 40. N. lon. 22. 20. W.

SCHAMACHYA, a town of Persia, capital of Shirvan. It was formerly very large, but is now decayed, above 6000 houses having been thrown down by an earthquake. It has, however, very large manufactories of silks and cottons, and is seated on the W. side of the Caspian Sea, 250 miles NNE. of Tauris. Lat. 40. 50. N. lon. 50. 4. E.

SCHARDING, a town of Bavaria, seated on the river Inn, 7 miles S. of Passaw.

SCHARNITZ, a town in the Tyrolese, situated on the confines of Bavaria, near a mountain pass of considerable importance.

SCHAWENBURG, a territory of Westphalia, about 30 miles in length, and 10 in breadth; subject partly to the Landgrave of Hesse, partly to the Duke of Brunswick Lunenburg, and partly to the Count of Lippe.

SCHELD, one of the most considerable rivers of the Netherlands, which rises about 8 miles N. of St. Quintin, in the department of Aisne, and passing by Cambray, Bouchain, Valenciennes, Condé, Tournay, Oudenarde, Ghent, Dendermond, and Antwerp, divides itself into two branches below Fort Lillo. One of these, called the Eastern-Scheld, flows by Bergen-op-Zoom; the other, the Western-Scheld proceeds to Flushing, and both forming several islands, empty themselves into the German Ocean.

SCHELLA, a town of Hungary, seated on the river Waag, (near a volcano, that burns continually) 25 miles NE. of Presburgh.

SCHELLENBURG, a town of Berschtodsgaden, in Bavaria, famous for the defeat of the French and Bavarians, in 1704, by the English and Imperialists, under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Lewis of Baden. The former were very strongly entrenched. It is 22 miles SSW. of Ingoldstadt; also a town of Erzgebürg, in Upper Saxony, and a town in the duchy of Westphalia.

SCHELLING, an island of W. Friesland, at the entrance of the Zuyder-Zee, between Vly Island and Ameland.

Schelly, Sussex, NE. of Horsham.

SCHEMNITZ, a town of Hungary, one of the seven mountain towns, defended by three castles, and containing a college, and a royal mine office. In largeness, and number of mine-works, it surpasses all the other mine-towns in Hungary. The gold and silver mines here still produce a considerable quantity of ore. The workmen are in number above 5000. The yearly charges to the crown, of the mine-works here, amount to above 500,000 guilders. It is 14 miles S. of Kremnitz, and 92 E. of Vienna.

SCHENING, a town in E. Gothland. The annual fair here, on the 29th of July, is reckoned one of the greatest in the whole kingdom. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Skena, 8 miles SSE. of Västena, and 17 SW. of Linköping.

SCHENCK, or SCHENKENSCHAN, a strong fortress of Guelderland, situated in an angle of the Betuwe, (where the Rhine divides itself into two branches, called the Wahal and the Rhine, two miles and a half N. of Cleves. It completely commands the two streams, and is considered as the centre of communication between Germany and Holland.

SCHENECTADY, a town of New York, situated in a fertile soil, on the Mohawk's river, 18 miles NW. of Albany.

SCHENINGEN, a town of Wolfenbuttle, large and opulent, but now very much declined.

SCHER, a town of Suabia.

SCHERDING, a town of Upper Bavaria, situated on the Inn, 6 miles S. of Passau.

SCHESBURG, a town of Transilvania, 47 miles ESE. of Colosfyar.

SCHÈVE, a town of N. Jutland.

SCHÉVELING, a village of Holland, agreeably situated, about one league NW. from the Hague.

SCHIEDAM, a town of S. Holland, seated on the canal called the Schie, which communicates with the Maese, a little below the town, 4 miles W. of Rotterdam.

Schilcester, or St. Oswald's, in the Piët's Wall, near Castle-Steeds, above the conflux of the N. and S. Tyne. Schillington, Northumberland, in the manor of Heppal.

SCHILTACH, a town of Wurtemberg.

SCHINZNACH, a town of Bern, celebrated for its tepid mineral waters.

SCHIRAS, a large and considerable city of Persia, capital of Farisitan, extending about three miles in length from E. to W. but not so much in breadth. The houses are built of bricks dried in the sun, and the roofs are flat and terraced. It contains 15 handsome mosques, tiled with stones of a bluish green colour, and lined within with black polished marble. Here are also about 20 delightful public gardens, with trees, the largest of the kind, perhaps, in the world; and fruits almost of every kind, beside various beautiful flowers; but there are not many grand bazars, nor fine baths. Most of the buildings, indeed, are in ruins, and the streets are narrow and dirty. The country about Schiras is surprisingly fertile, producing the finest horses, the best pastures, and sheep, whose tails weigh 18 or 20 pounds each. The wines of Schiras are reckoned the best throughout the East. It is about 190 miles S. of Isfahan.

SCHIRVAN, part of the ancient ALBANIA, a province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Dagestan, on the E. and SE. by the Caspian Sea, on the SW. by Erivan, and on the W. by Georgia. It extends about 50 leagues in length, and 30 in breadth, and has a very fertile soil, producing great quantities of rice, wheat, and barley. Here are also vast quantities of pheasants and other wild fowls, with abundance of hares and foxes that run in herds, in the night time, about the villages, making a doleful noise. The inhabitants habitants use buffaloes (which they feed with fenugreek) instead of horses, and make them draw in the same manner. Scamachie is the capital.

SCHLESTADT, a town in the dept. of Lower Rhine, seated on the river Ill, 18 miles SSW. of Straßburg.

SCHLEUSSINGEN, a town of Henningsen, in Franconia, seated on the river Schleus.

SCHMIEDEBERG, a town of Jauer, in Silesia; a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony.

Scholesmore, Yorkf. SW. of Bradford.

SCHOMBERG, a town of Treves; a town of Olmutz, in Moravia; and a town of Schweidnitz, in Silesia.

SCHONECK, a town of Vogtland, in Upper Saxony.

SCHONEN, SCANIA, or SKONE, a province of Sweden, on the Sound, S. of Haland and Smaland, and W. of Blekingen and the Baltic. It is about 65 miles in length, and 48 in breadth, and is a very level, fertile, and pleasant country, containing more fine seats and well-built towns than any other province in the kingdom; and, indeed, from its many advantages, it may be called the storehouse and granary of Sweden. Lunden is the capital.

SCHONGAW, a town of Upper Bavaria, seated on the Lech, 90 miles W. of Saltzburg.

SCHOONHOVEN, a town in S. Holland, with a very commodious haven, situated on the river Lech, in which there is an excellent salmon-fishery, 10 miles NE. of Dort.

SCHORNDORF, a town of Wurtemberg, noted for its salt-springs. It is 16 miles E. of Stuttgart.

SCHOUTEN, an island in the Eastern Indian Sea, about 120 miles in circumference, discovered by William Schouten, a Dutchman, in 1616. Lat. 0. 50. S. lon. 135. 25. E.

SCHOWEN, an island in Zealand, lying between the Islands of Goree and Beverland; it is about 15 miles in length, and 6 in breadth. Ziriczee is the capital.

SCHUT, a large island of Hungary, a little below Presburg, in the river Danube, about 30 miles in length, and 10 in its mean breadth. There is another island of the same name, separated from the above by a branch of the Danube, about 20 miles in length, and 5 in breadth.

SCHWABACH, a town of Anspach, in Franconia.

SCHWARTZEMBURG, a lordship of Franconia; a town of Erzgebürg, in Upper Saxony; and a town and bailiwick of Berne, in Switzerland.

SCHWARTZ, a town in the Tyrol, famous for its mines of different metals; it is seated on the river Inn, 14 miles ENE. of Inspruc.

SCHWARTZBURG, a town in Thuringia, giving name to a principality which is divided between the two principal branches of Schwartzburg Sonderhausen and Schwartzburg Rudolstadt. It is seated on the river Schwartz, 22 miles SE. of Erfurt.

SCHWARTZENBURG, a town and bailiwick of Berne, and a town and lordship of Franconia.

SCHWEIDNITZ, a city of Silesia, capital of a province of the same name, (S. of the principalities of Lignitz and Breslaw) in which are 14 towns, with flourishing linen and woollen manufactures. It is the handsomest town of Silesia, next to Breslaw. The streets are large, the church elegant, and the houses well built. The royal palace here has been turned into a convent. All the magistrates are Romanists, but most of the inhabitants are Protestants, who have a church without the town, as also a public school. It is situated on the river Weisfritz, 22 miles SW. of Breslaw.

SCHWEINFURT, or SUIRFORD, an imperial town of Franconia, with a palace, where the senators meet, who are twelve in number. The environs abound in cattle, corn, and excellent wine, and the inhabitants, who are Protestants, carry on a large trade in linen and woollen cloth, goose-quills, and feathers. It is seated on the river Maine, over which it has a stone bridge, 25 miles NNW. of Bamberg.

SCHWEITZ, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the canton of Zurich; on the E. by the bailiwick of Gaster, and the canton of Glarus; on the S. by the canton of Uri; and on the W. by the cantons of Lucerne, Zug, and Zurich. This canton, with that of Uri and Unterwalden, threw off the yoke of Austria, January 13, 1308. In 1315, having given the Austrians a total overthrow at Morgarten, they formed a perpetual alliance, which was the grand foundation of the Helvetic confederacy. The name of Schwetzerland, Switzerland, or Swisserland, which originally comprehended only the three cantons mentioned above, was afterward extended to all Helvetia. The governments of Schweitz and Uri contain, including including their territories, purchased and acquired, about 50,000 inhabitants, hardy, warlike, and distinguished for the purity of their morals. The same kind of soil, and the same productions, are common to the two cantons. The country in general is rugged and mountainous, yet intersected with fertile valleys; it consists chiefly of pasture, raises little corn, and has no wine: but this soil, naturally barren, has been improved by the natives to an astonishing degree of fertility. The government is democratic, every male 16 years old having a vote in the landesgemeine; but the ordinary regency consists of 60 counsellors, with a landgammann as president, viz. ten from each of the six quarters into which this country is divided. Out of this council the principal officers are elected. The Romish religion is here exclusively established.

SCHWEITZ, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name, containing one large magnificent church, and three convents. It is seated in a fertile country, on the slope of a hill, near the Waldstätter lake, 10 miles ESE. of Lucerne.

SCHWELM, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, situated on a rivulet of the same name, near some medicinal springs, 22 miles NE. of Cologne.

SCHWERIN, a city of Lower Saxony, capital of the duchy of Mecklenburgh Schwerin, the usual residence of the dukes of the Schwerin line. It is divided into four parts; namely, Schwerin, the New Town, the Island of Schelf, and the Moor. The cathedral is a fine Gothic pile, with a lofty spire. The ducal palace and gardens are pleasantly situated on an island in the lake, and have a communication with the town by a draw-bridge. It is situated on a pleasant lake of the same name, abounding in fish, and which almost surrounds the town, 34 miles ESE. of Lubeck.

SCHWINBURG, a town of Denmark, on the SE. coast of Funen.

SCIATI, a small island of the Archipelago, about 18 miles N. of Negropont.

Scilly, in Cork, Munster, near Kinsale. The inhabitants are the descendants of an English colony, who first settled here after the defeat of the Spaniards, in the reign of Elizabeth. They have several fishing-vessels, and annually take great quantities of fish, which they cure for foreign markets and home consumption. As they seldom marry out of the village, they are generally related to each other.

SCILLY, a cluster of islands and rocks, which lie almost 10 leagues to the W. of the Land's-End, in Cornwall, and are easily discerned from it. Of these, only five or six are inhabited. They are supposed formerly to have produced much tin, but are now chiefly known as a resort of sea-fowl, and a place of shelter for ships in bad weather. They are said to be 145 in number. The inhabitants principally subsist by fishing, burning kelp, and acting as pilots. They have wild-fowl of all sorts, and tame-fowl, puffsins, and rabbits in great number. The chief of the islands is St. Mary's, which is near 10 miles in circumference, and has a good port. This island, which is the largest and best cultivated, contains more and richer inhabitants than all the rest put together. It is defended by a castle, built by Queen Elizabeth, and several strong batteries, one of which towards the sea, is mounted with 64 pieces of cannon, some of them 18 pounders. Here is also a guard-house, barracks, a store-house, with a company of soldiers, a master-gunner, and six other gunners. In Sampson Island, which is the smallest, only one family lives, which goes to the place of worship in the other islands, the only communication being by a boat. In St. Mary's, and in two or three other of the largest islands, are various antiquities, particularly the remains of a temple of the Druids, and ancient sepulchres; but the greatest ornament of this island is the light-house, 51 feet high, the gallery of which is four. The flash-lights are 11 feet 6 inches high, and 3 feet 2 inches broad. It stands on high land, and is a very fine column. The Scilly rocks have been destructive to numbers of ships entering the Channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened October 22d, 1707, when three men of war, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, were lost, with all their crews. Lat. 49. 56. N. lon. 6. 41. W.

SCILLY, a group of islands or shoals in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis, in 1767, and described as extremely dangerous. Lat. 16. 28. S. lon. 155. 30. W.

SCIO, or CHIOS, one of the most beautiful and pleasant islands of the Archipelago, near the coast of Natolia, to the S. of Merelin, and to the NE. of Samos. It is about 32 miles in length, and 15 in breadth; a mountainous country, yet pleasant, there being fruits of various kinds growing in the fields, such as oranges, citrons, olives, mulberries, and pomegranates. Large quantities of pleasant wines are produced here, here, which they export to the neighbouring islands; but their principal trade is in silk manufactured into velvet, damask, and other stuffs, designed for Asia, Egypt, and Barbary. They have also some commerce in wool, cheese, figs, mastick, turpentine, honey, and wax. The women are accounted more polite than in other parts of the Levant; their dress is odd, yet very neat. The partridges are tame, being sent every day into the fields, and in the evening they are called back with a whistle. The town of Scio is large, pleasant, and well built, the houses being beautiful and commodious; some of them are terraced; and others covered with tiles. The streets are paved with flint stones. The Venetians, while they had this island in their possession, made a great many alterations for the better. The castle is an old citadel, built by the Genoese. The harbour of Scio is the rendezvous of all shipping, that go to or come from Constantinople, and will hold a fleet of fourscore vessels. They reckon only 10,000 Turks, and 3000 Latins, but 100,000 Greeks, on this island. Scio is a bishop's see, and is seated on the sea side, 47 miles SSW. of Smyrna.

Sciredun, Devonshire, on the Dart, between Dartmore and Ashburton.

*SCIRO*s, an island of the Archipelago, to the W. of Metelin, about 15 miles in length, and 8 in breadth. It is a mountainous country, but has no mines, and contains about 300 families. Their cheese, which is made of the milk of goats and sheep mixed together, and the wine, are excellent. They also collect large quantities of wax, and some mastick. There is but one town on the island, which is of the same name, and is built on a rock, which runs up like a sugar-loaf, about 10 miles from the harbour of St. George, in lat. 38. 54. N. The inhabitants are Greeks, the cadi being the only Turk among them.

SCITUATE, a town of Massachusetts, on the S. coast, and a town of Connecticut.

SLAVONIA, a country of Europe, situated S. of Hungary, and between the rivers Drave and Danube on the N. and Save on the S. It is divided into six counties, and is subject to the house of Austria. It was formerly a kingdom, and extends about 150 miles in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth, from the frontiers of Croatia to Belgrade. It is a fine, level, fruitful country, where cultivated, and the natives, in general, are a brave, hardy race, soldiers from their cradles. The eastern part, which is called Ratzia, and the inhabitants Ratzians, form a particular nation, and are of the Greek church. The language of Slavonia is the mother of four others, namely, those of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia.

Scoggerbar, Cumberl. in Bootle parish, near the sea. Scole, Norfolk. Scoles, Yorks. SW. of Halifax.

Scone, or Scoone, a village of Perthshire, seated on the E. side of the river Tay, N. by W. of Perth. Here is the ancient royal palace of Scone, in which the kings of Scotland were crowned, in the celebrated stone chair, which is now in Westminster Abbey.

SCOONIE, a town of Fifeshire, 10 miles SW. of St. Andrew's, and 17 NNE. of Edinburgh.

SCOPIA, or USCUP, a town of Turkish Servia, situated on the river Vardar, on the confines of Bosnia.

SCOPOLO, an island of the Archipelago, at the entrance of the Gulf of Salonichi. It is about 10 miles in length and 5 in breadth, is very fertile, produces plenty of good wine, and contains 12,000 inhabitants, who are almost all Greeks.

Scornston, Norf. S. of Worsted. Scorton, Yorks. NE. of Catterick. Scoston, Nottingham, on the Rytton, NE. of Worksep. Scothy, Cumb. adjoining Kirkbride, near Carlisle. Scotfield, Bedford. NW. of Baldock. Scotfield, Stafford. NE. of Tamworth. Scotford, S. of Lancaster. Scotgrove, Kent, by Ash. Scothorn, NE. of Lincoln. Scothorp, Yorks. SE. of Settle.

SCOTLAND, or NORTH-BRITAIN, the most northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on all sides by the sea, except towards the S. and SE. where it is joined to England. The islands, also, on its western coast, called the Hebrides, or Western Islands, and those to the NE. called the Orkney and Shetland Islands, appertain to Scotland. From N. to S. Scotland extends about 270 miles, and from E. to W. in some parts 150 miles, but in others only 30. Exclusively of the islands, Scotland seems to be naturally divided into three large districts. The North division is formed by a chain of lakes, which cross the country from the Frith of Murray, to the island of Mull. The Middle division is bounded on the S. by the Friths of Forth and Clyde, and the great canal, by which they are united; and, on the S. side of this boundary is the South division. The Northern division is chiefly an assemblage of vast dreary mountains; not, however, without without some fertile valleys on the northern and eastern shores. The Middle division is traversed, in different directions, by many great ranges of mountains; and though cultivation here is also found, especially on the eastern shore, yet of this division, as well as of the former, it may be observed, that the arable land bears but a small proportion to the mountainous and barren tracts. However, the eastern coast of the Middle division, and the whole of the Southern, has a great resemblance to England, and with respect both to the general aspect of the country, and to the progress of cultivation, exhibits every kind of rural variety. The rivers of Scotland, are, in general, remarkable for their rapidity, and yield abundance of salmon, trout, and other excellent fish; the principal are the Spey, Don, Tay, Tweed, Clyde, Forth, the Northern Dee, the Esk, Annan, Nith, and Southern Dee; and the lochs, or lakes, are numerous and extensive. The climate is very various, in different places. The northern extremity, which is in the same latitude with some parts of Norway, is extremely cold; but the frosts are far from being so intense here as in parts of the continent equally as far to the north. For this advantage, Scotland is indebted to an insular situation. Its west coast is subject to frequent rains in the summer, and to sudden changes of weather. In many places on the eastern shore, and in the whole South division, the climate is not inferior to the north part of England; and, in general, the air of Scotland is very healthy. The products of the country are grain, flax, woods of oak and fir, coal, lead, iron, free-stone, lime-stone, slate, the most beautiful marble, fine rock-crystals, pearls, variegated pebbles, kelp, &c. It feeds vast herds of cattle and flocks of sheep; they are both small, but much valued for the delicacy of their flesh; and the fleece of the latter emulates the finest Spanish wool. It is in the high grounds that the cattle are so diminutive; for, in many parts of the country, the horses and sows are not excelled in size and beauty by those of the English breed. Among the wild animals are the roe, stag, fox, badger, otter, hedge-hog, rabbit, weasel, mole, and other small quadrupeds. Among the feathered race, are the capercaillie, or cock of the wood, the eagle, falcon, partridge, quail, snipe, plover, black-game, and grouse, &c. The fisheries in the surrounding seas are of great national importance, and will become a real source of wealth to the nation, when increasing commerce shall enable the inhabitants to form roads, erect villages, and open canals, in the remote parts of the country. The trade and population of most of the great towns have considerably increased of late years. The western shores, however, are annually drained of their inhabitants by the emigration of individuals. Scotland was an independent kingdom till James VI. was called to the throne of England; and in the reign of Queen Anne, one of his successors, both kingdoms were united under the name of Great Britain. Sixteen peers are elected to represent the nobility, and 45 commoners to represent the counties and boroughs in the same parliament with that of England. There are five universities in Scotland, viz. St. Andrews, Glasgow, Edinburgh, New Aberdeen, and Old Aberdeen. Scotland is divided into 33 counties, namely, Shetland and Orkney, Bute, Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, Cromarty, Nairne, Inverness, Murray, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Angus, Perth, Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, Stirling, Dumbarton, Argyll, Renfrew, Ayr, Wigton, Kirkcudbright, Dumfries, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanerk, Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Haddington, and Berwick. The established religion is the Presbyterian, and the capital is Edinburgh.

SCUDENES, an island of Norway, about 20 miles in circumference, 18 miles NW. of Stavanger.

SCURGULO, a town of Capitanata.

SCURRIZANO, a town of Capitanata.

SCUTARI, a town of Turkey in Europe, capital of Upper Albania, the residence of a beglerbeg, a Greek archbishop, and a Latin bishop, and anciently the residence of the kings of Illyricum. It is seated on a lake to which it gives name, 52 miles SE. of Ragusa.

SCUTARI, a large and handsome town of Turkey in Asia, in Nátolia, with a well-frequented harbour. It is seated on the E. side of Constantinople, of which it is looked upon as a suburb, being directly over against it. It contains the Grand Signor's seraglio, and a very handsome mosque, and is built on the side of a hill.

SCYLLA, a rock, near the Faro of Messina, on the coast of Calabria, opposite the celebrated Charybdis; which, though the terror of ancient mariners, and the theme of poets, on account of its great whirlpool, is now, comparatively speaking, no longer formidable. This rock is about a mile from the entrance of the Faro, and forms a small promontory, which runs a little out to sea, and meets the whole force of the waters as they come out of the narrowest parts of the Straits. The head of this promontory is the famous Scylla. "It must be owned," says Mr. Brydone, "that it does not altogether come up to the formidable description that Homer gives of it; the reading of which (like that of Shakespeare's Cliff) almost makes one's head giddy. Neither is the passage so wondrous narrow and difficult as he makes it. Indeed, it is probable, that the breadth of it is greatly increased since his time; by the violent impetuosity of the current; and this violence too must always have diminished, in proportion as the breadth of the channel increased. Our pilot says, there are many small rocks that show their heads near the base of the large ones. These are probably the dogs that are described as howling round the monster Scylla. There are likewise many caverns that add greatly to the noise of the water, and tend still to increase the horror of the scene. The rock is near 200 feet high. There is a kind of castle, or fort on its summit; and the town of Scylla, or Sciglio, containing 3 or 400 inhabitants, stands on its S. side, and gives the title of prince to a Calabrese family."

Seaborough, Somerset. S. of Crewkern. Seabraham, or Sebergham, Highbound and Lowbound, Cumberland, near Wigton. Seachurch, Essex, near Canvey-Isle. Seacroft, York. NE. of Leeds.

SEAFORD, a small sea-port, or fishing town in Sussex, built mostly of Stone and slate. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and is 8 miles SSE. of Lewes, and 59 S. by E. of London. Market disused.

Seaford, in Down, Ulster.

Seal, Derbyshire, near Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Seal, Devon. E. of Okehampton. Seal, Kent, 2 miles N. of Sevenoaks. Seal, Surry, E. of Farnham. Seal, Sussex, near Stening. Seales, Wiltshire, near Mere. Seamelly, Lincoln. NE. of Horncastle. Seamer, a river in Yorkshire. Seamer, York. NW. of Stokesley. Seamer, York. SW. of Scarborough. Seamer-Hall, and Beacon, York. N. of Scarborough.

Seapatrick, in Down, Ulster

Sea-Salter, Kent, near the sea, 4 miles NE. of Faversham. Seascales, Cumb. in Gosforth parish. Seasey, York. SE. of Thirsk. Seasun, Stafford. W. of Wolverhampton. Seathorn, Yorkshire, in Holderness. Seatmorthow, or Seckmurthy, Cumb. in the parish of Cockermouth.

SEATON, or PORT-SEATON, a sea-port of Haddingtonshire. Here is a ruinous palace in which Mary Queen of Scots resided after her return from France. In the chapel are several curious marble monuments. It has a considerable trade in salt and coal, and is situated on the Frith of Forth, 9 miles E. of Edinburgh.

Seaton, a river in Cornwall, which rises about 4 miles NE. of Leskeard, and after a course of near 12 miles, runs into the English Channel, 3 miles E. of Loo. The town of the same name, at its mouth, has, according to tradition, been swallowed up in the encroachments of the sea. Seaton, Cumberland, near the sea, S. of Ravenglass. Seaton, Cumb. in Bootle parish. Seaton, Cumb. near Workington. Here are very extensive iron-works on the Derwent, and near it there is a considerable salmon fishery.

Seaton,

Seaton, Durham, in Seham parish. Seaton, Northumberland, by the sea, E. of Alnwick. Seaton, Northumb., between Morpeth and the sea. Seaton, Yorks. NW. of Holm, in Spalding-Moor. Seaton, Yorks. in Holderness, near Hornsey-Meer. Seaton Carey, Durham, by the sea. S. of Hartlepool. Seaton Delaval, Northumb. by the sea, N. of Tinmouth. Seavenshale or Sheweshield Castle, Northumberl. on the Picts-Wall, near Busy-Gap. Seawell, Stafford. NE. of Wolverhampton.

SEBASTIA, a town of Palestine, the remains of the ancient city of Jamaira. It is 34 miles NNE. of Jerusalem.

SEBASTIAN, ST. a town of Guipuscoa, in Spain, with a good and well-frequented harbour, secured by two moles, on which redoubts are planted, and within which only one ship can pass at a time. The streets are long, broad, and straight, and paved with white flagstones. The houses are handsome, the churches neat, and the environs pleasant. It carries on a great trade, and is very populous, as several families are obliged to live in the same house. Their greatest trade consists in iron and steel, which some affirm to be the best in Europe; they also deal in wool, which comes from Old Castile. On August 3d, 1794, this place was invested by the republican troops, and capitulated on the following day. The garrison, consisting of 2000 men, surrendered prisoners of war: 180 pieces of brass cannon were taken, with considerable magazines and stores. It is situated at the mouth of the Gurumea, with a delightful prospect of the sea on one side, and a distant view of the Pyrenean mountains on the other, 50 miles NNE. of Bilbao.

SEBASTIAN, ST. or RIO-DE-JANEIRO, a large, well built, and populous city and sea-port of Brasil, in S. America, capital of the province of Rio Janeiro, and of late years, and at present, of all Brasil. The city is well-designed, and about 3 miles in circuit. The houses in general are of stone, two stories high; every house having, after the manner of the Portuguese, a little balcony before its windows, and a lattice of wood before the balcony. The streets are straight and of a convenient breadth, intersecting each other at right angles. It stands, however, upon low ground, which was formerly swampy, and surrounded by hills of vast height, which exclude the benefit of the refreshing sea and land breezes; so that it is, of course, suffocatingly hot, and unhealthy, in the summer. The different mechanics carry on their business in distinct parts of the town; particular streets being set apart for particular trades. On the S. side of a spacious square is the palace of the viceroy. There are no manufactures here, but much gold is brought from the mines, and plenty of diamonds, topazes, and amethysts. Forty thousand negroes are annually imported, to work in the mines, on the king's account. This port is a very good place for ships to put into, that want refreshment; all sorts of provisions, except wheaten bread and flour, may be easily procured; as a substitute for bread, there are yams and cassava in plenty. The country-round the town is beautiful in the highest degree, the wildest sports being varied with a greater luxuriance of flowers, both as to number and beauty, than the best gardens in England. Upon the trees and bushes sit an almost endless variety of birds, especially small ones, many of them covered with the most elegant plumage; there is a great variety of insects, some of them very beautiful, and much more nimble than those of Europe; and the gardens produce melons, oranges, lemons, citrons, plantains, bananas, apples, cocoa-nuts, the prickly pear, yams, cassava, and some European fruits. Lat. 22. 50. S. lon. 42. 48. W. Also a town in the island of Tercera, situated between mountains, about half a mile from the sea; and a town of Carthage and Popayan, both in S. America; a town of Algarva, in Portugal; and a town in the dept. of Lower Loire, 3 miles SE. of Nantes.

SEBENICO, a sea-port of Dalmatia, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see, defended by four citadels and a castle. It is seated near the mouth of the river Cherca, in the Adriatic, 25 miles NW. of Spalatro.

SEBU, a river of Africa, which passes by the city of Fez, and runs into the Atlantic a little below Marmora.

SEBURG, a town in the dept. of the North, 12 miles S. of Conde.

SECHURA, a town of Truxillo, in S. America, situated on a river of the same name, about a league from the Pacific Ocean, and 10 leagues SSE. of Payta.

SECHY, or SEECHING, a town in Norfolk, seated on a small navigable river, near which there are rich pastures for cattle, 4 miles S. of King's Lynn, and 98 NNE. of London. A considerable market on Tuesday, and one once a fortnight for the sale of fat bullocks.

SECKAW, two towns of Stiria.

SECKENHEIM, or SOBERNHEIM, a town in the palatinate of the Rhine.

SECKINGEN, a town of Austrian Sualbia. It is one of the forest towns, and has a large square, and an ancient and noble foundation for ladies. It is seated on the Rhine, by which it is surrounded, 14 miles E. of Basle.

SECLIN, a town in the department of the North, 5 miles. S. of Lille.

Seckington, Warwickshire, near Tamworth. Seckington, Leicestershire, near Higham. Secomb, Cheshire, SW. of Liverpool Haven.

SECONDIGNY, a town in the dept. of the Two Sevres.

SEDAN, a considerable town in the department of the Ardennes, with a strong castle, a well-furnished arsenal, a foundry of cannon, and a manufacture of black cloths of a superior quality. The celebrated Marshal Turenne was born in the castle. It is seated on the river Maese, 18 miles SE. of Rocroy, and 135 NNE. of Paris.

Sedbergh, Yorks. on the river Rother, N. of Kirby Lonsdale. Sedbury-Park, Yorks. near Richmond. Sedcop, Kent, 3 miles beyond Eltham, near Chislehurst. Sedestern, Norfolk, SW. of Walsingham. Sedgbarrow, Worcesters. S. of Evesham. Sedgbrook, Lincoln. N. of Grantham. Sedghill, Wiltshire, between Wardour-Castle and Gillingham-Forest.

SEDGFIELD, with a rectory valued at from 7 to 800l. a year. It is situated at some distance from the Tees, E. of Bishop-Auckland.

Sedgford, Norf. by Snettisham. Sedgley, Stafford. near Dudley, S. of Wolverhampton. Here is a considerable manufacture of coarse iron-work, ploughshares, horse-shoes, bolts and hinges for doors, bars for windows, buckles, nails, &c. employing not less than 2000 men and boys. In this parish is a fat thining coal, which burns with a silent bright flame into white ashes; some prefer it before Cannel-coal. Sedgmoor, Somers. a tract N. of the Parret, between King's. Weston and Bridgewater, is memorable for the defeat of the Duke of Monmouth and his party, in 1685, by the forces of King James II. The duke was taken near Ringwood in Hants, as he lay hid in a ditch, covered with fern. Sedgwick-Park, Sussex, 3 miles SE. of Horsham. Sedlescomb Sussex, 3 miles from Battel. Seegrave, Wilts, near Chippenham. Seen, Wilts near Devizes.

SEER, a sea-port and principality of Oman, in Arabia, on the Persian Gulf.

SEEZ a town in the department of Orne, late the see of a bishop. It is 12 miles N. of Alençon, and 102 W. by S. of Paris.

Segary, Wiltshire, on the Avon, SE. of Malmesbury.

SEGEBORG, a town of Holstein.

SEGELSBURG, a town of Bremen.

SEGESTAN, a province of Persia, anciently Drangiana, bounded by Korasan on the N. by Candahar and Sablestan on the E. by Mecran on the S. and by Kerman, Farshitan, and Couhoftan on the W. The country is, in general, mountainous; the plains are barren, covered with a fine sand, which is sometimes raised by the winds in such a degree, as to overwhelm whole caravans, and the valleys are the only habitable parts. Zereng is the capital, SEGESWAR, a town of Transylvania, capital of a county of the same name.

Seggerstonhaugh, NW. of Durham. Seggeswick, Westmorland, on the Can, S. of Kendal. Seghill, Northumberl. near Tinnmouth.

SEGNA, a town of Morlachia, with a good harbour. It is a free port and town, under the protection of Austria, and is seated on the coast of the Adriatic, 100 miles NNW. of Spalatro.

SEGNU, a town in the Campagna-di-Roma, where organs are said to have been invented.

SEGORBA, a town of Valencia, containing from 5 to about 6000 inhabitants. The fountain here is a great curiosity; its water is wholesome, clear, and well tasted; it does not breed either reptiles or flies, and is remarkable for petrifying the roots and branches of the trees which grow by its side, and even the channels through which it passes. Segorba is surrounded by well-cultivated gardens, the climate is mild, and the country is fertile in corn, wine, and every kind of fruit. Near it there are quarries of fine marble. It is seated on the river Morviedro, 27 miles NW. of Valencia, and 150 E. of Madrid.

SEGNITZ, a town of Anspach, in Franconia.

SEGONZAC, a town in the department of the Charente, 15 miles W. of Angoulême.

SEGOVIA, a city of Spain, in Old Castile, the see of a bishop, containing 27 churches, 24 convents, and about 8000 houses. Here the best cloth in Spain is made, from the fine Spanish wool, so much esteemed in other countries. The manufacturing of this is one part of their trade; in 1785, however, the number of their looms, formerly so numerous, did not exceed 250; another is that of very fine paper. The cathedral, which is a mixture of the Gothic and Moorish architecture, stands on one side of the great square, and contains the statue of Mary in massy silver. The alcazar is a well-preserved edifice, and was formerly the residence of the Gothic kings. It is seated in the highest part of the town, is covered with lead, and has 16 rooms richly adorned with tapestry, a great deal of gilding, and fine ornaments of marble and porphyry. The royal chapel is magnificently gilded, and embellished with fine paintings. The mint is surrounded by a river, on which are mills employed in coining, and by which every thing is done almost instantaneously. This mint was for some time the only one in Spain; of late another has been established at Seville. The aqueduct is one of the most astonishing and best preserved of the Roman works; it is 8000 paces in length, and is supported by 177 arches of a prodigious height, consisting of two rows, rising majestically one above the other. Its solidity, which has braved upwards of 16 centuries, seems inexplicable, on observing the simplicity of its construction, and comparing the slender base with the wonderful height. Segovia is seated on a mountain between two hills, (which singular situation of the city renders an aqueduct necessary,) 45 miles NW. of Madrid.

SEGOVIA, a considerable town of Luçon, in the Manilla Islands, founded in 1598; the see of a bishop defended by a fort and garrison. It is situated near the N. coast, 250 miles N. of Manilla.

SEIKS, THE, a numerous nation of Hindoostan Proper, consisting of several small independent states, that have formed a kind of federal union. They possess the whole of Lahore, the principal part of Moultan, and the W. part of Delhi. This tract extends about 400 miles from NW. to SE. and is from 100 to 200 broad, in general, although in the part between Attock and Behker, (that is along the Indus) the extent cannot be less than 320. Their capital is Lahore. We know but little concerning the state of this government, but it is represented as being mild. In their mode of making war, they are unquestionably savage and cruel. Their army consists almost entirely of horse, of which they are said to be able to bring at least 100,000 into the field. The Seiks, like the Hindoos, molest not others in matters of faith, and require only a conformity in certain signs and ceremonies; but, unlike the Hindoos, they admit proselytes, although those from among the Mahometans are the least esteemed.

SENEGAL, or SENEGAMBIA, a country of Africa, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia, in which are included many kingdoms and states.

SENEGAL, a large river of Africa, which rises in the interior country, but in what part can only be conjectured; it overflows, however, like the Nile, and, indeed, much about the same time of the year. It is 40 days before it comes to the height, when the river overflows its banks, and the channel is difficult to find by those who go up it in boats. The French once sent 30 men up this river, who rowed 1000 miles, undergoing great hardships, inasmuch that only five returned back alive; their boat once stuck fast on the tops of trees, and they got it off with a great deal of difficulty. From the lake Benin, (the furthest that Europeans have penetrated) it is 800 leagues to the mouth of of this river, which is laid down in lat. 15. 50. N. It stretches by a number of windings to a prodigious length from E. to W. and is believed to separate the country of the Negroes from the moors of Zahara, or the Desert.

SENÉGAL, an island of Africa, situated in the river Senegal, near its mouth; about a mile and a quarter in length, and half a mile in breadth. The inhabitants, who are about 3000; live chiefly on fish and maize. Lat. 16. 5. N.

SENLIS, a town in the dept. of Oise, lately the see of a bishop, and noted for its cathedral, which has one of the highest steeples in France. It is seated on the declivity of a hill, by the river Nonette, almost surrounded by a large forest, 20 miles NNW. of Meaux, and 27 NNE. of Paris.

SENNAR, a large town of Africa, in Nubia, capital of a kingdom of the same name, which lies on the banks of the Nile, between Egypt and Abyssinia. It is 5 miles in circumference, and very populous, containing near 100,000 inhabitants. The houses are all one story high, flat roofed, and very ill built, but the suburbs contain only cottages, covered with reeds. The king's palace is surrounded by high walls, of bricks dried in the sun, but is only a confused heap of buildings. The heats are excessive, and in the rainy season the air is extremely unwholesome. There is a market every day in the week, in the middle of the town, where they sell all sorts of provisions and goods. They have also a market near the king's palace, where slaves are sold: the females sit on one side, and the males on another: the Egyptian merchants buy great numbers of them every year. Their horned cattle are very large and fat, but the common meat sold in the market is camel's flesh. Their religion is Mahometanism. They are an ignorant, superstitious, and yet a cunning sort of people. The women who can afford it, have slight garments of silk, and wear rings of various metals on their hair, arms, legs, ears, and fingers. Their legs are naked, and they have only a single sole fastened to their feet with strings. Other women and girls have clothes wrapped round them from the waist to the knees. The men go almost naked. According to Mr. Bruce, their trade is not great; they have no manufactures, and the principal article of consumption is blue cotton cloth from Surat. Formerly, when the ways were open, and merchants travelled in caravans with safety, Indian goods were brought to Sennar from Jidda, and then dispersed over the black country. The return was made in gold, in powder called tibbar, civet, rhinoceros' horns, ivory, ostrich feathers, and, above all, in slaves and glass, more of which were exported from Sennar than from all the rest of Africa put together. But this trade is almost destroyed; so is that of the gold and ivory. However, the gold still keeps up its reputation of being the purest and best in Africa, and is therefore bought at Mocha, to be carried to India, where it all at last centres. Sennar is seated on an eminence, on the W. side of the river Nile, in lat. 13. 34. N. lon. 33. 30. E.

SENS, an ancient and considerable town in the dept. of the Yonne; before the revolution, it was the see of an archbishop, and contained 16 parish churches, and 14 abbeys and convents. Severn Stoke, or Stoke-upon-Severn, Worcestersf. N. of Upton.

SEVERO, ST. a town of Capitanata.

SEVERUS' WALL, commonly called GRAHAM'S DIKE, in the W. of Scotland. It is a work of the Romans, and supposed to be done by the emperor whose name it bears, to prevent the incursion of the Picts and Scots. It began at Abercorn, on the Frith of Forth, 4 miles NE. of Linlithgow, and ran W. across the county to the Frith of Clyde, ending at Kirkpatrick, near Dumbarton.

SEVILLE, a district of Andalusia, called also Lower Andalusia, extending from Estramadura and Cordova to the Atlantic and the Straits of Gibraltar; about 120 miles in length, and from 70 to 110 in breadth.

SEVILLE, an ancient city, (in Latin HISPALIS, which the Arabians pronounced IXHILLA, and the Castilians SEVILLA) capital of Andalusia, one of the most considerable in Spain, and the see of an archbishop. It is of a round form, and takes up more ground than Madrid, although it does not contain so many inhabitants. The Moors built an aqueduct here, still to be seen, extending 6 miles in length. The cathedral is the largest Gothic building in Spain, and is supposed by some travellers to be the largest church in the world, next to St. Peter's at Rome; the steeple is of very curious workmanship, and extremely high, consisting of three towers, one above another, with galleries and balconies. Of the convents, which are 77 in number, that of St. Francis is the most curious, adorned with a very handsome public square, in the midst of which is a fine fountain. It contains 160 monks, beside 140 lay brethren. The university of Seville consists of many colleges; the professors enjoying rich pensions. Near the cathedral is the royal palace, called Alcazar, which was partly built after the antique by the Moors, and partly in the modern taste by king Pedro; it is a mile in extent, and flanked by large square towers, built with stones taken from the ancient temple of Hercules, said to be the original founder of the city. The exchange is a square building, of the Tuscan order, each front 100 feet in length, and 3 stories high. The suburbs, of which there are several, stand on the other side of the river. In this suburb the house of the Inquisition is placed, and here are the public walks where the inhabitants go to take the air. The town-house is adorned with a great number of statues, and there is a large square before it, with a fine fountain in the middle. In this city are 29 parish churches, and 24 hospitals richly endowed. An academy of the belles lettres was founded here in 1730. Under the Moors, Seville contained 600,000 inhabitants, and in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, 6000 looms were employed here; but at present, there are scarcely 400 manufactures. Its situation near the sea, renders it still, however, one of the most commercial towns of Spain. The E. and W. India companies have their houses here, where they are obliged to register themselves and their merchandise. Their ships, indeed, stop in the harbour of Cadiz, but their lading is carried thence to Seville; and there all the gold and silver is coined, there being above 600 men employed in the mint. The country about it is extremely fertile in corn, wine, &c. and there is abundance of oil; for to the W. of the river is a grove of olive trees, 30 miles in length. The Spaniards commonly say, Quen no ha visto Sevilla, no ha visto maravilla; He who has not seen Seville, has not seen a wonder. It is situated on the river Guadalquivir, over which it has a long bridge of boats, 45 miles from the sea, 112 W. of Granada, and 212 S. by W. of Madrid. Lat. 37. 32. N. lon. 5. 34. W.

SHAFTSBURY*, or SHAFTON, an ancient town of Dorsetshire, containing about 320 houses, many of which are of free-stone, a neat town-hall, where the quarter sessions are held, a free-school, and several remains of antiquity. Water is so scarce here, that they are obliged to bring it from a great distance, in pails, or on horses. They enjoy, however, a wholesome air, and have a very extensive prospect over the counties of Dorset, Somerset, and Wilts. It is situated in the northern extremity of the county, on a high hill, difficult of access, except on the E. 25 miles W. by S. of Salisbury, and 102 W. by S. of London. A considerable market on Saturday.

Shakerley, Lancas. NE. of Leigh. Shakerston, Leices. SHANNON, the largest river in Ireland, and one of the finest in the British Isles, rolling nearly from N. to S. 200 miles, and expanding in its course, in many places, into deep and spacious lakes. It rises from Lough Lean, in the county of Leitrim, and passing by Leitrim, Carrick, Lanesborough, Athlone, Killaloe, Limerick, &c. runs into the Atlantic, between Kerry Head and Cape Lean. From Limerick to the Atlantic, it is navigable for the largest vessels. At some distance above Limerick, and a little below Killaloe, there is a ledge of rocks which interrupts the navigation of this fine river. Here, however, there is a valuable eel and salmon fishery; and from Killaloe to Carrick on-Shannon, near its source, there is an inland navigation, which promises the greatest advantages to the rising prosperity of Ireland.

Shannon-Bridge, in Galway, Connaught. Shannon-Bridge, in King's County, Leinster. Shannon-Grove, in Limerick, Munster. Shannon-Park, in Cork, Munster. Shanrahan, in Waterford, Munster.

Shap, Westmorland, at the source of the Loder, between Orton and Penrith. It had once a famous abbey, built in 1119, of which little remains, except a tower and the ruins of an old bridge. A more ancient and permanent monument of human industry, appears in some great stones, like pyramids, which are placed in almost a direct line, for a mile together, at 8, 10, and 12 yards distance from each other, and are of such immense weight, that no carriages, now in use, could support them. It was, probably, a place of druidical worship.

SHAPPINSHA, one of the Orkney Islands, lying NE. of Mainland, or Pomona, with about 80 boats belonging to it, most of which are employed in fishing. In the summer they burn kelp, which produces, in some seasons, upwards of 3000 tons, bringing near 2000l. to the inhabitants.

Sheepy, Great and Little, Leicesters. S. of Hog's-Norton.

SHEERNES, a fort in Kent, seated on the northern point of the Isle of Sheppey at the W. Swale, or the principal mouth of the river Medway, 3 miles N. of Queenborough. The buildings belonging to it make a neat little town; and there is also a dock-yard, and a chapel. Here is a fort built by king Charles II. after the insult of the Dutch, and in the room of that demolished at Queenborough, with a line of cannon facing the water-side, which contains good apartments for the officers of the ordnance, navy, and garrison. An excellent spring was lately discovered here, before which the yard and garrison were supplied with fresh water from Chatham. It is reckoned one of the most unhealthy spots in the kingdom.

Sheefy Mountains, in Cork, Munster, in the barony of Carbery.

Sheet, Hants, near Petersfield.

SHEFFIELD*, a large, thriving, and populous town, in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, long celebrated for its various hardware manufactories, which consist particularly of steel cutlery wares, plated goods, and various tools. It has been a staple for knives, or whittles, and files, above 300 years. It is reputed to excel Birmingham in this sort of wares; as that does this town in locks, hinges, nails, and polished steel. Here are about 600 master cutlers, incorporated by the style of the cutlers of Hallamshire, of which this is reckoned the chief town. By the Don, which is navigable within five miles of the town, it receives iron from Hull, and conveys thither its manufactures for exportation, which are not confined to the town, but extend several miles over the country, employing not less than 40,000 persons. Its neighbourhood abounds with coal, and there are some mines of alum. Here are also lead-works and a silk-mill. It is in a hilly situation, and is chiefly supplied with water by pipes from the high ground. A new market-place has been lately erected here by the Duke of Norfolk, on a commodious plan of shambles, strongly inclosed; and a large and elegant infirmary has been lately completed. In the old parts of the town the streets are narrow;

the new parts, however, are more commodious, and the surrounding country affords a rich and beautiful variety of landscape. It is seated on the rivers Don and Sheaf, 34 miles N. of Derby, and 161 NW. by N. of London. A large market on Tuesday, particularly for corn. Fairs on Tuesday after Trinity Sunday and November 28th.

SHETLAND, the general name of a cluster of islands, which lie about 100 miles NNE. of Caithnessshire, between 59. 56. and 61. 11. N. lat. They are reckoned to be forty-six in number, besides forty smaller, called Holms, which produce pasture, and as many barren. The names of the principal are Mainland, Yell, Unst, Fula, and Phederfroy. The description already given of the largest, or MAINLAND, may be applied to the others, as to the particulars of climate, inhabitants, &c. and the same may be said of the ORCADES. In all these islands the Aurora Boreales, or Merry Dancers, as they are called by the inhabitants, are very remarkable. They are the constant attendants of clear evenings, and prove great reliefs amid the gloom of the long winter nights. They commonly appear at twilight near the horizon, of a dun colour, approaching to yellow; sometimes continuing in that state for several hours, without any apparent motion; after which they break out into streams of stronger light, spreading into columns, and altering slowly into ten thousand different shapes, varying their colours from all the tints of yellow to the most obscure russet. They often cover the whole hemisphere, and then make the most brilliant appearance. There is no light-house in all these islands, nor is there any chart of the country extant, that can be depended upon. So many ships, indeed, have been lost on the E. coast of Shetland, especially within the last 20 years, that it may be of essential service to recommend the erection of a light-house, on Noss, a small island, E. of Bressay. Of these, some of the most remarkable cases are the following.—In 1775, a Liverpool ship, only 2 men saved out of 24. In 1776, the Ceres, of London, a Greenland ship, lost with her whole crew. In 1779, a Dutch Greenland ship lost, only one of the crew saved. In 1780, a Russian man of war, of 36 guns, only five men saved. In 1786, the Concordia, a Danish East-India ship, with a valuable cargo, outward-bound, only 15 of the crew saved. In 1789, a Dutch Greenland ship, only five of the crew saved. Shetland, with Orkney, forms one of the counties of Scotland. Lerwick is the capital.

SHIRVAN, or SCHIRVAN, a province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Dagestan on the E. and SE. by the Caspian Sea on the SW. by Erivan, and on the W. by Georgia; about 150 miles in length and 90 in breadth. The soil is extremely fertile. The inhabitants draw with buffaloes instead of horses, feeding them with fenugreek. This country was part of the ancient Albania. Scamachie is the capital.

Shistock, or Shustoke, Warwick. NE. of Colehill. Shitlington, Bedford. near Flitton. Shitlington, York. W. of Wakefield. Shitterford, Stafford. W. of Kidderminster. Shitstone-Hill, Shrop. NE. of Ludlow. Shitterton, Dorset. in the parish of Bere-Regis.

SHOALS, ISLES OF, in N. America on the coast of New Hampshire. They lie very conveniently for the cod-fishery which was formerly carried on here to great advantage; but the inhabitants are now few and poor.

Shobden, Heref. N. of Pembridge. Shobnal, Staff. near Burton-upon-Trent. Shobrook, Devon. near Crediton. Shobury, N. and S. two villages in Essex, near the mouth of the Thames, and opposite the Buoy of the Nore. Hence a point of land called Shobury-Ness, which projects into the sea. Shoelach, Chef. on the Dee, W. of Malpas. Shoflot, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Shofton, Northumberl. by the sea, S. of Bamburgh.

SHOGLE, a large, but disagreeable town of Syria, seated on the river Orontes over which there is a bridge of 13 arches 45 miles SW. of Aleppo. There is a good caravanfary here, where every traveller is supplied with a competent portion of bread, broth, and meat.

Sholand, Kent, near Newnham. Sholand, Surry, near Puttenham. Shooter's Hill, a village of Kent, situated on a high so called, 8 miles ESE. of London, beyond Blackheath, on the road to Dartford. From this hill there is a noble view of London, and into Essex, Kent, Surry and even part of Suffex. The Thames also makes a magnificent appearance from it. Shoot-up-Hill, Middlesex, near Kiburn. Shopland, Essex, contiguous to South-Church, Prittlewell, Sutton, and Barling. Shoreham, Kent, by the Devent, 4 miles NW. of Sevenoaks.

* SHOREHAM, a populous town of Suffex, chiefly noted for ship building having a tide harbour for vessels of considerable burden, which is not safe, as the sands are frequently shifting. It commands the mouth of the river Adur, commonly called New Shoreham, to distinguish it from the Old, which lies near it.

and is now much decayed. It is 16 miles NNW. of Newhaven, and 56 S. by W. of London. Market on Saturday.

SHOREHAM, a town of Vermont.

Shoreswell, N. and S. Isle of Wight, in West Medina. Shorland, Kent, by East-Church, N. of the Isle of Sheppy. Shortland, Kent, in Pluckley parish. Shorlet-Wood, Shropf. near Bridgnorth. Shorley, Heref. N. of Burwash. Sbranel, Worcesf. near Evelham. Sbrawarden, W. of Shrewsbury, near the Severn. Shrawley, Worcesterf. W. of Ombersley, on the Severn. Sbrawton, Wilts, NW. of Stonehenge. Sbredicot, Staffordf. NW. of Penkridge. Shrewley, Warw. in the parish of Hatton.

* SHREWSBURY, a large and flourishing town of Shropshire, capital of the county, so called from the Saxon word Scrobbesberig, which signifies a town built on a woody hill. It is well built, well lighted, and well paved, and contains about 2000 houses, and 12,000 inhabitants. It is the chief mart for a coarse kind of woollen cloth made in Montgomeryshire, called Welsh webs, which are bought up in all parts of the country, as much as come to about 1000l. a week, and dressed here, whence they are sent for exportation, principally to America and Flanders. Much of the Welsh flannel is also bought at Welshpool by the drapers of this place, which is indeed a common mart for all sorts of Welsh commodities. It is also famous for its excellent brawn, which is sent to various parts of the kingdom. One great ornament of this town is the Quarry, one of the finest promenades in England. It takes in 20 acres, is shaded with a double row of lime trees, and has a fine double alcove in the centre, with seats. About 20 vessels are constantly employed on the river Severn, between Shrewsbury, Gloucester, and Bristol. Shrewsbury has been long famous for its excellent brawn, and from the plenty of salmon, other fish, and provisions of all sorts; is full of genteel families. It is beautifully situated in a sort of horse-shoe, formed by the river Severn, 36 miles W. of Lichfield, and 160 NW. of London. Lat. 52. 43. N. lon. 2. 41. W. Markets for corn, cattle, and provisions, on Wednesday and Saturday; and on Thursday for Welsh cottons, friezes, and flannels. Fairs, on Saturday after March 15; Wednesday after Easter week; Wednesday before Holy Thursday; July 3d; August 12th; October 2d; and December 12th.

SHROPSHIRE, or SALOP, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Chesh. and a detached part of Flintshire; on the E. by Staffordshire; on the SE. by Worcesterf. shire; on the S. by Herefordshire; on the SW. by Radnorshire; and on the W. by the counties of Montgomery and Denbigh. It extends upwards of 40 miles in length from N. to S. and is divided into 15 hundreds, which contain 16 market-towns, 170 parishes, 615 villages, and about 113,680 inhabitants. The air is salubrious, and not very sharp, except on the hills. The soil is generally fruitful, especially in the northern and eastern parts, which produce plenty of wheat and barley; but the southern and western being mountainous, are less fertile, yet yield sufficient pasture for sheep and cattle. There are mines of lead, copper, iron, limestone, freestone, pipe-clay, and inexhaustible coal-pits. Over most of the coal lies a stratum of a blackish, hard, porous substance, containing great quantities of bitumen, which being ground to powder powder in horse-mills, and boiled in coppers of water, a bituminous matter swims on the surface, that, by evaporation, is brought to the consistence of pitch; or by the help of an oil distilled from the same substance, and mixed with it, may be thinned to a sort of tar; both these substances serve particularly for caulking of ships, as well, if not better, than pitch and tar, it being less liable to crack. The wool of many parts of this country is remarkably fine. The principal rivers are the Severn, (which is navigable in every quarter of the county) and the Teind. The capital is Shrewsbury.

Shroughton, Northamptonshire, 2 miles E. of Ayno. Shroughton, or Ewrin Courtney, Dorset. E. of Stourminster. Shrubbs'-Hill, Surry, in Egham parish.

SW. of Axminster. Shutford, Oxford. SW. of Banbury. Shutbanger, Gloucestershire. a hamlet in the parish of Turning. Shutlingbarrow-Hill, Cheshire, in Macclesfield-forest. Shuttend, Stafford. near King's Swinford. Shuttington, Warwick. near Seckington. Shuttleworth, Lancashire. NE. of Blackburn. Shuttleworth, Lower, Cheshire, 3 miles from Macclesfield.

SIAM, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. by that of Ava, on the E. by Cambodia and Laos, on the S. by a gulf of the same name and Malacca, and on the W. by the Bay of Bengal. It extends about 800 miles in length, and from 200 to 350 in breadth. It is divided into the Higher and Lower, and the soil produces plenty of rice, cotton, and a variety of fruits, different from those in Europe. The animals are also particular to those parts of the world. Some French authors, indeed, have extolled it as the finest and richest country in the world. The inhabitants, both men and women, go almost naked, except the wealthy, who wear rich garments. The king shows himself but once a year to the common people. He is proprietor of all the lands in the country, and no one can buy any merchandize till he has the choice of them. He generally keeps a numerous army, among which are 1000 elephants. It is a flat country, which, in the rainy season, is overflowed; for which reason, most of the houses are built on pillars, and they have no communication for some months but by boats. It consists of cultivated and uncultivated land, most of it being of the latter, and covered with wood. There are mines of gold, silver, tin, and copper, and they have plenty of pepper, aloes, benjamin and musk. The most profitable trees are those which produce cotton, oil, and varnish. The women are the only merchants in buying goods, the men being generally maintained by the industry of their wives. The Europeans that come there to trade, it is said, generally take wives for the time they stay, who are not less in esteem when the men are gone. The mandarins, that is, the principal men who daily attend the palace, are 3000 in number, and are whipt very severely with split rattans for the least fault. Even the ladies are not exempted from this punishment; and they are so far from being ashamed of it, that they expose their backs as they go along the streets, to show what they have undergone, thinking it an honour to be taken notice of by so great a king. The inhabitants have large foreheads, little noses, plump lips, and black sparkling eyes. Both sexes go bare-headed, and the men are of an olive colour with little beards; but the women are of a straw complexion, and some have their cheeks a little red. They have abundance of wild animals in the woods, as elephants, rhinoceroses, leopards, and tigers. Their tame cattle are beeves, buffaloes, and hogs, of which they have plenty about their farms; beside which, there are large and dangerous crocodiles, and serpents 20 feet long. Their temples and priests are very numerous: the latter are distinguished from the laity by an orange coloured garment, and they keep their heads, beards, and eyebrows, close shaved. The roofs of their temples are gilded, and many of their statues, and other cast works, are of gold; yet they have sought of late, in vain, for mines either of gold or silver. They have schools for the education of their children, and there is scarce any among them but what can read and write. Siam, Odiam, Juthia, or Juda, is the capital.

SIBERIA, a large country, comprehending in ing in its most extensive sense, all the northern part of the Russian empire in Asia; but originally it denoted only the S. part of the government of Tobolski. It is bounded on the E. by the Eastern Ocean, on the S. by Tartary, on the W. by Russia, and on the N. by the Frozen Ocean. It is about 3000 miles in length from E. to W. and 1200 in breadth from N. to S. The S. part produces all the necessaries of life; but the N. part is extremely cold, almost uncultivated, and consequently thin of people. The principal riches of Siberia consist of fine skins and furs. Tobolski is the capital town, where the viceroy resides. The inhabitants are principally of three sorts, Pagans, or the original natives of the country; Mahometans; and Russians. The former dwell in forests in the winter, and in the summer on the banks of rivers. Their garments are the skins of wild beasts. They have bows, arrows, a knife, and a kettle, in which all their riches consist. They make use of rein-deer and dogs, instead of horses, to draw their sledges. They all live in huts, which they remove from place to place. Those in the southern parts are not much more polite; but they have horses with which they go a hunting; and their houses, though poor, are not shifted from place to place. The Russians settled here are much the same as in their native country. It is through this vast tract of land the Russian caravans travel every year, when they carry their merchandise to China. The principal rivers are the Oby, Lena, Irtysh, Venisei, and Okota. The western part of Siberia is comprised in the Russian governments of Tobolsk and Kolyvan; all the eastern part is contained in the government of Irkutsk; these are subdivided into smaller districts. Siberia is the place to which criminals, as well as persons under the displeasure of the court, are commonly banished.

SIBU, one of the Manilla islands, about 30 leagues in circumference. Its principal production is the borona, a species of grain which serves instead of rice; also cotton, tobacco, wax, and civet. Its principal town, containing about 5000 houses, is of the same name. Lat. 10. 20. N. lon. 122. E.

SICAL, a town of Yucatan, in Mexico, situated on the N. coast, about 70 miles WNW. of Merida, situated on the Demer.

SICILY, an island of the Mediterranean Sea, almost in the form of a triangle, terminating in three points or capes; that which is nearest Italy, is called Capo del Faro; that which regards the Morea, Capo Passaro; and the third, which points to Africa, Capo-di-Boco. Sicily is separated from the kingdom of Naples by a narrow strait, called the Faro, 7 miles across; and as Messina is seated on it, it is called the Faro-di-Messina. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily have nearly the same climate, and the productions are much the same; but Sicily abounds much more in corn, particularly in the valleys of Noto and Mazara. The valley of Demona has more forests and fruit-trees than the two others. The quantity of corn and silk exported annually from this island is estimated at about 7 millions of ducats, of which, the article of silk produces one million. Sicily is divided into the valleys just mentioned, called Val-di-Demona, Val-di-Noto, and Val-di-Mazara. It is about 156 miles in length, and 85 in its mean breadth. Its produce not already mentioned, is wine, oil, silk, and excellent fruits. Sicily was originally planted by different colonies from Greece, but the Romans became its conquerors, and held it in subjection till the year 440, when the Vandals invaded this island. These were driven away by Belisarius, and it became a part of the eastern empire till the year 828. It was then conquered by the Saracens, who, in their turn, were driven out by Roger, the son of Tancred, a Norman prince, who took the title of Count of Sicily, in 1080. His son Roger united Sicily with Naples, and was crowned king of both Sicilies, in 1130. Charles, brother of St. Louis, conquered it from the Norman princes; but Peter, king of Arragon, claiming the kingdom, was received by the Sicilians with open arms, was crowned at Palermo, and transmitted Sicily to his descendants. Ferdinand V. united it with Naples. It is governed by a viceroy, who resides at Palermo.

SIEGEN, a town of Naſſau Siegen, in Weſtphalia, ſeated on a river of the ſame name.

SIENNA, a celebrated city of Italy, in Tuſcany, capital of the Sienneſe, containing about 17,000 inhabitants. It is upwards of 4 miles in circumference, and ſurrounded by an old wall. The Gothic cathedral is coated with a black and white marble, within and without, and the pavement is of Moſaic work. The houſes are of brick, and the ſtreets are paved with the ſame; and here is, or lately was, a famous univerſity, and an academy of the Intornati, founded in the 15th century. Sienna is adorned with a great number of palaces, fountains, and ſuperb churches, and with a magnificent hoſpital. The great area is round, and the houſes about it are of the ſame height, ſupported by piazzas, under which the people may walk in all weathers. In the middle is a baſin, which they can fill with water at any time, and repreſent a ſea fight with ſmall veſſels. The Italian language is taught here with ſuch purity, that a great many foreigners reſort to it on that account. Sienna was formerly a free republic, till conquered by the emperor, Charles V. in 1554, whoſe ſon, Philip II. king of Spain, ceded all parts, except the Stato-de-gli Præſidii, to Coſmo I. duke of Florence. It is ſeated on three eminences, in a healthy, fertile ſoil, 36 miles S. of Florence, and 105 N. by W. of Rome. Lat. 43. 10. N. lon. 11. 11. E.

SIENNESE, a duchy in Italy, on the Tuſcan Sea, about 55 miles in length, and as much in breadth. The ſoil is pretty fertile, eſpecially in mulberry trees, and there are ſeveral mineral ſprings. Sienna is the capital.

SIERRA LEONE, a large and fruitful country on the W. coaſt of Africa, ſo named, according to ſome authors, by the Portugueſe, on account of the mountains on this coaſt abounding with a great number of lions. Some extend its limits from the Grain Coaſt on the SE. to Cape Verga or Vega on the NW. that is, between 7 and 10 deg. N. lat. Others, however, confine the country between Cape Verga and Cape Tagrin.

SIERRA LEONE, called alſo RITOMSA and TAGRIN, a great river of Africa, in the country of Guinea. Its ſource is uncertain; but its mouth, in lat. 8. 15. N. lon. 12. 30. W. is 8 miles wide. In the open and plain country, on the banks of this river, the heat of the ſun, before any breeze ariſes, is almoſt intolerable; but as a reſreſhing gale conſtantly ſprings up about noon, it renders the country very ſupportable. In 1791, an act of parliament liament was obtained, incorporating a company, called the Sierra Leone Company, for the express purpose of cultivating West-India and other tropical productions on the banks of this river, on land purchased of the prince of the country. The first settlers amounted to about 200 white persons, beside a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. The natives appeared to be extremely friendly, and a few natives, in 1792, had come to work for the colony. On the setting in of the rains, about the latter end of May, the same year, a considerable degree of sickness and mortality prevailed, occasioned chiefly by the insufficiency of the temporary habitations, which could not be completed before the rains set in. Thirty-five white persons (of whom 14 were soldiers) and many of the blacks, died of this sickness. The next year, the setting in of the rains was not productive of the same fatal effects. The colonists were in good health, were all put into possession of small lots of land, and a new town, on a regular and extended scale, was begun to be built. Beside the Nova Scotia blacks, a large party of the natives were at work for the company, and the experiments in sugar, cotton, &c. appeared to be promising. The native chiefs and people continue to be extremely friendly; and the company's schools were regularly attended by upwards of 300 children, who appear to have made full as much improvement as is common in European schools, under similar circumstances. The rice, cotton, and other articles in the company's plantations thrive exceedingly. The colony appears to be gradually improving and advancing in every respect. The river abounds in fish, but is much infested with alligators. The adjacent country produces abundance of millet and rice; and the woods are filled with parrots of various kinds, and other beautiful birds; serpents are found, some of very large size; and numerous wild beasts, such as lions, tigers, elephants, wild boars, and monkeys.

SIERRA LEONE, or MOUNTAINS OF THE LIONS, mountains of Africa, which divide Nigritia from Guinea, and are said to extend as far as Abyssinia.

SIERRA MORENA, a chain of mountains in Spain, which divide Andalusia from New Castile, and from a small part of Estramadura.

SIFANTO, anciently SIPHROS, an island of the Archipelago, to the W. of Paros. The air is so wholesome here, that many of the inhabitants live to the age of 120, and their water, fruits, wild fowl, and poultry, are excellent, but more especially the grapes. It is covered over with marble and granite, and they have lead mines, and yet it is one of the most fertile and best cultivated of these islands. The inhabitants employ themselves in cultivating olive-trees and capers, and they have very good silk. They trade in figs, onions, wax, honey, straw hats, sesamum, and calicoes. Here are 5 villages, and about 5000 inhabitants. Lat. 36. 37. N. lon. 25. 15. E.

SIGUENZA, a town in Old Castile, containing a cathedral, 3 churches, and between 7 and 800 houses, with an university, consisting of several colleges, founded in 1441, by Cardinal Ximenes. It is seated near the source of the river Henares, 60 miles NE. of Madrid.

Silchester, Hants, NE. of Kingsclere, a place of good repute in the time of the Romans, and where King Arthur was crowned, according to the British historians. Its ancient walls are yet in a great measure entire, and on the NE. side of it is a noble piece of antiquity, a Roman amphitheatre, exactly like that at Dorchester; it has, however, time out of mind, been converted into a yard for cattle, and a watering pond. British tiles, and Roman coins, are often dug up here. Sileby, Leices. NE. of Mountsorrel. Sileby, Lincolnshire, N. of Alford. Sileburn, Warwickshire, between Warwick and Alcester.

SILESIA, a province or duchy of Germany, said to contain (in the whole country) 180 cities and towns, 4000 villages, and 1,800,000 inhabitants. It is bounded on the N. by the marquisate of Brandenburg and Poland, on the S. by Moravia and Hungary, on the E. by Poland, and on the W. by Lower Lusatia and Bohemia. It is about 274 miles in length, and 100 in breadth. The principal rivers are, the Oder, Vistula, Neisse, Bober, Queis, Oppa, and Elbe. A long chain of mountains separates Silesia from Bohemia. There are mines of gold and silver; but they have not been worked for many years. There are also some precious stones, but too much time is required to obtain them. The highest mountain of Silesia is called Zotenberg, situated in the principality of Schweidnitz, and is 104 miles in circumference. The most considerable silver mines, at present, are at Reitstein, in the principality of Brieg. There are also mines of lead, copper, and iron, and quarries of various stones, besides antimony, saltpetre, sulphur, alum, vitriol, quicksilver, &c. The principal manufacture is linen cloth; and they have also some woollen manufactories and glass-houses. They feed a great number of cattle, have large studs of horses, and plenty of the common sorts of game in the woods. They have but few lynxes and bears, and fewer wolves; because they give a ducat a head for every one that is killed. They have a great many lakes, full of pike, carp, and other good fish; also plenty of bees, which produce a great deal of honey and wax. They have wheat, barley, oats, millet-seed, and turnips, sufficient for the use of the inhabitants; in some places they cultivate saffron; and the culture of silk is likely to be carried to its utmost extent. Their wine is very poor, and therefore they turn it mostly into vinegar. Silesia is divided into the Upper and Lower. In the Upper, the inhabitants are generally Romanists, speaking the Polish language; and in the lower, almost all Protestants, and speak their mother tongue. Silesia is divided into 19 principalities, and 7 free states, without comprehending the county of Glatz. The greater part of this country was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the treaty of Breslaw, the empress reserving to herself only the principality of Teschen; the part of the principalities of Troppau and Jagerndorf beyond the Oppa; the part of the principality of Neisse, bordering on Moravia; and a small district bordering on Moravia; with some frontier towns. Breslaw is the capital of Prussian, and Troppau of Bohemian Silesia.

SINAI, a mountain in Arabia Petræa, in a peninsula formed by the two arms of the Red Sea. The Mahometans hold it in great veneration; and here the Christians have a monastery, which formerly contained a great number of monks; and there were a great number of little chapels and cells for hermits. The monastery is surrounded by a high wall, and those that go in and out, are let down or drawn up in baskets. It is 144 miles ESE. of Suez.

SINGAPORE, a promontory at the S. extremity of the peninsula of Malacca, which, with the Malacca coast, form the Strait of Singapore. Lat. 1. 10. N. lon. 103. 30. E.

SINDE. See INDUS and TATTA.

Sinderby, Yorks. W. of Thirsk. Sindrop, Northumb. SW. of Hexham

SINDY, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the W. by Makran, a province of Persia; on the N. by the territories of the king of Candahar; on the NE. by those of the Seiks; on the E. by a sandy desert; and on the SE. by Cutch. It extends along the course of the river Sinde, or Indus, from its mouth to the frontiers of Moultan. Reckoned that way, it is about 300 miles long; and its breadth, in its widest part is about 160. In many particulars of soil and climate, and in the general appearance of the surface, Sindy not a little resembles Egypt; the lower part of it being composed of rich vegetable mould, and extended into a wide delta; while the upper part is a narrow slip of country, confined on the Persian side by a ridge of mountains, and on the other by a sandy desert, the river Indus, equal at least to the Nile, winding through the midst of this level valley, and annually overflowing it. During great part of the SW. monsoon, or our summer quarter, which is the rainy season in most other parts of India, the atmosphere is here generally clouded, but no rain falls, except very near the sea. Indeed, very few showers fall during the whole year; and, at the time when Capt. Hamilton visited Tatta, no rain had fallen for 3 years before. Owing to this, and the neighbourhood of the sandy deserts, which bound it on the E. and on the NW. the heats are so violent, and the winds from those quarters so pernicious, that the houses are contrived so as to be occasionally ventilated by means of apertures on the tops of them, resembling the funnels of small chimneys. When the hot winds prevail, the windows are closely shut, by which the hottest part of the current of the air (that nearest the surface) is excluded; and a cooler part, because more elevated, descends into the house through the funnels. By this contrivance also, vast clouds of dust are excluded; the entrance of which would alone be sufficient to render the houses uninhabitable. The roofs are composed of thick layers of earth instead of terraces. Few countries are more unwholesome to European constitutions, particularly the lower part of the delta. The prince is a Mahometan, tributary to the King of Candahar. He resides at Hydrabad, although Tatta is the capital. This province was conquered, in 1739, by Nadir Shah from the Great Mogul, and retained by Abdallah, when he seized the other provinces which compose the empire of Candahar. The Hindoos, who were the original inhabitants of Sindy, and were reckoned, in Captain Hamilton's time, to outnumber the Mahometans ten to one, are treated with great rigour by their Mahometan governors, and are not permitted to erect any pagodas, or places of worship; and this severity drives vast numbers of them into other countries. The inland parts of Sindy produce saltpetre, sal-ammoniac, borax, bezoar, lapis-lazuli, and raw silk. They have also manufactures of cotton and silk of various kinds; and they make fine cabinets, inlaid with ivory, and finely lacquered. They also export great quantities of butter, clarified, and wrapped up in duppas, made of the hides of cattle. The women wear hoops of ivory on both their arms and legs, and when they die, they are burnt with them. They have large black cattle, excellent mutton, and small, hardy horses. Their wild animals are deer, hares, antelopes, and foxes, which they hunt with dogs, leopards, and a small fierce creature called shiahgush.

SINGANFOU, or SINGAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of the province of Chenfi. Next to Pekin, this is the largest, and most populous, and commercial city of China, and was for several ages the seat of the Chinese emperors. They breed up mules here in great numbers, and send them to Pekin. Lat. 34. 46. N. lon. 108. 13. E.

The inhabitants, who are Turks, will not admit any Jews to reside here, and the Greeks live in the suburbs. It is seated on an isthmus of a peninsula, in the Black Sea, with two good harbours, 280 miles E. of Constantinople.

SINTZHEIM, a town in the palatinate of the Rhine, 13 miles SSE. of Heidelberg.

SION, or SITTEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Vallais, seated on a river of the same name, which soon after falls into the Rhone. It contains six churches, with some convents, a college, and no less than 3 episcopal palaces, all standing one above the other. The highest, called Tourbillon, is old, ruinous, and deserted. Near the second, denominated Valeria, are the remains of the old cathedral, and a few houses belonging to the canons. De Majorci, the third, is the present episcopal palace, an edifice of stone, built in 1547; the apartments furnished with great plainness and simplicity. Sion was formerly the capital of the Seduni, who inhabited this country in the time of Julius Cæsar; and some Roman inscriptions still remain to attest its antiquity. Its bishop is a prince of the empire. It is 48 miles S. of Berne.

SION, a famous mountain of Judea, situated on the S. side of Jerusalem.

SKYE, an island of Scotland, one of the largest of the Western Islands, or Hebrides. It is near 50 miles in length, and, in some places, above 20 broad. The SE. end of this island is separated from Invernesshire (to which it belongs) by a narrow channel, the narrowest part of which, cattle are made to swim across. Here is, notwithstanding some mountainous tracts, a great proportion of level ground, ground, with excellent pasture. There are also numbers of deer, and different kinds of game, in this island, which abounds with limestone, marble, &c. The basaltic columns, resembling the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, are its greatest curiosity. A cave, at the E. end of the island, afforded an asylum, in 1746, to the disappointed Pretender, and his faithful guide, for two nights. Many thousands of black cattle are annually exported hence. Some small horses are bred, and a great quantity of kelp manufactured here. Portree is the principal place in this island.

SLESWICK, a town of Denmark, containing about 5680 inhabitants. It is an irregular town of great length. The houses are of brick, and, like all the other towns in this country, resemble, in neatness and manner of building, those of Holland. The inhabitants dress also like the Dutch; and many of them speak their tongue, though the usual languages are the German and Danish. It is situated on the Sley, which is now no longer a port, being choked up with sand, 60 miles N. of Hamburg. Lat. 54. 39. N. lon. 9. 38. E.

SLESWICK, or SOUTH JUTLAND, a duchy of Denmark, N. of Holstein, from which it is mostly separated by the river Eyder. It contains several towns, and 1500 villages, and has from time immemorial been united to Denmark, but has sometimes been given to the brother of the reigning-king as a fief. In the last century, however, the duke, in possession, attempted to become an independent prince, but in 1720 it was recovered to the crown. The governor and counsellors reside at Gottorp. This duchy is about 72 miles in length, and from 30 to 56 in breadth; and is a level, fertile, populous, and well cultivated country. Sleswick is the capital.

NW. of Birmingham. Smeton, Great and Little, Yorks. on the Wisk, N. of Northallerton. Smeton-Kirk, Yorkshire, SE.

of Pontefract. Smitham, Surry, S. of Croydon.

Smithborough, in Monaghan, Ulster.

Smithby, Derby, near Alby-de-la-Zouch. Smith's Hall, Essex, near Stondon Massey. Smith's Hall, Kent, in W. Farley.

SMITH'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Lieutenant Ball, in 1790. Lat. 9. 44. S. lon. 161. 54. E.

SMOLAND, or SMALAND, a province of Sweden, in which are 21 lakes, immense forests of pine and fir, and some iron-mines. The approach to the villages here is announced by groves of oak, beech, and birch, and by numerous plots, or parterres, of arable land among pastures and rocks. An acre of land in this country has been frequently observed to be laid out with alternate slips of rye, barley, flax, and hemp; the intervals between, and around, sown with grass. In many parts, the trees are cut down and burnt, in order to manure the soil. This province is about 100 miles long, and 60 broad, and was formerly governed by kings of its own. It was formerly included in E. Gothland.

SMOLENSKO, a city of Russia, capital of the government of the same name. It is built so as to extend over two mountains and the valley between them. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high and 15 thick: the lower part of them is built of stone, the upper of brick, and their circumference is four miles and three quarters. They are surmounted by towers, three stories high, placed at the angles, between which are others of a smaller size; and in the plain, the walls are surrounded by a deep ditch and covered way. The houses are mostly of wood, and only one story high. The city is divided through its whole length by one straight, paved street, the others are circular, and floored with planks. The alternate rising and sinking of the walls, from the inequality of the ground, their Gothic architecture, and grotesque towers, the steeples rising above the trees, which conceal the houses from the sight, the gardens, meadows, and corn-fields, within the walls, altogether form a truly singular, picturesque, and varied prospect. Notwithstanding its extent, however, it contains only about 4000 inhabitants, and has no proper manufactures, but carries on, with Dantzic, Riga, and the Ukraine, a pretty considerable traffic in linen, hemp, honey, wax, leather, furs, timber, hides, hog's bristles, &c. It is situated on the Dnieper, 197 miles NE. of Novo-grodeck, and 230 NNE. of Kiow. Lat. 54. 50. N. lon. 31. 22. E.

SMOLENSKO, a government of Russia, on the frontiers of Lithuania. It contains White Russia, properly so called.

SMOW, a noted cavern on the N. coast of Sutherland, between Cape Wrath and Loch Eribol. It runs so far under ground, that its extremity, it is said, could never yet be explored.

SMYRNA, or ISMIR, a considerable city and sea-port of Natolia, situated on a spacious bay of the Mediterranean. The commodiousness of the harbour (which is capable of containing the largest navy) has caused it to be rebuilt several times, after having been destroyed by earthquakes. It is the common rendezvous of merchants from all parts of the world, especially of English, and the staple of their merchandise. The whole town, indeed, is a continual bazar, or fair, where nothing is wanted for clothing, sustenance, or pleasure, as all the best commodities of Europe and Asia are brought hither, and vended at cheap rates. The Turks have 19 mosques, the Greeks form 2 churches, the Jews 8 synagogues, the Armenians 1 church, and the Latins have 8 convents. There are 3 bishops, one Greek, another Latin, and the third Armenian. The streets are more open, better paved, and the houses better built, than in other towns of this part of the continent. The street of the Franks is the finest in Smyrna, stretching along the harbour, and here the European consuls live in great state and magnificence. Smyrna is eight days journey from Constantinople by land, 25 days from Aleppo by the caravans, and 6 from Satalia. The caravans of Persia often bring 200 bales of silk in a year, beside drugs and cloth. The other commodities brought here, are thread made of goat's hair, cotton, yarn, cotton in bags, various kinds of drugs, and all sorts of carpets. Most of the trade here, as well as in all Turkey, passes through the hands of the Jews, the Turks never transacting any bargain with Christians. The English and Dutch factories have Protestant chapels; and taverns are as open here as in Europe. The territory about Smyrna is fertile, with fine olive trees and vines; and the wine is excellent. It is 176 miles SSW. of Constantinople. Lat. 38. 28. N. lon. 27. 25. E.

SNACKENBURG, a large trading town of Lunenburg Zell, 68 miles ENE. of Zell.

Snailwell, Camb. near Newmarket.

SNAITH,

SNAITH, a little town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, but of good trade, from the navigation to it in boats. It is situated at the conflux of the rivers Aire and Don, 22 miles S. of York, and 174 N. by W. of London. Market on Friday.

Snape, Suffolk, S. of Saxmundham. Snape, Yorks. N. of Mafham. Snaresbill-House, Norfolk, E. of Thetford. Snarford, Lincolnsh. between Market-Raisin and Lincoln. Snargate, Kent, 4 miles NW. of New Romney. Snarston, Leices. between Swepton and Hog's-Norton. Snaive, Kent, 3 miles and a half NW. of New Romney. Snawerwick, Kent, near Snaive. Sneaton, Yorkshire, near Whitby. Sned, Shropshire, NW. of Bishops-Castle.

S. of Pickering-Forest. Snepe, Northumb. NW. of Billingham. Sneton-Thorp, Yorkshire, between Newbiggin-Hall and Robin-Hood's-Bay.

SNETSHAM, a small town of Norfolk, once a royal demesne, with many privileges. It is seated on the little river Ingol, 10 miles N. by E. of Lynn Regis, and 111 N. by E. of London. Market on Friday.

SNIADIN, a town of Brzesc, in Lithuania, situated on the Pruth. It is capital of Pocutia.

Snibston, Leices. SE. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Snidale, Yorks. SE. of Pontefract. Snilesworth, Yorks. S. of Stokesley. Snipehouse, Northumb. S. of Alnwick. Snitter, Northumb. a mile from Rothbury. Snitterby, Linc. SE. of Kirtton, in Lindsey. Snitterfield, Warw. N. of Stratford-upon-Avon. Snitterley, Norfolk, W. of Clay. Snitterton, Norfolk, between Harpham and Lerling. Snodhurst, Kent, partly in Chatham, and partly in the limits of Rochester. Snodland, Kent, by the Medway, 4 miles and a half NW. of Maidstone. Snore-Hall, Norf. near the river Wisley, S. of Downham. Snoreham, Essex, adjoining Lachington. Snoring, Magna, and Parva, Norfolk.

near Walsingham. Snotterton, Durham, near Staindrop. Snowden Hall, Heref. near the Golden Vale and the river Doier. Snowden-Pool, Staffordsh. W. of Patshall.

SNOWDON, a famous mountain of Carnarvonshire, in N. Wales, which occupies the centre of the county. Its name signifies literally the Hill of Snow, from snow and down. Eryri, the Welsh name, is derived from Mynydd Eryod, the Hill of Eagles. This is the most noted eminence in the whole region of the Welsh hills; its top, by way of eminence, is termed y Wyddfa; that is, the conspicuous. On the top there are bogs, and two lakes that abound with fish, particularly the char and the guinard. Mr. Pennant says, "that the height of the mountain, reckoning from the quay of Carnarvon to its highest peak, is 3568 feet. It was held sacred by the ancient Britons, as Parnassus was by the Greeks, and Ida by the Cretans." He found pieces of lava on this mountain, and, on the summit, groups of columnar stones of vast size, lying in all directions. From the summit may be seen a part of Ireland, of Scotland, and of Cumberland, Lancashire, Cheshire, and all North Wales, the Irish and British seas, and a vast number of lakes. Such a beautiful display of nature, at once astonishes and charms the beholder.

Snowhill, Gloucesters. near Broadway. Snukebank, Northumb. between Alnwick and Rothbury. Snyte, a river which rises in Leicestershire, and passing through Nottinghamshire, falls into the Dean at Shilton. Soak, Hampshire, near Winchester.

SOANA, or STANE, a decayed town of Tuscany, in the Siennese.

SOANE, a river of Hindoostan, which rises on the southern confines of Allahabad, issuing from the lake, that is the source of the Nerbudda, and after a course of about 1500 miles, falls into the Ganges a few miles W. of Patna.

SOBERNHEIM, a town of Sponheim, in the circle of Upper Rhine.

SOBIESLAU, a town of Bechin, in Bohemia.

SOCHEU, a town of China, in the province of Chenfi. Here is a temple dedicated to a blind man, said to have been one of the greatest politicians in China.

SOCIETY ISLES, a cluster of isles, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1769, and so named by him, because they lie contiguous to each other. They are situated between the latitudes of 16. 10. and 16. 55. S, and between longitudes of 150.

57. and 152. W. They are six in number; namely, Huaheine, Ulietea, Otaha, Bolabola, Mauroua, and Toobaee. The soil, productions, people, their language, religion, customs, and manners, are nearly the same as at Otaheite. The soil is equally bountiful and fertile, and the inhabitants are as luxurious and indolent. A plantain branch is the emblem of peace among them, and changing names the greatest token of friendship. Their dances, however, are more elegant; their dramatic entertainments also have something of plot and consistency, and they exhibit temporary occurrences as the objects of praise or satire: so that the origin of ancient comedy may be fairly discerned among them. The inhabitants seemed to be stouter than those of Otaheite, and the women were in general fairer and handsomer, though none were equal to some individuals. Those of Ulietea, however, were smaller and blacker, and much less orderly. Mr. Banks found here only eleven new plants; but he observed some insects, and a species of scorpion he had never seen before. Captain Cook put on shore a Cape ewe at Bolabola, where a ram had been previously left by the Spaniards; and also an English boar and sow, with two goats, at Ulietea. If the valuable animals which have been transported thither from Europe, should be suffered to multiply, no part of the world will equal these islands in variety and abundance of refreshments for future navigators. Among these islands are several excellent harbours; the entrances into them, indeed, are generally narrow, yet, when a ship is once in, nothing can hurt her.

Sock, Somers. 3 miles from Yeovil.

Sockborn, Durham, on the Tees, 4 miles SE. of Darlington. Sockbridge, Westmorland, on the Elmot, near Penrith. Sockneys, Sussex, near Burwash and Salehurst. Sockbury-Hill, Sussex, NE. of Rotherfield. Socomb, Kent, NW. of Wye.

SOCONUSCO, a district of Guatimala, in Mexico, S. of the district of Chiapa, on the N. Pacific Ocean. It is about 88 miles in length, and almost as much in breadth. It is sheltered from the N. winds by high mountains, which renders the air exceedingly hot, and the country is not very healthful or fertile. The few Spaniards who were settled here are extremely rich. Great quantities of indigo and cocoa-nuts are raised here, which are sent to all the other parts of Mexico.

SOCOTARA, a populous, fruitful island in the Arabian Sea, about 50 miles in length; and 20 in breadth. The capital, of the same name, is situated on a river near the sea, in lat. 15. 24. N. The natives are Mahometans, with a mixture of Paganism. They trade to Goa, with the produce of their island, viz. fine aloes, frankincense, ambergrease, dragon's blood, rice, dates, and coral, which are transported from thence to many parts of India and all Europe. The sultan is tributary to the princes of Arabia. The shore every where affords safe anchorage and good ports, and here are, in particular, two remarkably fine harbours, where shipping may ride secure from every wind that blows. Lat. 12. 15. N. lon. 54. E.

SODA, a town of Hedjas, Arabia.

Sodbury, Durham, near Darlington.

SODBURY, CHIPPING, an ancient town of Gloucestershire, containing several good inns, as it is a great thoroughfare on the road between Bristol and Cirencester. It has a considerable market for corn, and the greatest cheese market in England, except Atherstone, in Warwickshire. It is 15 miles ENE. of Bristol, and 112 W. of London. Market on Thursday. Fairs on May 23d and June 24th.

Sodbury, Little and Old, Gloucestersf. a mile ENE. of Chipping Sodbury.

SOCORRO, a barren, uninhabited island in the N. Pacific Ocean, about 70 leagues W. from the coast of Mexico. Lat. 18. 30. N.

SODOM, formerly a city of Asia, situated on a plain, now under water, in what is called the Dead Sea, or Lake Asphaltites, in Judea.

Sodor, a little village in Icolmkill, one of the Western Isles of Scotland, near that of Mull.

SOEBORG, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, 9 miles WNW. of Elsinore.

SOEST, a town of Mark, in Westphalia. It was formerly imperial, and one of the Hanse Towns, but since 1752 has been subject to the king of Prussia. Several of the successors of the Emperor Charlemagne resided here. It is 27 miles SE. of Munster.

SOFALA, or QUITERVE, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the E. by the Mosambique Sea, on the S. by Sabia, and on the N. and W. by the states of Monomotapa. The inhabitants cultivate rice and millet, and eat the flesh of elephants, large and small cattle, and fish. They also make a sort of beer of rice and millet; and other liquors of honey, palm, and fruits. Honey here is in such plenty, that a great part of it lies neglected. All the coasters are descended from the Arabians, yet are commonly black, there being but few tawny or brown among them. Many learned men affirm, that Solomon had his gold from the mines in this country, and that the country of Sofala is the Ophir of the ancients, the gold here being generally allowed to be the finest and purest in all Africa. It is governed by a king, tributary to the Portuguese, who built a fort at the principal town, which is of the same name, and of great importance for their trade to the E. Indies. It is seated in a small island, near the mouth of a river. Lat. 20. 20. S. lon. 37. 30. E.

that

SOFIA, or SOPHIA, a commercial, populous, and well-built city of Turkey, in Europe, capital of Bulgaria, originally built by the Emperor Justinian, on the ruins of the ancient Sardica. The streets, however, are narrow, uneven, and dirty. It is 164 miles WNW. of Adrianople.

SOFROY, a town of Chaus, in Fez, noted for a handsome mosque: the principal commerce is in oil. It is 22 miles E. of Fez.

SOGNO, a maritime province of Congo, in Africa, S. of the river Zaire. It is a dry, sandy country, abounding in salt. The inhabitants are mostly Christians, converted by the Portuguese. The capital, Banza Sogno, is a small place; the Capuchins, however, form a church here.

SOHAM, (formerly called MONK'S SOHAM), from its rich monastery, a town of Cambridgeshire, celebrated for its cheese. It is seated on the river Cam, near Soham Meer, (which takes up 1000 acres of land) 5 miles SSE. of Ely, and 70 N. by E. of London. Market on Saturday.

Soham Earls, Suffolk, near Soham.

SOIGNIES, a town of Hainault, seated on the Senne, near a forest to which it gives name, 6 miles NNE. of Mons.

Soilwell, Gloucestersh. in Lidney parish.

SOISSONS, an ancient city in the dept. of Aisne, so named from the Sueffiones, a people of ancient Gaul. It contains about 12,000 inhabitants, and was lately a bishop's see, and the capital of a district called the Soissonois. The environs are beautiful, but the streets are narrow, and the houses ill built. Under the kings of the first race, it was the capital of a kingdom of the same name. The castle, however, here, though ancient, is not that in which those princes resided. It is seated on the river Aisne, 30 miles W. by N. of Rheims, and 60 NE. of Paris.

SOLANDER ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the S. coast of New Zealand. It is about a mile in circuit, and was discovered by Captain Cook, in 1770. Lat. 46. 31. S.

Solte, Selby, or Selbe, a river in the Isle of Man.

SOLEBAY. See SOUTHWOLD.

Soles, Kent, in Barfriston parish. Solesby, Lincolnsh. N. of Alford.

SOLEURE, or SOLOTHURNE, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name, containing about 4000 inhabitants. It was a principal town in the kingdom of Burgundy, and frequently the residence of its kings. Among the most remarkable objects of curiosity in this town, is a new church, which was begun in 1762, and finished in 1772. It is a grand and elegant building, of the Corinthian and Composite orders, and cost at least 80,000*l.* though the revenues of the republic scarcely exceed 12,000*l.* a year. Soleure is the usual residence of the French ambassador to the Cantons, and is seated on the Aar, which here expands into a noble river, 18 miles N. of Bern. Lat. 47. 15. N. lon. 7. 20. E.

SOLEURE, a canton of Switzerland, which holds the eleventh rank in the Helvetic confederacy, into which it was admitted in the year 1481. It is situated between the canton of Bern, and the canton and bishopric of Basil, and contains about 50,000 inhabitants. It is 35 miles in length, and from 12 to 24 in breadth. The soil, for the most part, is exceedingly fertile in corn; and the districts within the Jura abound in excellent pastures. The inhabitants export some corn, horses, cattle, and skins. The sovereign power resides in the great council, which including the senate, or little council of thirty-six, consists of 102 members. The government is a complete aristocracy, and the inhabitants are almost all Roman Catholics.

Soley, Wilts, in Chilton-Foliot parish.

SOLFATRA, or LAGO-DI-BAGNI, a lake of Italy, in the Campagna-di-Roma, near Tavoli, formerly called Lacus Albulus. In this lake are several floating islands, which, however, are nothing but bunches of matted sedge and herbage, adhering together by the bitumen which swims on the surface of the lake, and the sulphur with which its waters are impregnated. Some of these islands are 12 or 15 yards long; the soil is strong enough to bear five or six people, who, by a pole, may move to different parts of the lake, as if they were in a boat. The water water is chalky and sulphureous; towards the surface scarcely lukewarm, but deeper, very hot, and continually boiling. Anciently the waters of this lake had a high medical reputation, and now, bathing in it, is recommended for a variety of cutaneous diseases.

SOLFATARA, a mountain S. of the city of Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro, with a cavity above a mile in length and breadth, which constantly smokes in the day, and flames in the night. The king derives a considerable revenue from the manufactures of sulphur, alum, and vitriol, in this neighbourhood. The ground is almost every where full of sulphur, and in digging ever so little a way into it, the soil will smoke. If opened to a considerable depth, the earth will be insupportable from the heat and exhalations. Here is also a lake full of black, thick water, which seems always to be boiling.

SOLFWITZBURG, or SYLVISBURG, a sea-port of Blekingen, in Sweden.

SOLIHULL, a small town in Warwickshire, 6 miles W. of Coventry, and 107 NW. of London. Market distused.

SOLIMAN, a town of Tunis.

SOLINGEN, a town of Berg, in Westphalia.

SOLIKAMSK, a town of Perm, in Russia, famous for its salt-pits and good horses.

SOLMS, a principality of Germany, in the Weterau. The counts are divided into several branches.

SOLMS, or BURG SOLMS, a town of Solms Braunfels, in the circle of the Upper Rhine.

SOLOMAN ISLANDS, in the S. Pacific Ocean, said to be in lat. about 8. or 10. deg. S. lon. 160. W.

SOLOR, an island in the Indian Ocean, S. of Celebes, governed by its own king. Lat. 9. 0. S. lon. 123. 55. E.

SOLSONA. See SALSONA.

SOLTAU, a town of Lunenburg-Zell.

Solvath, Pembroke, a small harbour or cove, surrounded with high and barren rocks, near St. David's.

SOLWAY FRITH, a large arm of the sea, between Cumberland and Kircudbrightshire. The narrow part of it, at Boulness, is safely forded at low-water, with a guide, although the current be extremely rapid.

SOLWAY MOSS, a large, black morass, in Cumberland, near the river Esk, on the borders of Scotland. It consists of 1600 acres of thin, peaty mud, with a crust too weak, in the driest summer, to support a man's weight. In December, 1769, being swollen by the heavy rains, it burst through the shell of turf which covered it, and spread a black stream, filled with masses of peat, over 400 acres of cultivated land in the neighbouring valley, which it entirely filled up. On this occasion, large horns of deer, and other substances were ejected.

Samborn, Upper and Lower, Hampf. near Stockbridge.

SOMBRERA, a small uninhabited island in the W. Indies. Lat. 18. 40. N. lon. 63. 25. W.

SOMBRERE CHANNEL, a channel between the Nicobar Islands.

Somegill, a river in Radnorshire, which runs into the Lug, a little below Presteign. Somerby, Lincolnf. between Horncastle and Alford. Somerby, Linc. near Grantham. Somerby, Lincolnf. near Gainsborough. Somerby, Lincolnf. near Glandford Bridge. Somercotes, Derbyshire, in Scarfdale, SE. of Alfreton. Somerfield, or Somerville, Kent, near Selling. Somerford, Chesh. near Congleton. Somerford, Hants, near Christchurch. Somerford, Staffordf. on the Penk, near Brewood. Somerford, Great, Wilts, SE. of Malmesbury. Somerford, Little, Wilts, on the Isis, near Cricklade. Somerhill, Kent in Tunbridge, parish, 3 miles from Maidstone. Somer House, Durham, between Darlington and Staindrop. Somerley, Suffolk, on the Yare, near Leostoff. Somerley Hall, or Somerleton, Suffolk, by Heringfleet. Somersall-Hall, Derbyf. in Scarfdale. Somersall, Herbert, and St. Peter's, Derbyf. near Boyston. Somerscale, Yorkf. near Barden Tower and Chace.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the NW. by the Bristol Channel; on the N. by Gloucestershire, from which it is divided by the Avon; on the E. by Wiltshire, on the SE. by Dorsetshire, and on the SW. by Devonshire. Its length, from NE. to SW. is about 65 miles, and its breadth, from E. to W. between 30 and 40. It is divided into 40 hundreds, which contain 3 cities, 33 market-towns, 482 parishes, about 56,000 houses, and 300,000 inhabitants. The air, in the lower grounds, is universally mild, and generally wholesome. The soil is various. The NE. quarter is in general stony, and possesses a lofty tract, called the Mendip Hills. Toward the centre of the county, where its principal rivers unite, are fens and marshy moors of great extent. On the W. side is the ridge of the Quantock-Hills, with many downs and open heaths; and in the NW.

NW. corner, lies the black, steril region of Exmoor. The S. part towards Dorsetshire, is high, but well cultivated; and throughout the county, especially in its SW. quarter, vales of the greatest fertility are interspersed. The principal rivers are the Parret, Ivel, Chew, Axe, Thone, Brent, Exe, Frome, and Avon. The Mendip-Hills afford abundance of coal and minerals. Cheddar is celebrated for its cheeses. Cattle, nearly equal in size to the Lincolnshire, are fed in the fine meadows about the head of the Parret. The best goose feathers for beds come from the Somerset marshes; the unfeeling inhabitants, however, often pluck the poor birds white yet living. Red and yellow ochre are found here, and cyder is a common product of this country; it has also a considerable share in the manufacture of fine cloths, druggets, shalloons, knit stockings, &c.

Somerham, Huntingdonf. among the fens, NE. of St. Ives. Somerham, Suffolk. S. of Needham.

* SOMERTON, a town of Somersetf. formerly a considerable place, from which the county took its name. The West Saxon kings had a castle here, now demolished, the constableness of which appears to have been a considerable trust, for king John of France, who was removed from Hertford Castle, and prisoners of the highest rank, were committed to it. There is one county jail at Ilchester, and another at Somerton, and the assizes are held at Wells, although generally in the summer alternately with Taunton and Bridgewater. It contains at present, about 250 houses, and 1500 inhabitants in the whole parish, and is chiefly noted for its large markets and fairs. It is seated on a branch of the Parret, 13 miles S. by W. of Wells, and 123 W. by S. of London. Markets on Tuesday for corn and cattle, and on every other Monday for lean cattle. The markets for beasts are considerable. Fairs on Tuesday in Passion Week, Tuesday three weeks after ditto, Tuesday six weeks after ditto, and Tuesday nine weeks after ditto.

Somerton, Suffolk, NW. of Melford. Somerton-Castle, Lincolnf. NE. of Beckingham. Somerton, E. and W. Norfolk, near Winterton Nefs.

SOMME, a department of France, bounded on the N. by the dept. of the Straits of Calais, and on the E. by the dept. of the Aisne. It is so named from a river that rises in the dept. of Aisne, and watering St. Quentin, Peronne, Amiens, Abbeville, &c. enters the English Channel about 5 miles WNW. from St. Valery. Amiens is the capital.

Sommercotes, N. and S. Lincolnf. on each side of Saltfleet. Sommeris, Bedfordf. 2 miles NE. of Luton.

SOMMIERES, a town in the dept. of Gard, noted for a manufacture of thick serges, which bear its name. It is seated on the river Vidourle, 10 miles SSW. of Nismes.

SONCINO, a town in the Cremonese.

SONDERSHAUSEN, a town of Schwartzburg, in upper Saxony. In the armory of the ruling prince, is an image of Paltrich, one of the old Wendish idols.

SONDRIO, or SONDERS, a town in the country of the Grisons, capital of the Valteline. It is said to resemble a deserted place, having little trade or animation. In 1620, here was a dreadful massacre of the Protestants, which lasted three days; it began at Tirano, and extended to all the towns of the Valteline. Sondrio is built in a romantic situation, at the extremity of a narrow valley, on both sides of the Malenco, a rapid torrent, which frequently overflows its banks, 15 miles SSE. Chiavenna.

SONERCON, or SUNNERGAUM, a village, once a large city of Hindoostan, the provincial capital of the eastern division of Bengal; famous for a manufacture of fine cotton cloths, before Dacca was built. It is seated on a branch of the Burrampooter, 15 miles SE. of Dacca.

SONNEBURG, a town in the archduchy of Austria, a citadel of which gives name to a country in the circle of Austria, vested in the house of Austria, and a town of Coburg, in Upper Saxony.

SONNENSTEIN, a fortress of Meissen, in Upper Saxony, near Pirna. Near this place a Saxon army, of 17,500 men, had encamped and entrenched in 1756, but being unable to pass the Elbe into Bohemia, were compelled by the Prussians, who had blocked up the river at Ebenheit, to surrender prisoners at discretion.

SONORA, a province of New Navarre, in N. America, situated on the coast of the Gulf of California. It is but little known.

SOOLOA, an island of the Eastern Ocean, situated to the SW. of Mindanao, almost midway between that island and Borneo. It is about 30 miles long and 12 broad, and contains about 60,000 inhabitants, who are governed by a sultan. The natives are Malays; It is a great mart, and the English East-India Company have a resident here. Abundance of edible birds-nests are found in the rocks of the neighbouring bouring sea, but its principal production is fago.

SOUND, THE, or ORESOUND, a strait between Sweden and Denmark, through which ships usually sail between the ocean and the Baltic. It is about 4 miles broad, and here the Danes take toll of the merchant-ships that pass. See ELSIKORE.

SOUR, or SUR, a sea-port of Syria, in the pachalic of Saida, or Acre, near the remains of the ancient and celebrated Tyre. It is now a village, situated on a peninsula, which projects from the shore into the sea. This head of land is a solid rock, covered, however, with a brown cultivable earth, and forming a plain about 800 paces long by 400 broad. The isthmus joining the plain to the continent is of pure sea sand; this difference of soil renders the insular state of the plain, before Alexander joined it to the shore by a mole, very visible. On this isthmus, the village of Sour is situated. In one point of the peninsula is a basin, which was evidently a port formed by art, but is now so choked up, that children pass it without being wet above the middle. Just without the walls of the ancient city, on the eastern side, is an ancient tower, which contains several wells of excellent water; they are about 15 cubits deep; and though the water does not rise in them above eight inches, they are never dry. About the beginning of October, this water always becomes so muddy as to be unfit for use; but by throwing a few pitchers of sea-water into the well, it soon recovers its transparency; this operation, which the inhabitants call the marriage of the sea and land waters, gives occasion to an annual festival, which is celebrated with music and dancing. The purple dye, so highly celebrated by the ancients, is now no longer known here; but a modern voyager, the Abbe Mariti, informs us, that when he visited Tyre, walking on the sea-shore, his guide showed him a species of murex, which emitted a beautiful purple fluid; but the use of it as a colour, is unknown to the Arabs. Here are only 50 or 60 poor families, who live on the produce of their little grounds and gardens, and a trifling fishery. At the SE. corner are the ruins of a Christian church. It is 18 miles S. of Saida, and 80 NNW. of Jerusalem.

SOURE, or SURE, a river which runs from E. to W. through Luxemburg, and falls into the Moselle, a little above Treves.

SOURNIA, a town in the dept. of the eastern Pyrenees, 21 miles W. of Perpignan.

SOUSE, or SUSA, a town of Tunis, one of the best in the country, capital of a province of the same name. It is a place of some trade for oil and linen, and has a good harbour. It is 54 miles S. of Tunis.

SOUTCHEOU, a city of the first rank, in the province of Kiangnan, in China, beautifully and agreeably situated on a river which communicates with the Lake Tai. It is extolled by the Chinese as an earthly paradise, for the delightfulness of the adjacent country, &c. The brocades and embroidery made here are highly esteemed.

Southern Castle, near York.

SOUTERRAINE, a town in the dept. of Creuse, 12 miles W. of Gueret.

South, Suffex, near Beachy-Head. South-Acre, Norfolk, near Castle-Acre.

* SOUTHAM, a town of Warwickshire, with a considerable market for cattle. It is seated in a fertile soil, 8 miles SE. of Warwick, and 88 NW. of London. Market on Monday. Fair on July 10th.

Southam, Gloucef. in Cleve parish, rendered remarkable for the antique house belonging to this tithing, which is a low building, in the style of the age of Henry IV. The hall floor is of painted brick, brought from Hales-Abbey, in high preservation, on which are many curious devices.

* SOUTHAMPTON, formerly called HANTUN, a town of Hampshire, situated on a fine inlet of the sea, called Triffanton Bay, or Southampton-Water, deep enough for ships of 1500 tons burden, or rather for the largest ships. The two principal rivers that flow into it (the Itchen and the Test, Tese, or Anton) admit small craft some way up the country. The town is situated between these two rivers. It was formerly a port of great commerce, and still possesses a respectable trade in French and Port wines, and in the Newfoundland fishery; having a particular connection, moreover, with Guernsey and Jersey. The vessels employed in foreign commerce are about 30, and in the coasting-trade upwards of 100. Here also are manufactures of silk and carpets. The new church here is much admired, being chiefly designed by Mr. Reevely, from various ancient temples in Italy and Greece, and much above the general character of English buildings. The roof is said to be the most masterly performance of the kind in the world. It is a fashionable place of resort for sea-bathing; and it was on this beach that the Danish king Canute gave that striking reproof to his paralytical courtiers; when the disobedient tide washed his feet and wetted his robes. Two miles from this town is Woodmills, where there is a curious manufactory of ship-blocks, from which the royal dock-yards are supplied. Southampton is 12 miles SSW. of Winchester, and 75 WSW. of London. Markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

SOUTHAMPTON, THE COUNTY OF. See HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHWARK, a town of Surry, which may be considered as part of the metropolis, being seated on the opposite side of the Thames, and under the jurisdiction of the lord mayor, who is its bailiff, with a steward and deputy bailiff under him. Southwark is also one of the city wards, named Bridge Ward Without, and an alderman is chosen to govern it. It is called the Borough, by way of distinction; and is a large and populous place, participating considerably in the commerce of London. The bishop of Winchester had formerly a palace here, with a park; when there were 18 brothels along the Bank-side, licensed by that prelate, under certain regulations confirmed by parliament. The prostitutes kept here were commonly called Winchester geese. It is divided into two parts, the Borough Liberty, governed by the lord mayor; and the Clink, or Manor of Southwark, under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Winchester, who, by his steward, keeps a court leet and a court of record on the Bank-side. A Court of conscience is established here, as well as in London. Southwark contains 6 parishes, a new Romish chapel, many places of worship for the Dissenters of various denominations; several charitable foundations, particularly those two noble endowments, St. Thomas's Hospital, and Guy's Hospital; together with the Magdalen Hospital; the Asylum for Female Orphans; the Freemason's School, a lately-erected building, for the same purpose; the Philanthropic Reform, &c. Beside the King's Bench and Marshalsea prisons, and the county Bridewell, a new county-gaol, with a session house adjoining, has been lately built. The court-house, at St. Margaret's Hill has been also rebuilt.

Southwaite, Comberl. near Kewick. Southwaite, Lancas. on the Dudden, W. of Fourness Fells. Southwater, Suffex. Southweald, Essex, to which Brentwood is a hamlet, is situated on an eminence that commands an extensive prospect, 16 miles ENE. of London. Southweek, Gloucesters. in Tewkesbury parish. Southweek, Hants, 5 miles N. of Portsmouth; it commands a fine view of the harbour, dock, Isle of Wight, &c. as also of an extensive vale on the land side, well planted and cultivated, bounded with hills, spread with woods; and of the S. Downs, covered with sheep.

SOUTHWELL, a town in Nottinghamshire, noted for a church, both parochial and collegiate, called a minster, the middle of the western part of which is of Saxon architecture. There belong to it 16 prebends, or canons, 6 vicars choral, an organist, 6 singing-men, 8 choristers, 6 boys, who attend as probationers, a registrar, a treasurer, an auditor, and a vergier. The chapter has a peculiar civil jurisdiction over 28 parishes, to most of which it has the right of presentation, besides others in Yorkshire and Lincoln. It is situated on the Greet, a branch of the Trent, 10 miles NE. of Nottingham, and 139 NW. by N. of London. Market on Saturday.

Southwick, Hants. Southwick, Suffex.

SOUTHWOLD, a populous sea-port of Suffolk, seated on a cliff, or point of land, near a fine bay, at the mouth of the river Blythe. Here a much esteemed salt is made, and it trades largely in herrings, sprats, corn, &c. It is almost surrounded by water, especially at very high tide. It is commonly called SOWLE, or SOLE, and its bay, named SOLEBAY, is remarkable for two famous sea-fights; one in 1666, between the English fleet, of 114 men of war and frigates, and the Dutch fleet, of 103 men of war, when the latter were defeated, with the loss of near 70 ships, 2 admirals, and 6000 men, while the English lost only one ship. The fight of 1672, was between the combined fleets of England and France, consisting of 101 men of war, and the Dutch fleet of 91. The issue of the day was rather uncertain; the English lost four ships and the Dutch three. Southwold is 20 miles S. of Yarmouth, and 104 NE. of London. Market on Thursday.

Southwood, Hants, between South-Sea-Castle, and Thorney-Island. Southworth, Lancas. N. of Warrington. Southby Bank, Lincoln. in Lower-Holland.

SOUTRA-HILL, the most elevated hill in the mountainous ridge of Lammermuir, in the N. part of Berwickshire, in Scotland. In former times, it was a noted sea-mark. In this dreary part of the country, there is scarce a tree or a bush, and few houses or villages; some successful exertions, however, have been made to improve the southern side of this mountain, near the village of Channellkirk.

SPA, a town of Liege, in Westphalia, seated in a romantic valley, surrounded by woody mountains, 17 miles SE. of Liege. It is situated on a small river that runs into the Ourte. It contains about 300 houses, and is famous for its mineral waters. That called the Old Spa, consists of miserable cottages, and is properly a suburb to the other. The houses of the New Spa are mostly of wood, old-fashioned, dark, and small, and yet, it is affirmed, they can make up 1200 beds for strangers. The inn, called the Court of London, is very large, the best, indeed, in the place, and most frequented. The chief springs are called Pouhon, Saviniere, Groisbeek, and Geronster, to which Dr. Lucas has lately added the Pouhon Pia, and Barrifar. The inhabitants are much employed in making toys for strangers, as the town partly resembles a fair, during the water-drinking season. There are beautiful, healthful, and romantic rides on every side, with a great variety of pleasant walks. There are public rooms for assemblies every night, and balls two or three times a week. The waters were first discovered in 1326.

Spade-Adam, Cumberl. near Beauchefle. Spadforth, Nottinghamshire, near Newark.

SPAIN, a considerable kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N. by the Bay of Biscay; on the NE. by the Pyrenean Mountains, which separate it from France; on the E. S. and SE. by the Mediterranean, and the Straits of Gibraltar; on the SW. by the Atlantic; and on the W. by Portugal and the Atlantic. It is about 700 miles in length, and 500 in breadth. It contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estramadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, the Asturias, Murcia, and Upper Navarre; some of which have been separate kingdoms. The air of Spain is dry and serene, except during the equinoctial rains, but excessively hot in the southern provinces, in summer. The vast mountains, however, that run through Spain, are very beneficial to the inhabitants, by the refreshing breezes that come from them in the southernmost parts, though those in the N. and NE. are in the winter extremely cold. The soil is very fertile; but there are large tracts of uncultivated ground. The produce of the country is fine wheat, barley, saffron, exquisite honey, silk, salt petre, salt, barrillas, (a species of pot-ash) and even sugar-canes. It produces the richest and most delicious fruits that are to be found in France and Italy, oranges, lemons, prunes, citrons, almonds, raisins, figs, dates, pomegranates, olives, &c. Their wines are deservedly in high esteem. Wolves are the chief beasts of prey that infest Spain. The wild bulls, which are caught in Andalusia, have so much ferocity, that their bull-fights were formerly the most magnificent spectacle the court of Spain could exhibit; this barbarous amusement, however, is now, in part, exploded. Their domestic animals are horses that are remarkably swift, mules, horned cattle, which are but few, sheep, &c. The wool of the latter is superior to any in Europe; the best is that of Old Castile. Spain abounds in minerals and metals, cornelian, agate, jacinth, loadstones, turquois-stones, quicksilver, copper, lead, sulphur, alum, calamine, crystal, marbles of several kinds, porphyry, the finest jasper; and even diamonds, emeralds, and amethysts, are found here. Anciently it was celebrated for gold and silver mines, but, since the discovery of America at least, no attention attention has been paid to them. The principal rivers are the Duero, Tajo, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, Ebro, Gualdalayir, and Segura. Spain, which, in the times of the Goths and Moors, contained between 20 and 30 millions of people, is now but thinly inhabited, to which various causes have contributed; as the expulsion of the moors, the emigrations to the colonies, the vast numbers and celibacy of the clergy, and the indolence of the natives. It is supposed to contain, at present, about 7 500,000, inhabitants. The greatest part of the necessary artisans are French, as the natives disdain to stoop to handicraft trades. The persons of the Spaniards in general, are tall, their complexions swarthy, and their countenances expressive. The women are small and slender, and, in general, possess little of that beauty which reigns in their novels and romances. The established religion of Spain is popery, and here the inquisition once reigned in all its horrors; but, although it still exists, it has been lately rendered, by the intervention of the royal authority, comparatively harmless. Spain has 44 episcopal sees, and 24 universities. It was once the most free, but is now one of the most despotic kingdoms in Europe. They had once their cortes, or parliaments, which had great privileges; but though not absolutely abolished, they have little or no part in the government. They are assembled indeed, occasionally, (as at the accession of the monarch) but merely as an appendage to the royal state, without power, or any other consequence than what results from their individual rank. Madrid is the capital.

SPAIN, NEW. See MEXICO.

STADE, a town of Bremen, in Lower Saxony, formerly an Hanseatic town, the capital of a county, and the residence of its counts. It is now the seat of the regency of the duchies of Bremen and Verden, as also of the chancery, chief court of justice, and consistory, under the Elector of Hanover, to whom it is subject, together with its territory. In 1712, the Danes took it, after a bombardment, but in 1715, the Danish garrison marched out, and was replaced by the troops of Hanover. In 1755, considerable sums were assigned by the king of Great Britain, for the better fortifying of this town, and these improvements were completed with all possible skill and care. It is seated on the river Swinge, near its confluence with the Elbe, 22 miles W. of Hamburg.

Staden, Derby. in the High Peak.

STADTHAGEN, a town of Schauenburg, Westphalia.

STAFARDA, in Saluzzo, Piedmont.

STAFFA, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, a little to the W. of Mull. It is a mile long, and half a mile broad. The whole SW. end of this island is supported by stupendous ranges of basaltic pillars, mostly above 50 feet high, and standing in natural colonnades. Some of these columns are above 60 feet thick, and are formed almost into the shape of those used in architecture. Here is also a cavern; called Finma-coul, or Fingal's Cave, which extends about 250 feet under ground. Its entrance is a natural arch, more than 100 feet high. Hardly any thing can be conceived more magnificent than such a space, supported on each side by ranges of columns, and roofed by the bottoms of those which have been broken off in order to form it. The cavern is lighted from without, so that its farthest extremity may be seen. Indeed, this island is every where supported by basaltic rocks and pillars, much superior in beauty and grandeur to those which form the Giant's Causeway in Ireland.

* STAFFORD, the county town of Saffordshire, containing two churches, and about 5000 inhabitants. It has a free-school, and a fine, square market-place, in which is a handsome county-hall, and under it the market-house. The streets are large, and many of the houses handsomely built. This town has greatly increased of late, both in population and wealth, by the manufacture of cloth and shoes. A county infirmary finished here in 1772. It is situated in a plain, on the river Sow, near a navigable canal, which extends through several counties, 12 miles NW. of Lichfield, and 135 NW. of London. Market on Saturday.

STAFFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Shropshire and Cheshire, on the NE. and E. by Derbyshire, and on the SE. and S. by Warwickshire and Worcestershire. It extends in length about 54 miles, and in breadth from 18 to 36. It is divided into 5 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 21 towns, 181 parishes, 670 villages, about 23,740 houses, and 142,440 inhabitants. The principal rivers are the Trent, Dove, Sow, Churnet, Stour, Penk, and Manyfold. The air is reckoned pleasant, mild, and wholesome. The middle and southern parts are level and plain, and the soil is good and rich; the N. are hilly and full of heaths and moors. The county, at large, contains about 780,800 acres, of which 600,000 are in a state of cultivation. Staffordshire is famous for its potteries, its inland navigations, and its foundries, blast furnaces, slitting mills, and various other branches of the iron trade. The mines of coals, copper, lead, and iron ore are rich and extensive; those of coal are supposed to occupy a space of 50,000 acres. There are also numerous quarries of stone, alabaster, and limestone. See CANAL, THE GRAND TRUNK.

STAMFORD, a large, populous, rich, and compact town of Lincolnshire, formerly much more considerable than at present, as at one time it contained 14 churches, which in Camden's time were reduced to 7, and at present to 5. It is an ancient place, and had formerly, as some say, a university, or, at least, two colleges, called Black Hall and Brazen Nose. Some remains of these are still visible, and particularly the gate of the last, on which there is a brazen nose and a ring through it. Most of the houses are covered with slate; and here are some large, neat inns, which, indeed, have all the appearance of palaces. Its trade is chiefly in malt, sea-coals, and freestone. The custom of Borough English prevails here. It is seated on the river Welland, which is navigable here for barges, 26 miles NNW. of Huntingdon, and 96 N. by W. of London. Markets on Monday and Friday.

STATEN ISLAND, an island of N. America, which forms the county of Richmond, in the state of New York. It is about 18 miles in length, and 6 in its mean breadth, and contains upwards of 3100 inhabitants; in general the land is rough, and the hills high. Richmond, the only town of note, is principally inhabited by Dutch and French families, and is 9 miles SSW. of the city of New York.

STATEN LAND, a barren, craggy island, about 36 miles in length, and 15 in breadth, lying on the SE. side of Terra del del Fuego, between which and this island are the Straits of Le Maire. Nothing can be imagined more savage, wild, gloomy, and horrible, than the aspect of some parts of this coast, according to the author of Anson's voyage, being composed of inaccessible rocks, without the least mixture of earth or mould between them, rising up to a prodigious height, and terminated in a vast number of ragged points, which points are themselves surrounded on every side with frightful precipices, and often overhang in a most astonishing manner. All of them are covered with everlasting snow, and are generally separated from each other by narrow clefts or chasms, nearly perpendicular, which extend through the main substance of the rocks or hills which bear them, almost to their very bottoms, and appear as if the country had been rent by earthquakes. On the N. side, however, (according to Capt. Cook, who passed the Straits of Le Maire, in January 1769) are the appearances of bays or harbours, and the land is neither destitute of wood nor verdure. Lat. 54. 40. S. lon. 65. W.

* STEYNING, a poor, little borough of Suffex, with scarcely 200 families. It is chiefly noted for its church, which is a small but curious and most complete Norman-built structure, in its first plan. The middle aisle has on each side 4 Norman, round arches, zigzagged, surmounted with as many round-headed, small windows. The two side aisles are much and disproportionably lower, as was the custom. The roof is of rafter, as stone vaulting was neither common, nor known at that time. A lofty Norman arch leads into the chancel. The tower is more modern. Steyning is situated in a very healthy air, on the road from Lewes, Brighthelmston, and Shoreham, to Petworth, Midhurst, &c. 15 miles W. of Lewes, and 51 S. by W. of London. Market on Wednesday, and one on the 2d Wednesday in every month, for cattle. Fairs on June 9, Sept. 19, and Oct. 10. The Michaelmas fair is very considerable, for Welsh and other cattle, sheep, horses, hogs, wheat, feed, &c.; the others are pretty large.

Stiperden, Yorkf. SW. of Heptonstall. Stiperley Park, Chesf. near Lime-park, is noted for sheep larger than the common size, the fleece of which is rather hair than wool; besides two sheep's horns, they have two as erect as goats', and their flesh, though sufficiently agreeable, has more the taste of goat than mutton. Stipersbill, Warw. near Polesworth. Stipperstone Hill, Shropshire, NE. of Chirbury.

STIRIA, a duchy of Austria, N. of Carniola, and E. of Carinthia, divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Stiria is about 110 miles in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth: Judenburg in the capital. Lower Stiria is about 80 miles in length, and 48 in breadth: Gratz is the capital. Though in general, a mountainous country, the inhabitants raise great quantities of fine wheat; they have also large breeds of cattle, with wild fowl, chamois, and other game. Here are mines of iron, which have been worked these thousand years, and still continue rich. The Stirian steel is held in high estimation. The language is rough; but the inhabitants of Cilley are mostly Wends, and speak the Wendish language.

STIRLING, an ancient town of Scotland, the capital of Stirlingshire. It is seated on the S. side of the Frith of Forth, on a hill, which, rising from the E. terminates abruptly in a steep rock. On this rock is an ancient castle, which was often the residence of the kings of Scotland. The outside of the palace, which is now converted into barracks, is richly and curiously adorned with various grotesque figures. From the castle is a fine view of the windings of the Forth, which are so numerous, that the distance from Stirling to Alloa is above 20 miles by water, although only four by land. The church of Stirling is a magnificent Gothic structure, which serves for two separate places of worship. In this town and its neighbourhood are flourishing manufactures of carpets, as also of coarse shalloons and cottons; but that of tartans is on the decline. Stirling is commodiously seated, being a pass between the N. and S. parts of Scotland, but with such a difficult navigation of its river, that only small vessels can come up to the town. It is 30 miles NW. of Edinburgh.

STIRLINGSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded, on the N. and NE. by Perthshire and Clackmannanshire, on the E. by the Frith of Forth, and the county of Linlithgow, on the S. by Lanarkshire, and on the W. by Dumbartonshire. It is about 36 miles in length, 8 or 9 in its general breadth, and not more than 13 in its greatest. The S. parts are mountainous, but the parts about the Forth are fertile and abound in coals. The principal rivers are the Forth, (which receives a great number of smaller streams) Carron, and Avon; besides which, the new canal from Glasgow runs through this country to the Carron mouth. The principal towns are Stirling and Falkirk.

STOCKHOLM, the capital of Sweden, in a situation remarkable for its romantic scenery. It is very long and irregular, being built on 7 small, rocky islands, from one of which the city takes its name, (between the Baltic and the Malar lake) besides which, it occupies two peninsulas. Between these several parts of the city a communication is formed by means of bridges. A variety of contrasted and beautiful views are formed by numerous rocks of granite, rising boldly from the surface of the water, partly bare and craggy, and partly dotted with houses, or feathered with wood. The harbour is an inlet of the Baltic; the water, of a blackish colour, is of such depth, that ships of the largest burden can approach the quay. At the extremity of the harbour, several streets rise one above another, in the form of an amphitheatre; and the palace, a magnificent building, crowns the summit. The arsenal contains many curiosities, among which are an immense number of standards, and other military trophies, taken from the Imperialists, Poles, Russians, and Danes. Except in the suburbs, where some houses are of wood, painted red, the buildings are mostly of stone, or brick, stuccoed white, and built on piles. A Royal Academy of Sciences was instituted here in 1741: here is also a Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture. In Stockholm are manufactures of glass, china, woollen, silk, linen, &c. The inhabitants are estimated at 60,000. The court formerly resided at Upsal, but removed here in the last century.

It is a large parish, almost surrounded by Devonshire. Stockley, Wiltshire, S. of Calne. Stockley, English, Lucombe, and Pomeroy, Devonshire, villages near each other, between Tiverton and Crediton. Stocklinch, Magdalen and Ottersey, Somersetshire, NE. of Ilminster.

* STOCKPORT, a town of Cheshire, seated on the river Mersey, over which it has a bridge that leads into Lancashire, and connected with the late extensive, inland navigations, 7 miles SE. of Manchester, and 176 NNW. of London. Standing on uneven ground, it is generally ill-built, but is, however, a town of good entertainment. Its population fluctuates from 16 to 20,000 inhabitants, according to the state of its manufactories, which are very considerable, and include the business of cotton and printed goods, with a few silk-mills, and a share of hat-making for the London market. Market on Friday.

Hants, on the river Itchen, N. of Southampton. Stoneham, Parva, Suffolk, NW. of Stoneham-Aspol.

STONEHAVEN, or STONEHIVE, a fishing-town of Kincardineshire, with a good harbour secured by a stone pier. Near it is a precipitous cliff, called Fowl's Cleugh, which is remarkable for the resort of the birds called kittiwake, the young of which are esteemed a great delicacy. To the S. of it, the rocks rise to a considerable height. Here is a manufacture of canvas, and some trade in dried fish oil. This oil is obtained chiefly from the dogfish, great quantities of which are caught on this coast. Stonehaven is 14 miles S. by W. of Aberdeen.

STONEHENGE, a remarkable monument of antiquity, situated in Salisbury Plain. It has the river Avon and other streams on the E. and a brook that runs into the Willy, on the W. which streams encompass it half round. It stands on the summit of a hill, which rises with a very gentle ascent. At the distance of about half a mile, it has a very stately and august appearance, and advancing nearer, especially up the avenue on the NE. side, where the remains of this wonderful structure are most perfect, it fills the eye in an astonishing measure. It is encompassed with a circular ditch; after this is passed, there is a space of exactly 108 feet to the work itself, which is also 108 feet in diameter. It consists of several stones of enormous size, placed upon one another in a circular form: many of them are really stupendous, and cannot fail of filling the beholder with surprise and admiration. The exterior circle, in its perfection, consisted of 60 stones, 30 uprights, add 30 imposts, of which only 17 uprights are left standing. About 8 feet from the inside of this outer circle is another of 40 smaller stones, without imposts, forming, as it were, a circular portico. Of these 19 are left, of which 11 only are standing. Besides this outer portico, which is 300 feet in circumference, there is an inner one, which originally composed two-thirds of an oval. On the inside of this oval, there is a lesser one of 19 stones, 10 stones, of a pyramidal form; these are 2 feet 6 inches in breadth, 1 foot and a half thick, and about 8 feet high, rising in height as they approach the upper end of the inclosure. The space within it has been called the Adytum, or Sanctum Sanctorum, where it is supposed the priests entered, to offer their sacrifices on the altar at the upper end. This altar is composed of a kind of blue, coarse marble, 20 inches thick, 4 feet broad, and 16 feet in length. All the stones added together, with which this whole temple was built, make just 140. One stone at the upper end, which is fallen down and broken in half, measures, according to Dr. Hales, 25 feet in length, 7 in breadth, and at a medium, 3 and a half in thickness. The stones are supposed to have been brought from the Grey Weathers, upon Marlborough Downs, but the difficulty in bringing them hither, and especially in laying them one upon another, is inconceivable, as no mechanical powers now known, are sufficient to raise those that lie across, to their present extraordinary situation. Stonehenge is 2 miles W. of Amesbury, and 6 NNW. of Salisbury.

Stone-Hill, Kent, in Wilmington parish. Stone Holm, Kent, in Dengy-Marsh. Stonehouse, Gloucester, 4 miles W. of Stroud. Stonehouse, E. and W. Devon, near Plymouth. The latter is W. of the passage at Crimble ferry. From it there is a prospect of St. Nicholas Island, and the towns of Plymouth, Saltash, and Milbrooke. East Stonehouse, anciently called Hipeston, is become a large, populous place, and has the finest barracks in the kingdom. Stonelinch, Sussex, near Winchelsea.

STONELY, a town of Warwickshire, situated on the N. bank of the Sow, near its confluence with the Avon, 4 miles S. of Coventry, and 88 NNW. of London. Market on Thursday.

STOUR, a river which riſes in Somerſetſhire, from three ſources, the firſt near Wincauton, the ſecond near Pen, and the third near More Park. The ſecond and third of theſe ſtreams, unite ſoon after their entering Dorſetſhire, in Gillingham Foreſt, where the Stour becomes a conſiderable river, and directs its courſe nearly towards the S. where it is joined by the ſtream from Wincauton, near Fiſehead. About 2 miles and a half below this junction, it receives the waters of the Lyddon; and about half a mile farther, it is joined by the Dulifh, flowing with a full ſtream to Sturmiſter Newton. Here it directs its courſe to the SE. waſhing the town of Blandford, and receiving at Wimborne Minſter the waters of the Allen. About 4 miles below its junction with the Allen, it leaves Dorſetſhire, and falls into the Engliſh Channel at Chriſt Church, in Hampſhire.

STOUR, a river which riſes in Shropſhire, and running through Staffordſhire and Worceſterſhire, falls into the Severn at Stourport, above Hartlebury Caſtle. Its courſe is about 20 miles, and it has on it, in that ſpace, upwards of 30 ſlitting-mills, forges, corn-mills, &c.

It is 22 miles N. of Worceſter, and 124 NW. of London.

STOURBRIDGE, or STURBICH, the name of a common field, extending between Cheſterton and Cambridge, near the little brook Sture, for about half a mile ſquare, is noted for its fair, which is kept annually on September 19th, and continues a fortnight. It is ſurpaſſed by few fairs in Great Britain, or even in Europe, for traffic, though of late it is much leſſened. The booths are placed in rows, like ſtreets, by the name of which they are called, as Cheapſide, &c. and are filled with all ſorts of trades. The Duddery, an area of 80 or 100 yards ſquare, reſembles Blackwell-Hall. Large commiſſions are negociated here, for all parts of England, in cheeſe, woollen goods, wool, leather, hops, upholſterers and ironmongers' ware, &c. &c. Sometimes 50 hackney coaches from London, ply morning and night, to and from Cambridge, as well as all the towns round, and the very barns and ſtables are turned into inns, for the accommodation of the poorer people. After the wholeſale buſineſs is over, the country gentry generally flock in, laying out their money in ſtage-plays, taverns, muſic-houſes, toys, puppet-ſhows, &c. and the whole concludes with a day for the ſale of horſes. This fair is under the juriſdiction of the University of Cambridge.

STROMBERG, a town of Munster; and a town in the palatinate of the Rhine.

STROMBOLO, or STRONGOLI, one of the Lipari Islands, anciently STRONGYLE, about 12 miles in circumference. It consists of one large mountain, on which is a volcano, which rises in a conical form, to the height of above 500 fathoms. On the east side, it has three or four little craters ranged near each other, not at the summit, but on the declivity, nearly at two-thirds of its height. The common chimney is also on the declivity, although always in the centre of the whole base. It is inhabited, notwithstanding its fires; but care is taken by its few inhabitants (who are represented as unsocial in their manners) to avoid the proximity of the crater, which is yet much to be feared. "I was assured," says M. De Luc, "by an Englishman, who, like me, had the curiosity to visit these isles, that the fine weather having invited him and his company to land at Strombolo, they ascended a volcano, whose craters at that time threw out nothing; but that while they were attentively viewing them, unapprehensive of any danger, they were suddenly saluted by such a furious discharge, as to be obliged to retreat with precipitation, and not without one of the company being wounded by a piece of the scoria. Of all the volcanoes recorded in history, Strombolo seems to be the only one that burns without ceasing. Etna and Vesuvius often lie quiet for many months, and even years, without the least appearance of fire; but Strombolo is ever at work, and, for ages past, has been been looked upon as the great light-house of these seas. The island is, notwithstanding, fertile, and produces a great deal of cotton. Lat. 38. 50. N. lon. 15. 45. E.

STROMNESS, a town on the SW. coast of the island of Orkney, or Pomona, with an excellent harbour for small vessels. It contains about 220 houses, and 1344 inhabitants. It is 10 miles W. of Kirk-wall.

STROMOE, one of the Faroer islands in the North Sea; the largest being about 30 miles in length, and 10 in breadth.

STROMSOE, a town of Aggerhuys, in Norway, 18 miles SW. of Christiana.

STRONGILO, a small island in the Grecian Archipelago, 6 miles SW. of Paros.

STRONGOLI, a town of Calabria Citra, containing 4 churches. It is seated on a very high rock, surrounded by others, 8 miles from the sea, and 47 E. of Cozenza.

STRONSA, one of the Orkney Isles, about 6 miles long, and almost as broad, so indented with bays, that there is no part of the island above one mile distant from the sea. This, with the island of Papa, the extent of which, round the shores, is about 5 miles, separated from Stronsa by a narrow sound, over which two men can row in a small boat in five minutes, and, with the holms, or pasture islands, comprehends what is termed the parish of Stronsa. The sandy beaches, the skerries (flat rocks, over which the sea constantly flows and ebbs) and the shores of the nesses, or promontories, produce great quantities of tang, or sea-weed, fit for the kelp manufacture. This seaweed is the chief and almost the only manure. The water is deep, nigh the shore, and the rocks abrupt. The number of souls is about 887. The island of Stronsa has two commodious harbours or roadsteads, safe for shipping at all seasons and in all weathers, viz. Ling, a sound on the W. side, and Papa Sound on the NE. side, sheltered by the island of Papa Stronsa. There are also other bays on the E. SW. and NW. sides, in which vessels may safely ride at anchor, if the wind does not blow too strong on shore. Lat. 58. 59. N.

Stroud, Devonshire, near Modbury.

* STROUD, a flourishing town of Gloucestershire, situated on a gentle ascent, at the foot of which runs the Frome, here called Stroud Water, a small stream, which is very clear, and particularly celebrated as a menstruum for dying scarlet broad cloth, and all other grain colours. On this account the manufacture of white cloth was established here, and many clothiers, who live on the banks of this river, for near 20 miles together, have erected many fulling mills on it; some of whom are computed to make 3000 cloths a year to their own share. As this rivulet is in itself considerable, a navigable canal accompanies its progress to the Severn, into which it runs about 5 miles below Gloucester. This canal has been lately extended to join the Thames at Lechlade. See THAMES. Stroud is 11 miles SE. of Gloucester, and 103 W. by N. of London. Market on Friday.

Stroud, a village of Kent, adjoining to Rochester, from which it is only parted by the river Medway. Stroud, Surry, NW. of St. Ann's Hill. Stroud-End, Gloucesters. in Painswick parish. Stroud-Green, Middlesex, in Hornsey parish. Stroud-Green, Surry, NE. of Croydon. Strouway, a river in Monmouthshire. Straxton, Lincolnshire, near Grantham. Strubby, Lincoln. between Saltfleetbay and Alford. Strumpsbarw, Norfolk, S. of Blowfield. Struton, Surry, near Croydon. Stubbington, Surry, near Farnham. Stubby Lane, Staffordshire, S. of Marchington.

STUBEN, a town of Hungary, with hot-baths, and mines of copper and silver in the neighbourhood, 8 miles N. of Cremnitz.

Stubham Lodge, Yorks. near Ilkley. Stubhampton, Dorsetshire, near Eastbury. Stubley, Derbys. near Dronfield. Stubley, Lancas. NE. of Rochdale. Stubton Heath, 4 miles from Lincoln Heath. Stuckley, Bucks, between Winslow and Leighton. Studdy, Norfolk, near Holt. Studham, Bedford. near Market Street. Studham, Herts, adjoining Kensworth. Studholm, Cumb. in Kirbanton parish. Studland, Dorsetshire, S. of Pool Bay, in the extremity of the NE. part of the isle of Purbeck. On the common are many barrows, some of them large and oblong, but generally round. The most remarkable is Agglestone, or Stone Barrow, the bottom of which takes up half an acre and 12 perches of ground, the diameter on the top is 60 feet, and its perpendicular height 90 feet. It is supposed to have been a rock-idol of the ancient Britons, of the same kind as the Wring Cheese, in Cornwall. It is 18 feet high, 60 in girth at the bottom, 80 in the middle, 90 near the top, and is supposed to weigh 400 tons. Studland Bay, Dorset. E. of Studland, is reckoned a safe harbour to anchor in, for any ship that does not require above 14 feet. Studley, Bucks, in Ockley parish; but part of it is in Oxfordshire.

fordshire. Studley, Devonshire, NW. of Tiverton. Studley, Oxfordshire, NE. of Wood Eaton. Studley, Warwickshire, on the Arrow, SE. of Ipsley. Studley, Wilts, near Calne. Studey, Yorkshire, a mile from Rippon. Stukeley, Great and Little, Huntingdon, on the Ermine Street, NW. of Huntingdon. It was anciently called Stivecle, or Stiff Clay, from the nature of the soil. Stukeley, or Stivicle, Bucks, near Monks Risborough. Its church was built about the reign of Henry II. The solidity of this building, with its circular arches, and zigzag ornaments, evidently mark its great antiquity. Stukefold, Lincolnshire, NW. of Tattershall Chace.

STULINGEN, a town, capital of a landgraviate of Suabia, subject to the prince of Furstenburg.

STULWISSENBERG, a strong but decayed town of Lower Hungary, 24 miles SW. of Buda.

Sturby, Yorkshire, near Flamborough. Sturmer, Essex, near Haverill, in Suffolk.

STURMINSTER, or STOURMINSTER-NEWTON, a mean town in Dorsetshire, seated on the river Stour, 20 miles NNE. of Dorchester, and 111 W. by S. of London. A small market on Thursday.

Sturminster Marshal, on the Stour, 5 miles E. of Sturminster. Sturry, Kent, by the river Stour, 2 miles NE. of Canterbury. Sturston, Derby, NE. of Ashborn. Sturston, Norfolk, 4 miles SW. of Watton. Sturston, Suffolk, N. of Yaxley. Sturtlow, Huntingd. in Bugden parish. Sturtmarsh, Kent, in Sheppey Isle. Sturton, Lancashire, N. of Garstang. Sturton, Notts, SW. of Gainsborough. Sturton, or Stourton, Wilts. W. of Mere, at the source of the Stour. Sturton and Sturton Castle, Staffordshire, on the river Stour. Sturton, Yorks, SW. of Otley. Stourton, Yorks, W. of Skipton. Sturton, Great, Lincolnshire, NW. of Horncastle. Stusfall Castle, Kent, in Linne parish.

STUTGARD, a city of Suabia, capital of the duchy of Wirtemberg. The streets are narrow in the town, and the houses generally of wood; but, there are fine houses, and wide, straight streets, in one of the suburbs. Here are the duke's palace; an orphan house, with rich cabinets of curiosities, and handsome gardens; an academy of painting, sculpture, and architecture, established in 1701; and manufactures of stuffs, silk stockings, and ribbons. It is seated on the Nasenbech, near the river Neckar, 40 miles NW. of Ulm.

Stuttesbury, Northamptonshire, NW.

of Brackley. Stutton, Lincolnsh. NE. of Louth. Stutton, Suff. near Brantham.

SUABIA, a circle of Germany, bounded on the N. by the circle of Franconia, and the palatinate of the Rhine, on the W. by the circle of the Lower Rhine and Alsace; on the S. by Swisserland, and the Tyrol; and on the E. by Bavaria. It comprehends the duchies of Wirtemberg, the margraviate of Baden, the principalities of Hoven Zollern, Oettingen, and Mindelheim; the bishoprics of Augsburg, Constance, and Coire, with several abbeys and free towns. The duke of Wertemberg is director.

SUABRIA, AUSTRIAN, is composed of the ancient, hereditary estates of the house of Habsburg, and the remains which have fallen to Austria, since it has been elected to the empire. These estates are composed of Burgau, Nellenburg, the prefectorate of Suabia, Hohenburg, the Ortenau, Brisgau, and some towns and convents.

SUANA. See SOANA.

SUANES, SUANI, or SUANETI, a poor and simple people of Asia, who inhabit one of the four divisions of the kingdom of Imeritia. They subsist by raising cattle, and by a little agriculture. Major Rennel supposes them to be the descendants of a people of the same name and country, who are mentioned by Strabo. They were, in his time, a formidable and numerous nation, governed by a king, with a national council of 300 persons. They are said to have collected a considerable quantity of gold, by means of fleeces, which they sunk in their torrents; a practice from which Strabo derives the fable of the Golden Fleece. It is reported, that this mode of collecting gold still subsisted, when the Turks were in possession of Mingrelia, and that the produce of a river, called the Zgenis skald, was farmed by certain Jews of Constantinople.

SUAQUEM, a small island in the Red Sea, near the coast of Nubia, with a seaport of the same name, anciently called THEON SOTER. The island is situated in a bay, the entrance of which is narrow, and well secured from every wind, with five, six, and seven fathoms water. A Turkish bashaw resides here. Lat. 19. 20. N.

Stubbarton, Hampshire, near Bishop's Waltham.

SUBBIAGO, a town in the Campagna-di Roma, seated on the river Teverone, 33 miles E. of Rome.

SUBTRAY MEZIERE EN BRENNÉ, a town in the dept. of the Indre, 9 miles S. of Chatillon.

SUCCADANA, a town of the island of Borneo, capital of a kingdom of the same name. The chief products of the country are camphor and diamonds. Lat. 1. S. lon. 109. 30. E.

Suckholm, Notts. near Wirkfop. Suckle-bridge, Somers. Suckley, SW. of Worcester. Sudborn, Suff. by Orford. Sudborough, Northamp. NW. of Thrapston. Sudbroke, NE. of Lincoln. Sudbroke, Monm. near Caldicot. Sudbroke, Surry, 2 miles from Kingston. Sudbury, Berks. near Windsor. Sudbury, Derbys. 6 miles from Uttoxeter. Sudbury, Devon. near Sudmouth. Sudbury, and its Green, Middlesex, at the foot of Harrow-Hill. Sudbury, Gloucester. in Tiddenham parish.

* SUDBURY, an ancient town of Suffolk, containing 3 large, handsome churches. Its other buildings are pretty good, but the streets are remarkably dirty in bad weather. It was one of the first seats of the Flemings, who were brought over by Edward III. to teach the English the art of manufacturing their own wool. It became, in consequence, very populous and opulent. Its trade is now diverted, in great part, into other channels; however, many kinds of thin stuffs are still made here, such as says, perpetuanas, hunting for ships' colours, burial crapes, &c. The river was made navigable from this place to Maningtree many years ago. It is seated on the N. side of the river Stour, by which it is almost surrounded, and over which it has a handsome bridge leading into Essex, 14 miles SSE. of St. Edmundsbury, and 56 NE. of London. Market on Saturday.

Sudbury Tenements, Gloucestershire, in Winchcomb parish. Sudcote Steel, Yorks. near Hull. Sudden, Dorsetshire, 2 miles S. of Owre Moigne. Suddington, Gloucestershire, near Cirencester.

SUDERMANIA, or SUDERMAN LAND, a province of Sweden, S. of Upland and Westmanland, about 100 miles in length, and 60 in breadth. It is the most populous and best cultivated part of Sweden, having also a fertile soil, with woods, pastures, fine arable lands, lakes well stocked with fish, and mines of divers metals. Nicoping is the capital.

SUDEROE, one of the Ferro Islands, in the Northern Ocean, remarkable for a dangerous whirlpool near it, which is occasioned by a crater, 61 fathoms deep in the centre, and between 50 and 55 at the sides. The danger at most times is great, especially in storms, when ships are irresistibly drawn in; the rudder loses its power, and the waves beat as high as the masts, so that an escape is almost miraculous; yet, at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhabitants venture hither in boats, for the sake of fishing.

Sudgrove, or Southgrove, Gloucesters. Sudick, Durham, N. of Monk-Wearmouth.

SUENBORG, a sea-port town of Denmark, in the island of Funen, with manufactures of woollen and linen. Here is the best harbour in the island. It is 22 miles SSE. of Odensee. Lat. 55. 9. N. lon. 10. 37. E.

Sudley, Gloucestershire, 1 miles S. of Winchcomb. Sudmead, near Gloucester.

SUEZ, anciently BERENICE, a town of Egypt, seated at the N. end of the W. gulf of the Red sea, called the Gulf of Suez, with a harbour. This gulf is separated from the Mediterranean by an isthmus, 120 miles over, which joins Asia to Africa. The town is without water, which comes from the wells of Naba, (carried by Arabians) on the other side of the gulf, and without almost all the other necessaries of life. Fish is the only article of provisions plentiful here. It is very much crowded with people, when the Turkish galleys arrive there. However, at other times, it is very thinly inhabited, and the harbour is too shallow to admit ships of great burden. The commerce of Suez with Cairo is carried on only by means of caravans, but several vessels sail annually between this port and Jidda. It is situated in a sandy country, the ground around being all one bed of rock, slightly covered with sand, (plants, trees, gardens, and fields being entirely unknown) 60 miles ESE. of Cairo. Lat. 30. 2. N. lon. 32. 45. E.

SUFFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, 8 miles S. of Springfield.

Suffield, Norf. NW. of North Walsham. Suffield, Yorkshire, NW of Scarborough.

SUFFOLK, an English county, bounded on the W. by Cambridgeshire, on the N. by Norfolk, on the S. by Essex, and on the E. by the German Ocean. It extends 58 miles from E. to W. and 28 from N. to S. It is divided into 22 hundreds, which contain 31 towns, 575 parishes, 1550 villages, about 34,042 houses, and 206,000 inhabitants. The air is very clear and healthy, even near the sea-coast. The soil is of various qualities, but the country in general level. That near the shore is sandy and full of heaths, yet abounds in rye, pease, turnips carrots, rots, and hemp, with numerous flocks of sheep. Copious beds of petrified shells, called shell-marl, which are found in various parts between Woodbridge and Orford, have for many years been made use of for improving light sand, and have liberally rewarded the agricultural labours in those parts. High-Suffolk, or the Woodlands, which is the inland part of the county, has a rich, deep clay and marl, that yields good pasture-grounds, on which feed abundance of cattle. That part which lies on the confines of Essex and Cambridgeshire, affords also excellent pasture; and about Bury St. Edmunds, and to the N. and NW. it is fruitful in corn, except towards Newmarket. Its principal produce is butter and cheese; but as the latter is only supplementary to the former, it has gained, almost proverbially, the character of the worst in England. Grain of all sorts, beans, and hemp, are grown in this county, and a few hops not far from Sudbury. They have an excellent breed of draught horses: the cows are in great repute for the quantity of milk they give (they are not of a large size, and universally without horns;) the farmers are skilful; and on the whole, this county, with respect to agriculture, is one of the most thriving in England. The principal rivers are the Stour, the Waveney, Little Ouse, Lark, Deben, Blythe, Alde, and Orwell, in one part of it called the Gipping. Ipswich is the principal town, but the assizes are held at Bury St. Edmund's.

SUFFOLK, a county of Massachusetts, a county of New York and a town of Virginia.

Sufton, E. of Hereford.

SUGARLOAF-HILL, GREAT and LITTLE, two high conical mountains, in Wicklow, Leinster. They are situated near Bray, between Wicklow and Dublin, about 12 miles from each of these ports.

SUGELMESSA, or SIGELMESSA, a town of Morocco, capital of a district about 100 miles in length. It abounds in corn, dates, and other fruits; and has mines of iron, lead, and antimony. It is 72 miles NNE. of Tafilet.

Sugnel, Great and Little, Stafford. NW. of Eccleshall. Sugwas, near Hereford.

SUHLA, a town of Henneburg, in Franconia, with manufactures of Steel, fustians, and ticks. It is situated on the river Havel, 7 miles SE. of Smalkalden.

SUINOE, one of the Ferro or Faroer islands, in the N. Sea.

SUIFFE, a town in the dept. of the Marne, situated on a river of the same name, (which afterwards runs into the Aisne) 12 miles N. of Chalons sur Marne.

SUIR, a large river of Munster, which rises in Tipperary, is navigable for barges, from Clonmel to the sea; and for vessels of considerable burden, from Carrick on Suir. At Waterford it forms a deep and spacious harbour, and below that city it unites with the Nore, and passes on to the sea, 8 miles below Waterford, forming a commodious haven, deep enough for the largest vessels.

Sudbury, Bucks, E. of Winslow. Sulby, Northampton. NW. of Naseby. Sulford, Northampton. near Haddon. Sulgrave, Northampton. near Weedon, in a low, clayey soil; near it is Barrow Hill, on which is a tumulus, and from thence may be seen 9 counties, viz. Northampton, Warwick, Worcester, Oxford, Gloucester, Berks, Bucks, Bedford, and Hertfordshire, and in very clear weather, part of Hampshire and Wiltshire. Sulham, Berkshire, 4 miles W. of Reading. Sulhamsted Abbots, Berks, on the Kennet, opposite Inglefield.

SULLANE, a river of Cork, in Munster, which runs into the Lee, 15 miles W. of Cork.

Sullemacha, Hertfordshire, near Elstree.

SULLY, a town in the dept. of Soane and Loire, 7 miles ENE. of Autun; and a town in the dept. of Loiret, situated on the Loire, 21 miles SE. of Orleans.

SULMONA, anciently SULMO, the birth-place of the poet Ovid, a town of Abruzzo Citra, containing 11 churches, and 12 convents.

SULPHUR ISLAND, in the N. Pacific Ocean, about 5 miles long, in a NNE. and SSW. direction. A considerable part of it is conjectured to be sulphur, both from its appearance to the eye, and the strong sulphuric smell which it emits. The surface exhibits various colours, and when seen from the WSW. it presents an evident volcanic crater. It was discovered by Captain Gore, in 1797. Lat. 24. 48. N. lon. 141. 12. E.

SULTANIA, a town in Irac-Agemi, built in the 13th century, on the ruins of the ancient Tigranocerta. Many kings of Persia made it their residence, and it was at one time one of the largest cities of Asia. The streets are now deserted, and the inhabitants scarcely amount to 6000. It is 250 miles NNW. of Ispahan.

Sulton, Suffex, N. of Arundel Forest.

SULTSBACH, a town in the palatinate of Bavaria, subject to the duke of Newburg Newburg Sultzbach. It is 10 miles NW. of Amberg. Also a town in the dept. of the Upper Rhine, 6 miles SW. of Colmar.

SULTZBURG, a town of Baden Dourlach, celebrated for its wine.

SUMATRA, an island of Asia, the most western of the Sunda Islands, about 720 miles in length, and 180 in its greatest breadth. On the SE. it is separated from Java by the Straits of Sunda. Its general direction is nearly NW. and SE. The equator divides it into almost equal parts, the one extremity being in 5. 33. N. and the other in 5. 50. S. lat. No account had been given of this island, by any Englishman, till the year 1778, when Mr. Charles Miller published an account of the manners of a particular district, in the 68th volume of the Philosophical Transactions. These were the Bettas, a people who live in the interior parts, called the Cassia country. They differ from all the other inhabitants in language, manners, and customs. They eat the prisoners whom they take in war, though only in terrorem, and not as common food, and hang up their skulls as trophies in their houses. From this country, the greatest part of the cassia that is sent to Europe is procured. It abounds also with the camphire trees, which constitute the common timber in use; and in these trees the camphire is found native, in a concrete form. It is remarkable, that in this state it is sold to the Chinese, at the price of 250l. or 300l. per cwt. but these dexterous artists contrive to furnish the Europeans with it, at about a quarter of that price. In 1783, Mr. Marsden, who had been secretary to the president and council of Fort Marlborough, published a history of Sumatra, with very copious particulars of the island. He represents it as surpassed by few in the beautiful indulgencies of nature. A chain of high mountains, in some of which are volcanoes, run through their whole extent; their altitude, though great, is not sufficient to occasion their being covered with snow during any part of the year. Between these ridges are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. In these, the air is cool; and, from this advantage, they are esteemed the most eligible portion of the country, are the best inhabited, and the most cleared from woods, which elsewhere, in general, throughout Sumatra, cover both hills and valleys with an eternal shade. Here too are found many large lakes, that facilitate much the communication between the different parts. The heat of the air is far from being so intense as might be expected from a country occupying the middle of the torrid zone; and it is more temperate than many regions without the tropics, the thermometer, at the most sultry hour, about two in the afternoon, generally fluctuating between 82 and 85 degrees. Mr. Marsden divides the inhabitants into Malays, Achaneses, Battas, Lampoons, and Rejangs; and he takes the latter as the standard of description, with respect to the persons, manners, and customs of the inhabitants. They are rather below the middle stature; their bulk in proportion; their limbs, for the most part slight, and particularly small at the wrists and ancles; and, upon the whole, they are accounted gracefully formed. Their hair is strong, and of a shining black. The men are beardless; great pains being taken to render them so, when boys, by rubbing their chins with a kind of quick lime. Their complexion is properly yellow, wanting the red tinge that constitutes a copper or tawney colour. They are, in general, lighter than the Mestees, or half-breed, of the rest of India; those of the wealthier class, who are not exposed to the rays of the sun, and particularly their women, approaching to a degree of fairness. Some of the inhabitants of the hilly parts are observed to have the swelled neck, or goiter; but they attempt no remedy for it, as these wens are consistent with the highest health. The rites of marriage among the Sumatrans, consist simply in joining the hands of the parties, and pronouncing them man and wife, without much ceremony, excepting the entertainment which is given upon the occasion. But little apparent courtship precedes their marriages. Their manners do not admit of it; the young people of each sex being carefully kept asunder, and the girls being seldom trusted from under the wing of their mothers. The opportunities which the young people have of seeing and conversing with each other, are at the public festivals. On these occasions, the persons who are unmarried meet together, and dance and sing in company. The men, when determined in their regards, generally employ an old woman as their agent, by whom they make known their sentiments, and send presents to the female of their choice. The parents then interfere, and the preliminaries being settled, a feast takes place. At these festivals, a goat, a buffalo, or several, according to the rank of the parties, are killed to entertain, not only the relations and invited guests, but all the inhabitants of the neighbouring country, who chuse to repair to them. The greater the concourse, the more is the credit of the host, who is, generally on these occasions, the father of the girl. The customs of the Sumatrans permit their having as many wives as they can purchase, or afford to maintain; but it is extremely rare, that an instance occurs of their having more than one, and that only among a few of the chiefs. The children are nursed but little, not confined by any swathing or bandages; and being suffered to roll about the floor, soon learn to walk and shift for themselves. When cradles are used, they swing suspended from the ceilings of the rooms. The Sumatrans are fond of the barbarous diversion of cock-fighting, taking great pains in rearing and feeding cocks, and never matching the same colours; but a grey against a pile, a yellow against a red, and the like. It rarely happens that both cocks survive the combat. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, numerous elephants of a superior size, rhinoceroses, bears monkeys, and even cats. The tigers prove to the inhabitants, both in their journeys, and even their domestic occupations, most destructive enemies. The number of people annually slain by these rapacious tyrants of the woods, is almost incredible. Whole villages have been depopulated by them. Yet from a superstitious prejudice, it is with difficulty they are prevailed upon, by a large reward which the India Company offers, to use methods of destroying them, till they have sustained some particular injury in their own family or kindred. Their traps, of which they can make variety, are very ingeniously contrived. Sometimes they are in the nature of strong cages, with falling doors, into which the beast is enticed by a goat or dog inclosed as a bait; sometimes they manage that a large timber shall fall in a grove, across his back; sometimes he is noosed about the loins with strong rattans; sometimes he is led to ascend a plank, nearly balanced, which turning when he is past the centre, lets him fall upon sharp stakes prepared below. Instances have occurred of a tiger being caught by one of the former modes, which had many marks in his body of the partial success of this last expedient. The size and strength of the species which prevails on this island is prodigious. They are said to break, with a stroke of their fore paw, the leg of a horse or a buffalo; and the largest prey they kill is without difficulty dragged into the woods by them. This they usually perform on the second night, being supposed, on the first, to gratify themselves with sucking the blood only. Time is by this delay afforded to prepare for their destruction; and to the methods already enumerated, beside shooting them, may be added that of placing a vessel of water, strongly impregnated with arsenic, near the carcass. The tiger having satiated itself with the flesh, is prompted to alluage his thirst with the tempting liquor at hand, and perishes in the indulgence. Their chief sustenance is most probably the monkeys with which the woods abound. They are described as alluring them to their fate, by a fascinating power, similar to what has been supposed of the snake; and, says Mr. Marsden, "I am not incredulous enough to treat the idea with contempt, having myself observed that when an alligator or crocodile, in a river, comes under an overhanging bough of a tree, the monkeys, in a state of alarm and distraction, crowd to the extremity, and chattering and trembling, approach nearer and nearer to the amphibious monster that awaits to devour them as they drop, which their fright renders almost unavoidable." These alligators likewise occasion the loss of many inhabitants frequently destroying the people as they bathe in the river, according to their regular custom, and which the perpetual evidence of the risk attending it, cannot deter them from. A superstitious idea of their sanctity, also, preserves them from molestation, although with a hook of sufficient strength, they may be taken without much difficulty. The other animals of Sumatra are buffaloes, civet cats, a small but numerous kind of horses, goats, hogs, which run wild in the mountains, deer, few hares, but plenty of other game, bullocks, and hog-deer. This last is an animal somewhat larger than a rabbit, the head resembling that of a hog, and its shanks and feet like those of the deer. The sheep which have been hitherto carried to the island, decay and come to nothing. The bezoar-stone found on this animal has been valued at ten times its weight in gold; it is of a dark brown colour, smooth on the outside, and the coat being taken off, it appears still darker with strings running underneath the coat; it will swim on the top of the water. If it be infused in any liquid, it makes it extremely bitter; the virtues usually attributed to this stone are cleansing the stomach, creating an appetite, and sweetening the blood. Of birds they have a greater greater variety than of beasts. The coo-ow, or Sumatran pheasant, is a bird of uncommon beauty. They have flocks of prodigious size, parrots, dunghill fowls, and ducks, (the eggs of which are in the greatest plenty, and form a considerable article of commerce) the largest cocks in the world, wood-pigeons, doves, and a great variety of small birds different from ours, and distinguished by the beauty of their colours. Of their reptiles, they have serpents, lizards, flying-lizards, and cameleons. The island swarms with insects, and their varieties are no less extraordinary than their numbers. The principal seeds sown are rice and millet. They have sugar-canes, beans, peas, radishes, yams, potatoes, pumpkins, and several kinds of pot herbs unknown to Europe; and here are found most of the fruits to be met in other parts of the E. Indies, in the greatest perfection. Indigo, Brazil-wood, two species of the bread-fruit tree, the best pepper in the E. Indies, except that of Cochin China, and which forms the most important article of commerce here, 20 vessels being annually loaded with this spice; benjamin, coffee, and cotton, are likewise the produce of this island. Here also is the cabbage tree and silk cotton tree; and the forest contains a great variety of valuable species of wood, as ebony, pine, sandal, eagle, or aloes, teak, manchineel, iron-wood, the banyan-tree, and the most precious balsams and odoriferous gums. Gold, silver, tin, iron, copper, lead, agaric, sapphires, sulphur, arsenic, and saltpetre, are also produced at Sumatra. Bees' wax is a commodity of great importance here; and they have likewise edible birds'-nests. It is well watered by a great number of rivers, in which there is plenty of fish. The English and Dutch have factories on this island; the principal one of the former being Fort Marlborough, on the SW. coast. Sumatra is divided into many petty kingdoms. The original natives of Sumatra are Pagans; but it is to be observed, that when the Sumatrans, or any of the natives of the eastern islands, learn to read the Arabic character, and submit to circumcision, they are said to become Malays; the term Malay being understood to mean Mussulman.

SUMBI, a province of Angola, in Africa, lying in about 11 deg. S. lat. and but little known.

SUMBRIDGE, Devonshire, near Barnstaple. SUMMERBY, Leicesters. near Cold-Orton. SUMMER COURT, Cornwall.

SUMMER-HILL, a town of Meath, in Leinster, 20 miles from Dublin.

SUMMERLEY, Suffex, S. of Burdham. SUMMERS, Bedf. E. of Luton. SUMMER-TON, Oxf. on the Charwell, near Fritwell. SUMMERTON, Suffolk.

SUMNER, a county of N. Carolina.

SUNART, a district of Argyleshire, remarkable for numerous veins of lead, which, however, are not very productive.

SUNART LOCH, an inlet of the sea, in Argyleshire, which separates the island of Mull from the district of Morven.

SUBBINGIN, Westmorl. S. of Crosby-Raveniworth, at the foot of Beacon Hill. At a little distance is Sunbiggin Tarn, or Lake, which abounds with eels, and in which are bred vast quantities of a red trout, like char. The adjoining moors abound with grouse and moor-game. SUNBRICK, Lancashire, W. of Ken Sands. SUNBURY, Middlesex, on the Thames, between Hampton Court and Shepperton.

SUNBURY, a town of Georgia, in N. America, with a safe and commodious harbour, 25 miles SSW. of Savannah. Several small islands intervening, partly obstruct a direct view of the ocean; and interlocking with each other, render the passage to sea winding, but not difficult. It is a pleasant, healthy town, and is the resort of the planters from the adjacent places of Midway and Newport, during the sickly months. Also a town of Pennsylvania, 92 miles NW. of Philadelphia.

SUNDA ISLANDS, in the Indian Ocean, near the Straits of Sunda. The chief of them are Borneo, Java, and Sumatra.

SUNDA, STRAITS OF, a strait or passage in the Eastern Indian Ocean, between the islands of Sumatra and Java.

SUNDAL, a town of Drontheim, in Norway, situated on the Driva, 66 miles SSW. of Drontheim.

SUNDERBUNDS, a tract of country in Hindoostan, consisting of that part of the Delta of the Ganges, in the S. part of Bengal, which borders on the sea. It is composed of a labyrinth of rivers and creeks, all of which are salt, except those that immediately communicate with the principal arm of the Ganges. In extent it is about equal to the principality of Wales: "It is so completely enveloped in woods, and infested with tigers," says Major Rennell, "that if any attempts have ever been made to clear it (as is reported) they have hitherto miscarried." Here salt, in quantities equal to the whole consumption of Bengal and its dependencies, pendencies, is made and transported with equal facility; and here also is found an almost inexhaustible store of timber for boat-building. The distance to which the Ganges expands its various branches, at its junction with the sea, is about 200 miles.

SUNDERBURG, a sea-port of the Isle of Alsen, in Denmark. It is seated on a strait, called Sunderburg Sound, 12 miles E. of Flensburg.

SUNDEROO, a small island and sea-port of Hindoostan, on the Concan coast, about 36 miles NNW. of Goa. It was reduced by Commodore James, in 1756.

SUNDERLAND, a large, populous, thriving, and well-built sea-port town in the county of Durham, containing a handsome church, a large and elegant chapel of ease, a neat and large chapel for the Methodists, five Dissenters' meeting-houses, an hospital for old seamen or their widows, another for eight poor women, a dispensary, and other public buildings. Its inhabitants are estimated at 30,000. Coal is the staple commodity, of which about 280,000 chaldrons, Newcastle measure, are exported annually. This coal is brought down the Wear, from numerous pits near its banks. In one year, (1791) not less than 4905 vessels cleared coastways, and 703 oversea; in all 5608. This town, together with that of Bishop Wearmouth, bordering on its western extremity, and to which it is immediately attached, comprehend a space of about a mile and a half in length, and a quarter of a mile in breadth. The main street, and particularly the central part of it, rising in a considerable ascent, which connects the two towns, is spacious and tolerably handsome, but most of the other streets, which branch off from it, are narrow and dirty. Glass bottles and salt are manufactured here, and there is an exportation of lime, grindstones, copers, pottery-ware, and other articles. For a long time the navigation of this port was considerably impeded, from the want of a sufficient depth of water, to admit ships of any considerable burden to put to sea with their whole lading; to remedy which, such vessels were obliged to take part of their cargo in the open road; by which the keel-men, who bring down the coals, were often exposed, in sudden storms, to danger, by venturing out to sea with the remainder of their lading; to obviate which inconvenience, and the danger to which the vessels are there often exposed, many of the largest ships, belonging to this port were obliged to take in their lading at Shields. But this inconvenience is now very much remedied, by recent improvements in the harbour, and particularly the addition of a north pier, by which the ebbing tide gains greater force to scour the sand which forms a bar at the entrance of the harbour; the tide now flows 16 feet, and admits vessels of 300 and 400 tons burden. A bridge has been lately erected across the river Wear, thought to be the greatest curiosity of its kind in the world. It is not less remarkable for its prodigious height and extreme span, than for the peculiarity of its construction, being formed of small segments of cast iron, joined in such a manner as to form a complete arch, the span of which is 236 feet, and will admit of vessels sailing under it of 400 tons burden, by only striking their top-gallant masts. The seamen of this port are reckoned among the colliers, the best in the kingdom. Sunderland is a member of Newcastle, and is situated on the S. side of the river Wear, (by which, at high water, it is almost surrounded) 13 miles NE. of Durham, and 204 N. by W. of London.

SUNDERLAND, a town of Massachusetts, situated on the E. side of the Connecticut, opposite Deerfield, and 69 miles W. of Boston.

Sunderland, Cumberl. 4 miles NE. of Cockermouth. Sunderland, Durham, by Branspeth Castle. Sunderland, Northumberland, by the sea, N. of Dunstaburgh Castle. Sunderland, High, Yorks. near Halifax. Sunderland Point, Lancashire, on the coast, SW. of Lancaster. Sunderland Wick, Yorks. near Great and Little Driffield.

SUNDGAW, formerly a district of Germany, on the left side of the Rhine, but now forming the southern part of the dept. of Lower Rhine.

SUNDI, a province of Africa, in Congo, which lies along the river Zaire. Its rivers render it extremely fertile, and in the mountains are mines of several metals. The capital is of the same name. Lat. 4. 50. S. lon. 17. 55. E.

Sundon, Upper and Lower, Bedfordsh. SW. of Stretley. Sundridge, Kent, 2 miles and a half NE. of Westram. Sundridge, Kent, in Bromley parish.

SUNDSWALL, a sea-port of Medelpadia, Sweden. Lat. 62. 47. N. lon. 17. 5. E.

Sungar, Warw. S. of Claverdon. Sungar, Wilts, near Clarendon. Sunk Island, Yorks. in the Humber, about two miles long, and one and a half broad. It is about about 10 miles NW. of Spurn Head, and 14 SE. of Hull. Sunning, Berks, on the Thames, 2 miles NE. of Reading. At the E. end of the church, Leland says, there stood a chapel, formerly much resorted to in pilgrimage, for the cure of madness. According to the same author, 9 bishops sat here, till Hermanus, the last of them, translated the see to Sarum. Sunning-Eye, Oxf. near Sunning. Sunning-Hill, Berks, in Windsor Forest, near Bagshot: its medicinal wells are efficacious in paralytic cases. Sunning-Well, Berks, SE. of Oxford and Basil's Leigh.

SUPERIOR, so called from its magnitude, the largest lake of North America, and supposed to be the largest body of fresh water on the globe. It may be justly termed the Caspian Sea of America, being, according to the French charts, not less than 1500 miles in circumference. There are many islands in this lake, two of them are very large, especially Isle Royale, which is computed to be 100 miles long, and in some places 40 broad. The surrounding coast is rocky and uneven. Upwards of 80 rivers enter this lake, some of which are of considerable size. It abounds with fish, particularly trout and turgeon; the former generally weighing from 12 to 50 pounds. Storms affect this lake as much as they do the Atlantic Ocean. It discharges its waters from the SE. corner, through the Straits of St. Marie, into Lake Huron.

SUPINO, a town of Moliso, in Naples. SUR. See SOUR.

SURAT, a sea-port of Hindoostan, encompassed on the land side with two brick walls, which divide it into the Inner and the Outer Town. Within the inner walls stand the citadel, on the shore of the river, divided by trenches from the town. The Europeans residing here, estimate the population of the city at a million of inhabitants, but M. Niebuhr thinks this calculation above the truth by, at least, two thirds. The larger houses are flat roofed here, as through the rest of the East, with courts before them, but the houses of the common people are mostly high-roofed. Its trade is very considerable, it being the great store-house of the most precious productions of India; and in the city are as many different professions of religion as in Amsterdam; for there are Mahometans of several sects, and many sorts of Gentoos. Mr. Niebuhr says, that the Mahometans at Surat are not, by far, so strict as they are in Arabia, or in other Turkish countries, nor are the distinctions of tribes among the Hindoos who reside here, strictly observed. "These Hindoos," he continues, "are a set of industrious, sober people, and of such surprising honesty, that no Europeans have ever had cause to repent the intrusting, even their whole fortune, to the Banians, who being born to trade, are employed here as brokers, as the Jews are in Turkey. The Hindoo women assist their husbands in earning their bread, and keep themselves so clean, that the European women, who come to India, are obliged to follow their example, or run the risk of losing their husband's affections. When a child is born, a Bramin is to declare, by astrological rules, whether the child is come into the world in a lucky hour or not. This done, he hangs a thin string over the shoulder of a boy, who wears this distinctive mark of his nation all his life-time. The Bramins fix the time for the celebration of weddings; and also order and announce the holy-days. Every Banian is obliged, every morning, after washing and bathing himself, to have a kind of seal impressed on his forehead by a Bramin; though this is the office of inferior Bramins only. I saw, one morning, a great number of them sit on the river side, under the castle, where a number of girls and women resorted to bathe, and to say their morning prayers. Every one of them gave the clean clothes, which they intended to wear for that day to one of these priests, and then went into the river. They afterward exchange their wet clothes for the dry ones, publicly on shore, but with such a dexterity, that the most curious observer could see nothing inconsistent with decency. The Bramin, afterward, dipped his thumb into some red colour, and impressed it on the forehead of the women, who reciprocally marked the priest again, though slightly, lest his face should be daubed all over, by the great number of markers. Lastly, the person that is signed, and in this manner consecrated for the day, keeps the colour-box in one hand, says a short prayer, gives the Bramin one or two handfuls of rice, and then, with the wet clothes in the other hand, returns home."—Besides the Mahometans and Gentoos, there are Jews and Christians of various denominations, at Surat. Persons of distinction, both here and through the rest of India, speak and write the Persian language, which has been received at the courts, and the knowledge of which is very useful for business. In trade, however, a corrupt Portuguese is used; and this is in India, what the Lingua Franca is in the Levant. The surrounding country is fertile, except towards the sea, which is sandy and barren. Here is a fine garden, the property of the Dutch East India Company, the aspect of which is rich and charming. Before the English East India Company obtained possession of Bombay, the presidency of their affairs on the coast of Malabar was held at Surat; and they had a factory established there. Even after the presidency was transferred to Bombay, the factory was continued. The Great Mogul had then an officer here, who was styled his admiral, and who received a revenue called the tanka, of the annual value of three lacks of rupees, arising from the rents of adjacent lands, and the taxes levied at Surat. The tyranny of this officer towards the merchants, induced the English East India Company, in 1759, to fit out an armament, which dispossessed the admiral of the castle; and, soon after, the possession of this castle was confirmed to them by the court of Delhi. They obtained, moreover, the appointment to the post of admiral, and were constituted receivers of the tanka, so that the English are, at present, the actual sovereigns of Surat, and engross nearly the whole trade of the city. They keep the nabob of Surat in a state of absolute dependence, allowing him only an income on which he may live suitably to his dignity. The Mahrattas, however, enjoy a third part of the amount of the customs; and one of their officers constantly attends here to receive this tribute. The Indians are, in part, content with their new masters, and the merchants are no longer in danger from the avaricious extortions of the nabobs, yet they complain of the selfish spirit of their new masters. It is situated in a large plain, on the S. bank of the Tapti, about twenty miles from its mouth, on the confines of Guzerat, and 177 N. of Bombay. Lat. 21. 10. N. lon. 72. 48. E.

Surbiton, Surry, near Kingston, in the road to Epsom. Surfleet, Essex, at the mouth of the Coln, NW. of Gunfleet. Surfleet, Lincolnshire, on Boston Dike, near the Wash.

Surgowny, in Armagh, Ulster.

SURGUT, a town of Tobolsk, in Siberia, 284 miles NNE. of Tobolsk.

Suridlington, Lincolnshire, SW. of Market-Raisin.

SURINAM, a country of S. America, in Guiana, bounded on the N. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by the river Marawina, on the S. by a country of Indians, and on the W. by the river Corentyn. It is about 150 miles in length, and 60 in breadth, and abounds in fruits, fish, game, and singular animals of different kinds. The soil is, in general, extremely fertile, particularly in those parts which are cultivated by European industry, producing sugar, cotton, tobacco, indigo, cocoa, gums, wood for dying, &c. The woods are full of monkeys, and there are likewise tigers, with parrots, scorpions, serpents of an amazing size, and a great variety of insects. The rivers abound with alligators, and in Surinam is found that wonderful fish, the torpedo. Besides this, which gives name to the colony, the other principal rivers are, the Corentyn, the Copename, the Seramica, and the Marawina; of these, the Surinam only is navigable; the rest, though very long and broad, are so shallow, and so extremely crowded with rocks and small islands, that they are of little consequence to Europeans; nor are their banks inhabited, except by the Indians, or natives of the country. Into all these rivers are discharged a number of very large creeks, or rivulets, the banks of which are inhabited by Europeans, and cultivated with various plantations, which exhibit the most delightful prospects imaginable to those who travel by water, the universal mode of journeying in this country, as the soil is, in general, ill adapted for the construction of roads, and in some places the woods are absolutely impenetrable. The whites, or Europeans, in Surinam, who reside principally in Paramaribo, the chief town, are computed at about 5000, including the garrison and the negroes, at about 75,000. In 1674, this settlement, which had been partly planted by the English, was ceded to the Dutch by King Charles II. in exchange for the province of New York. Lat. 4. 45. to 6. N. lon. 53. 40. to 56. 25. West.

SURINAM, a river of S. America, which rises in the government of Terra Firma, and after a winding course of about 150 miles, from S. to N. falls into the Atlantic Ocean, in lat. 6. 25. N. and lon. 55. 40. W. This river is navigable for large vessels more than 90 miles up the country.

SURINGIA, or SUISJU, a sea-port of Nippon, in Japan, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle, where the emperors formerly resided. It is 170 miles SSE. of Meaco.

Surby, Nottinghamshire, N. of Blyths. Surlingham, St. Mary's and St. Saviour's, SE.

SE. of Norwich. Surrendon, Kent, NW. of Athford.

SURRY, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Middlesex and a point of Buckinghamshire, on the E. by Kent, on the S. by Suffex, and on the W. by Hampshire and Berks. Its greatest length is about 39 miles, and its breadth 26. It is divided into 13 hundreds, which contain 11 market towns (including Southwark) 140 parishes, 650 villages and hamlets, and about 35 000 houses. It is a healthy, pleasant county, and the value of estates in it has advanced, of late years, beyond any other part of England. The soil is very different in the extreme parts from that in the middle, whence it has been compared to a coarse cloth with a fine border: for the edge of the county on all sides has a rich soil, extremely fruitful in corn and grass, particularly in Holmesdale, and on the N. and W. parts toward the Thames; but it is far otherwise in the heart of the county, where are wide tracts of sandy ground and barren heath, and in some places are long ridges of hills, with warrens of rabbits, and parks for deer. However, we meet here and there with some pleasant spots interspersed in the middle of Surry, and it is not to be doubted that a great deal of the waste ground might, by proper management, be greatly improved. This county produces corn, box wood, walnuts, hops, and fuller's earth; and near Darking grows a wild black cherry, of which a very pleasant wine is made, little inferior to French claret. The manufactures in starch, tobacco, gunpowder, paper, vinegar, calico printing, wax bleaching, &c. are considerable. The principal rivers, beside the Thames (which is the boundary of this county on the N.) are the Mole, Wey, Wandle, and Loddon. The Lent assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer assizes at Guilford and Croydon alternately.

SURRY, a county of Virginia, and a town of New Hampshire.

SURSEE, a town of Lucerne, in Switzerland, seated on the Lake of Sempach, 13 miles NW. of Lucerne.

SUS, a river of Africa, which rises from Mount Atlas, in Morocco, and runs into the Atlantic, near Santa Cruz. It gives name to the province, which it bounds on the south.

SUS, Sous, or SUEZ, a district of Morocco, bounded on the W. by the ocean, on the N. by Mount Atlas, on the E. by Darah, and on the S. by Nun. It is a flat country, most of which produces corn, sugar-canes, dates, indigo, alum, calamine, and red copper; and also abounds with cattle and camels. In the mountainous part the inhabitants are entirely free, and are governed by their own scheiks. The principal towns are Taradant, Aguadir, Toma, Teccut, and Messa.

SUSA, anciently SEGUSTUM, an ancient and strong town of Piedmont, capital of the marquise of Sufa. Here is a rich convent, called the Abbey of St. Just, and a triumphal arch erected to the honour of Augustus Cæsar. It has been called the key of Italy, because it is the principal passage out of France into Italy. It is at present small and poor, and is seated on the river Dora Riparia, in a valley to which it gives name, 25 miles WNW. of Turin.

SUSA, SUSTER, or SCHOUSTER, a town of Chusistan, in Persia, with some manufactures of silk stuffs and rich cloth. It is 150 miles W. of Isfahan, and is supposed by some to be the ancient Sufa, where the kings of Persia had a magnificent palace for their winter residence; also a town of Chorasan, in Persia, 60 miles NNW. of Herat.

SUSA. See SOUSE.

SUSDAL, a town of Volodomir, in Russia, capital of a duchy of the same name. It is built of wood, as are most towns in these parts, and is 90 miles NE. of Moscow.

SUSQUEHANNAH, a river of N. America, which rises in two branches, the easternmost in the Mohawks' country, New York; and the westernmost in the N. part of Pennsylvania. These branches unite at Sunbury; after which it runs in a SE. direction, passes by Harrisburg, crosses the Blue Mountains, enters Maryland, and being joined by several other rivers, forms the Chesapeake.

SUSSEX, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Surry, on the NE. and E. by Kent, on the S. by the English Channel, and on the W. by Hampshire. It is about 75 miles in length, and 20 in its mean breadth. It is divided into 6 rapes, and these are subdivided into 61 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 20 market-towns, 312 parishes, and 1060 villages. The air of this county is very various: along the sea-shore it is thought agreeable; but it has a much greater effect on strangers than on the natives, who are generally very healthful. In the Weald, which is a rich deep soil, it is apt to be foggy, yet not unwholesome; but upon the Downs the air is extremely sweet and healthy. The soil is likewise various; that of the Downs, and thence to the sea, is very fertile, both in corn and grass, the latter feeding large flocks of sheep, whose wool is remarkably fine. The middle of the county abounds with meadows and rich arable ground, and the N. side is shaded with extensive woods, that used to supply fuel for the iron works when they were in a flourishing state. This plentiful county, therefore, supplies numerous commodities, the chief of which are corn, malt, cattle, wool, wood, iron, chalk, glass, fish, and fowl. It is particularly famous for its wheaters, a small bird, of the size of a lark, not much inferior to an ortolane, which is taken on the SE. Downs in the following manner: a turf is cut up, about a foot long, and half a foot broad; in the cavity is placed a snare of horse-hair, and the turf turned with the grass downward to cover the greatest part of the hole. These birds are naturally so timorous, that the shadow of a cloud, or any thing that moves on the ground, makes them fly into these little pits for shelter, where they are taken. With respect to manufactures, Sussex is not distinguished for any but that of gunpowder at Battel, and of needles and coarse cloths at Chichester. The principal rivers are the Arun, Adur, Ouse, Rother, Rye, and Cockmere. Chichester is the capital.

SUSSEX, a town of New Jersey, and a county of Virginia.

Susted, Norf. SW. of Cromer.

SUSTEREN, a town of Juliers.

Suton, E. of Hereford. Sutcomb, Devonf. Sutbam, Berks, between Theal and Pangbourn. Sutbury Hill, Wilts, between Everley Warren and Luggershall. It is the highest in the county, and has the traces of a vast fortification, supposed to have been Danish.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. and W. by the North Sea, on the E. by Caithness-shire and the German Ocean, and on the S. and SW. by the Frith of Dornoch and Ross-shire. Its greatest extent from E. to W. is about 46 miles, and from N. to S. somewhat more. It is usually divided into Strathnavern and Sutherland Proper, the former comprehending the northern, the latter the southern part. Some parts of this county, still called forests, were anciently covered with wood, but are now trackless deserts, destitute of trees; or bleak mountains, abounding with wild roes. In these parts there are few inhabitants, and no villages; but to the SE. along the Frith of Dornoch, the country is populous and well cultivated. Dornoch is the county town.

SUTHERLAND POINT, the S. point of entrance into Botany Bay, so called from Forby Sutherland, one of Captain Cook's seamen, who was buried there, in 1770.

SUTRI, a town in the Patrimonio, seated on the river Puzzulo, 22 miles NW. of Rome.

Swanlow, Cheshire, by Darnell Park. Swanmere, Hampshire, SE. of Bishop's Waltham. Swannage, Dorsetshire, near Pool. Swanscomb, Kent, 2 miles W. of Gravesend, near the remains of 3 small camps and forts, supposed to be Danish. Here, it is said, the Kentishmen, with boughs in their hands, like a moving wood, surprised William the Conqueror, and throwing down their boughs, threatened battle, if they had not their ancient customs and franchises granted to them, to which he immediately consented. But the fact is doubted, as it is first mentioned by Thomas Spot, a monk, who lived two centuries after William's arrival. It is certain, however, that many peculiar customs are to be found in Kent; one of which is that of gavelkind, or the equal distribution of landed property among all the sons of a family.

SWANSEY, or ABERTAW, a large, clean, well-built, and populous town of Glamorganshire, containing an old castle, 2 churches, and about 400 houses, with broad paved streets. It exports great quantities of coals to Ireland and the southern coast of England; it has also a great correspondence with Bristol and Worcester for grocery, and other shop goods. Here are potteries, and considerable works for the smelting of copper and lead ore. Many ships have been built here, and it is resorted to for sea bathing. It is situated on a bay of the Bristol Channel, to which it gives name, at the mouth of the river Tawy, which here forms a good harbour. 24 miles WNW. of Cowbridge, and 205 W. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

SWEDEN, a large kingdom; in the N. part of Europe; bounded on the N. by Norway and Lapland; on the E. by Russia; on the S. by the Baltic and the Gulf of Finland; and on the W. by Norway, the Sound, and the Categate. It is the largest state in Europe, next to Russia, though geographers are not agreed respecting its superficial contents. The whole kingdom is divided into five general parts; namely, Sweden Proper, Gothland, Norland, Lapland, and Finland; and each of these is subdivided into several provinces. Sweden Proper contains Upland, Sudermania, Nericia, Westmania, and Dalecarlia. Gothland contains Ostrogothia, or East Gothland, Smoland, Westrogothia, or West Gothland, the Isles of Gothland and Oeland, Wermland, Bohus, Dalia, Scania, or Schonen, Halland, and Blekingen. Norland includes Gestrike, or Gestrikeland, Helsingland, Medelpadia, Jemtland, Herjedalia, Angermania, and W. Bothnia. Swedish Lapland comprises Afela, Hiemtland, Umeo, Pitheo, Luleo, Torneo, and Kemi. Finland contains Finland Proper, East Bothnia, Tavasteland, Nyland, Savolax, and that part of Kymene and Carelia, which Sweden has preserved. In the S. the longest day is 18 hours 30 minutes; but toward the N. there is continual day in summer, and continual night in winter, for several weeks successively. In the province in which Stockholm is seated, the spring and autumn are scarcely to be perceived; for the winter continues nine months, and the summer during the remaining three. In winter the cold is excessive, and in summer the heat is almost insupportable, the air being being generally serene all that time. Notwithstanding this, the Swedes live to a great age, as the pure and sharp air which they breathe, probably preserves them from epidemical diseases. Thunder is seldom heard in this country; it produces no venomous reptiles, and earthquakes never spread terror and consternation among its inhabitants. Those places that are fit for cultivation have scarce a foot of good earth, for below it is all gravel; for which reason they till the ground with a single ox, and one person may readily manage the plough. All their rocks are quite covered with flowers in the summer time, and their gardens have plenty of fruits. The trees are early in blossoming, because the soil is fat and sulphureous, which contributes greatly to the vegetation of plants; but the apples, pears, cherries, apricots, melons, and grapes have not so good a taste as in the more southern countries. The pine and fir are the principal forest-trees. Their domestic animals are horses, cows, hogs, goats, and sheep. The wild beasts are bears, wolves, foxes, wild cats, and squirrels. There are also elks and rein-deer, does, fables, beavers, and pole-cats. Linnaeus reckons 1400 species of animals in Sweden, and about 1300 species of plants, of which 200 are used in medicine. They have several sorts of fowls; and partridges, woodcocks, and falcons, in great plenty: They have rich silver, copper, and iron mines. They export boards, gunpowder, leather, iron, copper, tallow, skins, flax, hemp, pitch, rosin, and masts; and import salt, brandy, wine, linen cloth, stuffs, tobacco, sugar, spice, and paper. The inhabitants are of a robust constitution, and able to sustain the hardest labour; and they have several public schools and colleges, where arts and sciences are taught. Their houses are generally of wood, with very little art in their construction. The roofs, in many places, are covered with turf, on which their goats often feed. There is scarcely any country in the world where the women do so much work; for they till the ground, thrash the corn, and row the boats on the sea. Sweden was formerly an elective monarchy, and afterwards the most limited one in Europe, till the year 1772, when the late king gained the most essential royal prerogatives, without, however, being an absolute monarch. This prince was assassinated, March 16th, 1792, leaving his son, Gustavus, heir, and his brother, the Duke of Sudermania, regent of the kingdom. The inhabitants are computed at 3,000,000. The established religion is the Lutheran, and it is said they will not tolerate any other in the kingdom. They have one archbishop, and 7 bishops, besides 6 superintendants. The capital is Stockholm.

SWISSERLAND, or SWITZERLAND, a large and populous country of Europe, bounded on the E. by the Tirol and Austrian Suabia; on the W. by France; on the N. by the Black Forest, and a part of Suabia; and on the S. by Savoy and Italy. Its greatest extent, from E. to W. is about 180 miles, and from N. to S. 140. Here are many lakes and rivers, and some very fertile plains, which plentifully afford the necessaries of life, although the greatest part of it may justly be considered as the most elevated land in Europe. Swisserland is divided into 13 cantons, exclusively of their allies; their names are, Lucern, Uri, Schweiz, Underwalden, Zug, Friburg, Soleure, which are Romanists. The Protestant cantons are Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen. Glarus and Appenzel contain both professions of religion. The mountains of Swisserland are commonly called the Alps, over which there are four passages to go into Italy from Swisserland. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucern, Zurich, Neufchatel, and Bienne. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, the Rhone, the Aar, the Rous, and the Inn. The principal riches of Swisserland consist of excellent pastures, in which they breed and fatten their cattle. As they leave out their cattle night and day on the mountains, a stranger might be induced to think they would be devoured by the wild beasts, and yet it is quite otherwise; for, when the bees perceive a bear or a wolf, at a distance, they form themselves into a circle, and are ready to receive the enemy with their horns. As for the goats and chamois, they feed in flocks on the mountains, and in the woods, and they place centinels on all sides; and when any dangerous animal draws near, a signal is given, and they all get into a place of refuge, where the savage beasts dare not come. The inhabitants are strong, robust men, and form excellent mercenary troops, for which reason they are hired by several nations for the military service; and even the pope has his Swiss guards. The women are tolerably handsome, have many good qualities, and are, in general, very industrious. The peasants retain their old manner of dress, and are content to live upon roots, herbs, milk, butter, and cheese; and there are some of the mountaineers who never have any bread. The manufactures of Swisserland are considerable in linen, silk, cotton, and woollen, leather, hats, gloves, paper, pottery, clocks, watches, hardware, toys, &c.; besides which they export butter, cheese, cattle, sheep, horses, and some wine, conveyed by pack-horses, as the roads are often impracticable for carriages. The imports are principally grain, hemp, flax, wine, salt, and some manufactures. The inhabitants are estimated at 2,000,000. See the cantons under their respective names, and also GLACIERS and SCHWEITZ.

SYDNEY COVE, the town or settlement of convicts, begun to be erected in Port Jackson,

S Y E

Jackson, on the coast of New S. Wales, in 1788. The ground about it was then covered with a thick forest; but in 1790, some good buildings had been erected. The governor, lieutenant-governor, judge-advocate, and greatest part of the civil and military officers were comfortably lodged. The governor's house is built of stone, and has a very good appearance, being 70 feet in front. The lieutenant-governor's house is of brick, as are also those belonging to the judge and the commissary. The rest of the houses are built with logs, and plastered, and all the roofs are either covered by shingles, or thatched. The hospital is a good temporary building. The soldiers were in barracks, and the officers had comfortable huts, with gardens adjoining to them. The cove lies open to the NE. and is continued in a SW. direction for near 1000 yards, gradually decreasing from the breadth of 1400 feet, till it terminates in a point, where it receives a small stream of fresh water. It is perfectly secure from all winds, with anchorage extending 2000 feet up the cove, and soundings, in general, of four, five, six, and seven fathoms, so that ships can lie close to the shore, for a considerable way on both sides. Metals of various kinds abound in the neighbouring soil. Lat. 35. 50. S. lon. 151. 28. E.

Tanfield, Durham, NW. of Lumley-Castle. Tanfield, E. and W. Yorkshire, E. of Masham.

TENGERMUNDE, a town in the Old Marche, of Brandenburg, with a considerable trade in brewing. It is seated on the river Elbe, where vessels pay a toll, near its confluence with the Tanger, 24 miles NW. of Brandenburg.

TANGIER, a sea-port of Fez, in Africa, at the W. end of the Straits of Gibraltar. It was taken from the Moors by the Portuguese in 1471, and given as a dower to the princess Catharine of Portugal, who married Charles II. of England; but that impolitic monarch did not think it worth the expence of keeping, and therefore, in 1684, caused the works to be blown up, and withdrew the garrison. At present, there are some batteries facing the bay, in tolerable condition, but it is incapable of defence against a powerful attack. The Bay of Tangier is not very safe, when the wind is in the W. having been encumbered by the ruins of the mole and fortifications: the best anchorage for larger vessels is at the eastern point, whence they may easily set out, whichever way the wind blows; and the bay is only dangerous during the winter. The English obtain from hence, for fowls, vegetables, and other supplies, for the garrison at Gibraltar. It is 108 miles NNW. of Fez, and 38 WSW. of Gibraltar.

Tangley, Hants, near Andover. Tangley, Oxford. NW. of Burford. Tangley, Surry, in Ognerth parish. Tangmeer, Suffex, E. of Chichester.

TANJORE, a country on the coast of Coromandel, included in the Carnatic, about 95 miles in length and 50 in breadth. It is watered by the river Cauvery, and is governed by a rajah, who pays, however, an annual subsidy of 160,000l. to the English East-India Company.

TANJORE, a city of Hindoostan, capital of the province of the same name. The palace, situated at the end of the town, is a grand square, defended by a wall, and a wet ditch abounding in crocodiles. It is surrounded by a double wall and large ditch, and is seated between tween two branches of the river Canvery, 156 miles S. by W. of Madras. Lat 10. 46. N. lon. 79. 12. E.

Tankerley, Yorks. between Barnesley and Sheffield, 2 miles E. of Wortley.

TANKIA, or TINKIA-LING, a town of Thibet, situated at the foot of Mount Langur, which is said to exhale suffocating fumes, 232 miles WSW. of Lassa.

TANKROW, an English factory of the kingdom of Kaen, in Africa, situated on the river Gambia, 80 miles E. of James Fort. The chief trade is in wax. The Portuguese have a church here.

TANNA, a considerable island in the S. Pacific Ocean, and one of the New Hebrides, the inhabitants of which are brave and hospitable. There is a volcano in the island, with some hot springs, and the soil is very fertile, particularly in sugar-canes and yams. The inhabitants would not suffer Captain Cook, nor his companions, to penetrate far into the island. Lat. 19. 30. S. lon. 169. 46. E.

TANNENBURG, a town of Oberland, in Prussia, and a town of Erzgebürg, in Upper Saxony.

Tannis, Herts, NW. of Buntingford.

TANORE, a sea-port of Calicut, on the coast of Malabar. Lat. 10. 55. N.

Tanot, and Tanot Greater, rivers in Montgomerys. The former runs into the Vurney, or Vurnwey, below Aberthanel, and the latter runs into the greater Tanot, below Llanguedwyn. Tanridge, Surry, SW. of Oxted, gives name to its hundred. From hence to Croydon is a hilly, barren tract, full of warrens, but the air is reckoned sweet and wholesome. Tansley, Derbys. N. of Wirksworth. Tanslower, Northampton. NE. of Oundle. Tanworth, Warwick. near Umberlade.

TAOO, the most southern of the Friendly Islands, in the S. Pacific Ocean. It is about 8 leagues in circuit, and of a height sufficient to be seen at 12 leagues distance, with good anchorage on the NW. side. The SE. side rises, with great inequalities, immediately from the sea; so that the plains and meadows, of which there are some of great extent, lie chiefly on the NW. side; and being adorned with tufts of trees, intermixed with plantations, and intersected by paths leading to every part of the isle, they form a beautiful landscape.

TAORMINA, anciently TAURUS, a sea-port of Sicily, containing near 2000 inhabitants. It is seated on a rocky hill, on the E. coast, 27 miles SSW. of Messina.

* TARBERT, a town of Kerry, in Munster, 124 miles from Dublin.

TARBES, a populous town, the capital of the dept. of the Upper Pyrenees, and late the see of a bishop. It consists principally of one street, along the Adour, and is 42 miles SSW. of Auch.

TARBOROUGH, a flourishing, trading town of N. Carolina, seated on the river Tar, 43 miles NNW. of New Bern.

Tarent, a river in Dorsetshire, which rises near Stubbhampton, and gives name to several villages it passes through, in its way to where it falls into the Stour, 3 miles SE. of Blandford, as Tarent Gunvil, Hinton, Cranford, Kainsion, Launston, Monkton, and Rushion, all of which are NE. of Blandford.

TARENDAISE, COUNTY OF, a barren tract of country in Savoy, with a disagreeable appearance, and full of frightful precipices. It has the lordship of Fautigny on the N. the duchy of Aosta on the E. the county of Maurienne on the S. and the duchy of Savoy on the W. Monstier is the capital.

TARENTO, anciently TARENTUM, a city and sea-port of Otranto, in Naples, containing about 18,000 inhabitants. The harbour, which was once excellent, is now choked up, and will only admit fishing-boats. It is situated on a peninsula, in a bay to which it gives name, 60 miles WNW. of Otranto, and 147 nearly E. of Naples.

TARGA, a town of Fez, seated on the Mediterranean, near an oyster fishery. It is surrounded by mountains and thick forests, full of monkeys, and is 90 miles SE. of Tangier.

TARGOVISCO, or TERGOVISTA, a town of Turkey, capital of Walachia. The waywode has a palace here.

TARIFFA, by the Romans called JULIA TRADUCTA, a sea-port of Seville, in Andalusia. It is a poor place, with a few inhabitants, but is fortified with old walls and towers, and has a castle, in which the governor resides. It is seated on an eminence, near a bay, to which it gives name, on the N. side of the Straits of Gibraltar, 17 miles WSW. of Gibraltar.

TARINGASONG, a town of Asia, in Thibet, 17 miles ESE. of Lassa.

TARKU, or TARCU, a town of Daghestan, situated on the W. coast of the Caspian Sea, 130 miles N. of Shamachie.

TARN, a dept. of France, NW. of the department of Hérault, and N. of the depart. of the Aude; formerly a part of Languedoc. It takes its name from a river which rises in the dept. of Lozère, and having watered Milhaud, Alby, Gailiac, Montauban, &c. falls into the Garonne, near Moissac, in the dept. of the Lot. Castles is the capital.

TARO, a town of Parma, in the country of Val-di-Taro, seated on the river Taro, which runs into the Po, 9 miles E. of Basseto.

Tarperly, Cheshire. Tarraby, Cumberland, NW. of Carlisle.

TARRAGONA, a town of Catalonia, with a university; under the Romans the capital of a district called Tarraconensis. It was built originally by the Phœnicians, and was very considerable in the time of the Romans. There are several inscriptions, coins, ruins, and other monuments of antiquity here. It is neither so large nor so populous at present; for though there is room for 2000 houses within the walls, which were built by the Moors, there are not above 500, which are all built with large square stones. Its cathedral is well worthy of attention, for its vast dimensions, and the elegance of its Gothic architecture. The archbishop is metropolitan of Catalonia, and disputes the primacy of Spain with Toledo. It has but little trade, (the harbour being dangerous, and not much frequented) and is seated on the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the river Francoli, 38 miles WSW. of Barcelona, and 240 E. by N. of Madrid.

TARRY TOWN, a town of New York.

TARREGA, a town of Catalonia, situated on the Cervera, 30 miles N. of Tarragona.

TARSUS, a large sea-port town of Caramania, anciently the capital of Cilicia. It is the see of a Jacobite bishop, and a Nestorian archbishop, and is 105 miles W. of Alexandretta.

TARTARO,

TARTARÒ, a river of Italy, which rises in the Veronese; crosses the Polesa de Rovigo, and passes by Adria. Soon after it divides itself into two branches, one of which runs into the Adige, and the other into the Po.

TARTARY, a country of Asia, which, taken in its utmost limits, reaches from the Eastern Ocean to the Caspian Sea, and from Corea, China, Hindoostan, and Persia, to Russia and Siberia. It is generally considered, under three grand divisions; namely Eastern, Western, and Independent Tartary. The different tribes which inhabit Eastern Tartary were formerly called Mongul Tartars, a warlike nation, who, on one hand, conquered Hindoostan, under Jenghis Khan; and on the other, subdued China, in the 13th century, and reigned there for 100 years, till they were expelled in the year 1368. Chinese Tartary is divided into two parts, Eastern and Western. The greatest part of this country either belongs to the emperor of China, is tributary to him, or is under his protection. The Chinese empire has been lately extended in Tartary, by the celebrated conquest of the kingdom of the Eluths, made in 1759, by the arms of the emperor Kien Long. Independent Tartary includes all the country between Chinese Tartary and the Caspian Sea, and contains Turkestan, Great and Little Bukharia, Turcomania, Charasm, Thibet, and some countries inhabited by the Usbecks and Kalmucks. Western Tartary includes the remainder; most or all of which has been conquered by the Russians. For various interesting particulars concerning them, see, in their respective places, the articles Abkas, Circassia, Crimea, Cossacks, Georgia, Imeritia, Kalmucks, Kisti, Lelguis, Mingrelia, Monguls, Ossi, Samoyedes, Turkomans, and Usbecks. Tartar or Tatar, is, in fact, a general name, which includes a great variety of nations, but with a particular one often applied from their local situation.

TARTAS, a town in the department of Landes, seated on the river Midoufe, 12 miles NE. of Dax.

TARUDANT, a town of Sus, in Morocco, formerly the capital of a small kingdom. It contains several towns, which, as well as Tarudant, are built with stone. It is at present the residence of a governor, and is situated almost at the extremity of the empire, 43 miles ESE. of Santacruz (a sea-port of Sus) and 110 SSW. of Morocco.

Tarvar, Cornwall, N. of Mounts Bay.

Tasley, Shropshire, W. of Bridgenorth, has a bridge over the Severn.

TASSAUSUDON, a city of Asia, capital of the county of Bootan, 206 miles SW. of Lassa, and 242 NE. of Patna.

TASSA CORTA, or TUSSA CRODA, a town on the W. coast of the island of Patma, one of the Canary islands. It is a loading place for vessels, but not very considerable. Lat. 28. 37. N. lon. 17. 58. W.

TATE'S ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, first discovered June 29th, 1793, by captains Bampton and Holt, of the Hormazier and Chesterfield, vessels employed in the service of the East-India Company, and so named, in honour of Mr. Tate, of Bombay. The inhabitants are stout, well made, and woolly headed, and resemble the people of New Guinea in stature and complexion. A party from the ships, having landed, for the sake of procuring water, and to make observations on the soil, produce, inhabitants, &c. was at first received very kindly, to all appearance, but afterwards, the natives, watching their opportunity, murdered captain Hill, of the New South Wales corps, and some of the seamen, cutting their throats from ear to ear, and mangling their bodies in a shocking manner. It was with difficulty that the survivors made a shift to get on board their boat, by frequently discharging their muskets, at the report of which the natives always fled into the woods. Those voracious cannibals were afterwards seen dragging the dead bodies towards large fires prepared on the occasion, yelling and howling hideously at the same time. Lat. 9. 28. S. lon. 146. 57. E.

Tatenell, Stafford. W. of Burton-upon-Trent. Tatenham, Wilts, 4 miles from Marlborough. Taternal, or Tatternhoe, Bedford. NW. of Dunstable. Tatesfield, Surry, SE. of Chelham. Tatham, E. of Lancaster. Tathwell, Lincolnshire, near Louth.

TATTA, or SINDE, a town of Hindoostan Proper, capital of the province of Sindy; supposed to be built on the site of the ancient Patala. In the last century, it was very extensive and populous, and was a place of considerable trade, possessing manufactures of silk, Carmania wool, and cotton; it was also celebrated brated for its cabinet ware. Little of these, however, now remain, and the limits of the city are very much circumscribed. On the shores of the Indus, above the Delta, considerable quantities of saltpetre are made; and within three miles of it on the NW. are mines of iron and salt. The Indus, and its branches, admit of an uninterrupted navigation from Tatta to Moulton, Lahore, and Cashmere, for vessels of near 200 tons; and a very extensive trade was carried on between those places, in the time of Aurungzebe; but, at present, very little of this trade remains, owing, it is said, to a bad government in Sind, and probably to a hostile disposition of the Seiks, the present possessors of Moulton and Lahore. Tatta is seated on a branch of the river Sind, or Indus, called the Ritchel river, 156 miles WNW. of Amedabad, and 340 SSW. of Moulton. Lat. 24. 50. N. lon. 67. 37. E.

TATTAH, a town in Africa, situated on the frontiers of Darah and Morocco, in the route from Morocco to Tombuctoo. It is 150 miles SSE. of Morocco.

Tattenhall, Cheshire, W. of Beeston-Castle. Tatterford, Norfolk, N. of Rainham. Tatterset; see Gateford.

TATTERSHALL, a small town of Lincolnshire, with a beautiful and spacious church, and houses mostly built of brick. Its castle was famous for its ancient bastions, and, to this day, exhibits a venerable remnant of ancient industry. The great tower, 200 feet high, is entire, but the other parts are totally destroyed. Tattershall is commodiously situated, although in a marshy country, on the river Bane, which is navigable by boats to the Witham, near its confluence with the latter, 12 miles NW. of Boston, and 127 N. of London. Market on Friday.

Tattington, Suffolk, SW. of Ipswich. Tattington, or Tannington, Suff. N. of Framlingham. Tatton, Cheshire, N. of Knottersford. Tatton, E. and W. Dorset. near Abbotsbury.

TAVASTLAND, a very fertile province in the middle of Finland, about 150 miles in length and 100 in breadth. It consists of fine plains, watered by a great number of rivers and lakes, which abound in fish, and it is plentifully stored with cattle and all sorts of game. It is far, however, from being well cultivated, and the inhabitants are very poor. The northern part is rather mountainous and woody.

TAVASTUS, or KRONEBORG, a town of Finland, capital of the province of Tavastland. The castle is well fortified, and serves for an arsenal and royal magazine. It is seated on a river, which falls into Lake Wana, 44 miles NE. of Abo.

TAUBER, SEE, a lake of Berchtesgaden, in Bavaria.

TAUCAEL, TAUCHEL, or TUCHEL, a town of Prussian Pomerelia, seated on the river Verd, 44 miles SSW. of Dantzic.

Taud, a river in Lancashire, which runs into the Dowles, not far from Lathom Park. Tawe, a river in Carmarthenshire, which runs into the Severn at St. Clear, near Llangharn.

TAVE, or TAFF, a river of Wales, which rises in two streams, in the southern part of Brecknockshire, and runs into the Bristol Channel, opposite Pennarth Point, below Cardiff, in Glamorganshire.

Taverham, Norf. by the Yare, NW. of Norwich.

TAVERNA, a town of Calabria Ultra.

TAVIRA, or TAVILA, a considerable town of Portugal, in Algarve, containing 2 churches, an hospital, 5 convents, and about 5000 inhabitants. It has a commodious harbour, protected by two forts, and is seated in a pleasant, fertile county, near the mouth of the river Gilaon, 100 miles W. by N. of Cadiz.

* TAYISTOCK, an ancient, large, and well-built town of Devonshire. It was once a flourishing place, famous for its stately, mitred abbey, where books were formerly printed in the Saxon language, and a school erected to teach it; it is now divided into tenements. It is a stannary town, has a chalybeate mineral water, and is situated on the river Tavy, or Tave, 32 miles W. by S. of Exeter, and 206 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Taukin, Cumberland, SE. of Brampton.

Taume, a river which rises in Yorkshire, and runs into the Mersey at Stopford, in Lancashire, opposite Stockport.

TAUMAGO, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Quiros, in the year 1606. He found wood, water, potatoes, cocoas, palmettos, sugar-canes, and other plants and fruits. The inhabitants appeared to be active, robust, and warlike, but not ferocious. Lat. 13. S. lon. 201. E. of Ferro.

TAUNTON, a town of Massachusetts, seated on a river of the same name, which runs into the sea at Rhode Island, 29 miles S. of Boston.

* TAUNTON, an ancient town of Somersetshire, which, in point of size, buildings, buildings, and respectability of inhabitants, may vie with many cities. It consists of three principal streets, or rather four, including Hemet-street, (which has lately been begun by Sir Benjamin Hemet, and will be a considerable addition to the town) which are wide, and very well built, besides a number of others, and contains 2 parish churches, a noble and spacious market-place, a commodious market-house, with a handsome town-hall over it, a well-endowed grammar-school, an hospital, and about 2000 inhabitants. It has long been the principal seat of the manufacture of coarse, woollen goods, such as serges, corduroys, sagathies, druggets, shalloons, &c. though somewhat decayed of late years, or translated, perhaps, to the neighbouring town of Wellington. A silk manufacture was introduced here in 1780. Large quantities of malt liquor are also sent from this town to Bristol for exportation. The corporation are said to have neither lands, houses, nor joint stock; their last charter precluding them from any such possessions. The election of members of parliament here is very singular; every pot-walloper, i. e. inhabitant that dresses his own victuals, is entitled to vote; so that the inmates, or lodgers, to qualify themselves, a little before the election comes on, make a fire in the street, and here boil their victuals. It is seated on the river Thone, which is navigable hence to the Parret, and so to Bridgwater, 31 miles NE. of Exeter, and 140 W. by S. of London. Large markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

TAVORA, a town of Beira, in Portugal, 5 miles E. of Lamego. It is situated on a river of the same name, which runs into Douro, 5 miles NE. of Lamego.

TAUNTON-DEAN, or the VALE OF TAUNTON, in Somersetshire, extending about 30 miles in length, is of such remarkable fertility and produce, that, to use the vulgar phrase, with the sun and soil alone, it needs no manure. Coals from Wales, after being brought by sea from Swansea to Bridgwater, are brought from the latter place by barges to Taunton, as are heavy goods and merchandise from Bristol, and so are transported over all these parts.

TAUREAU, an island of France, in the dept. of Finisterre, lying at the mouth of the river Morlaix. Lat. 48, 40. N.

TAURICA, or TAURIDA. See CRIMEA.

TAURIS, or TABRIS, a city of Persia, capital of Aderbeizan, the most considerable in the empire, next to Ispahan. It carries on a prodigious trade over many parts of Asia, in cotton, cloths, silks, gold and silver brocades, the finest turbans, and shagreen leather. It contains many large and extensive bayars, covered with beautiful domes, and filled with vast quantities of merchandise, 3 hospitals, in which provisions are given twice a day to all who come, a square much larger and more spacious than that at Ispahan, (and in which the Turks, when in possession of this city, have frequently drawn up 30,000 men in order of battle) 250 mosques, 300 caravanseras, which are so spacious, that 300 persons, it is said, may lodge in each, besides baths, and other public buildings, equally noble and magnificent. Sir John Chardin estimates the inhabitants at 550,000, besides strangers. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by mountains, whence a stream proceeds, which runs through the city. It is 180 miles SSE. of Erivan, and 360 NNW. of Ispahan. Lat. 38. 18. N. lon. 47. 10. E.

TAURUS, or ARARAT, a great chain of mountains in Asia, which begin near the western part of Natolia, and extend to India. In different places they have different names.

Tauton, North, Devonshire, NW. of Barnstaple. Tauton, South, Devonshire, E. of Okehampton. Tavy, Mary's, Devonshire, on the river Tavy. Tavy, Peter's, Devonf. NE. of Tavistock. Taw, a river of Devonshire, which rises near the centre of the county, about 3 miles SE. of Okehampton, flows to Barnstaple, and then turns westerly and joins the Towridge, at its mouth, in the Bristol Channel. Tawstock House, and Tawton, Bishop's, Devonf. on the Taw, SW. and S. of Barnstaple. Bishop's Tawton was the first bishop's see in this county, from whence, after only two bishops had resided in it, it was removed to Crediton, and then to Exeter. Tavy, a river of Brecknockshire and Glamorganshire, which enters the Bristol Channel at Swansey. Taxball, Cheshire, N. of Macclesfield-Forest.

TAY, a fine river of Scotland, the two sources of which are near Tyndrum, in the W. part of Perthshire. Flowing through Loch Tay, it afterwards waters Dunkeld and Perth, and, joining the river Earn, falls into the Frith of Tay.

TAY, FRITH OF, a noble estuary, or arm of the sea, which divides Fifeshire from the counties of Perth and Angus. It becomes narrow towards its mouth, and at the Ferry-Town, in Fifeshire, called Parton-Craigs, it is not above a mile broad.

TAY, LOCH, a lake of Perthshire, in Scotland, through which flows the majestic river of the same name. It is about 15 miles long, and in many parts above one broad. On the 12th of September, 1784, this lake was seen to ebb and flow several times in a quarter of an hour, when, all at once, the waters rushed from the E. and W. in opposite currents, so as to form a ridge, leaving the channel dry to the distance of almost a hundred yards from its usual boundary. When the opposing waves met, they burst with a clashing noise, and much foam: the waters then flowed out at least five yards beyond their ordinary limits. The flux and reflux continued, gradually decreasing for about two hours. A similar motion was observed for several days, but not to the same degree as on the first day. The banks of this lake are finely wooded; and it has a small tufted island, on which are the ruins of a priory, built by Alexander I.

TAY, a river of Waterford, in Munster, which runs into the Atlantic, about 7 miles WNW. from Dungarvan Bay.

TAYLI, or TALI, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yunnan. It is the principal place where they make curious tables, and other ornaments of fine marble, naturally beautified with different colours, in the form of mountains, flowers, trees, and rivers. Tayli has under its jurisdiction, 4 cities of the second rank, and 3 of the third. It is 1205 miles SW. of Peking.

Taynton, Gloucestersh. SE. of Newent. Taynton, Upper and Lower, Lincolnshire, near Horncastle.

TAYOAN. See TAIOUAN.

TAYTONG, or TAITONG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Chanfi, with a very large jurisdiction, extending over 4 great cities of the second rank, and 7 of the third. Lapis lazuli is obtained in great plenty here; and there is a kind of jasper which is transparent, and as white as agate. Porphyry, marble, and jasper of all colours are very plentiful, and here is also a great commerce in skins. The neighbouring mountains abound with a variety of simples and medicinal herbs, which the botanists gather with great care. Taytong is very well fortified, according to the manner of the Chinese, and has, generally, a very strong garrison. It is situated in a mountainous country, exposed to the incursions of the Tartars, and surrounded, in a manner, by the great wall, which has forts from place to place. 155 miles W. of Peking.

TCHANGTCHA, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Houquang. It is situated on the Heng river, 742 miles S. of Peking.

TEFESAD, a town of Algiers, supposed to have been the ancient Tipfa, noted for its mines of iron. It is 32 miles SW. of the city of Algiers.

TEFFLIS, a town of Asia, capital of Georgia. It is called by the inhabitants Tbilis-Cabar, (warm town) from the warm baths in its neighbourhood. Though its circumference does not exceed two English miles, it contains 20,000 inhabitants; Armenians, Georgians, and Tartars. All the houses are of stone, with flat roofs, which serve, according to the custom of the East, as walks for the women. They are nearly built; the rooms are waifcotted, and the floors spread with carpets. The streets seldom exceed seven feet in breadth; and some are so narrow as scarcely to allow room for a man on horseback: they are consequently very filthy. The Armenians have established in this town all the manufactures carried on by their countrymen in Persia: the most flourishing is that of printed linens. Here are 1 Roman Catholic, 13 Greek, and 7 Armenian churches. Teflis is seated on the river Kur, at the foot of a mountain, 300 miles SSW. of Astracan. Lat. 41. 59. N. lon. 47. 6. E.

* TENBY, a neat, agreeable sea-port town of Pembrokehire, with a commodious quay, a good harbour or road for shipping, a large fishery for herrings, and a considerable coasting trade to Ireland and Bristol. It is a place of some resort for sea-bathing, and is situated on the declivity of a hill, affording a picturesque view of it from the bay, but deficient of trees, 7 miles E. of Pembroke, and 233 W. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

TENCH'S ISLAND, a well-inhabited island, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Lieutenant Ball, in 1790. It is about 2 miles in circumference: it is low, but entirely covered with trees, many of which are the cocoa-nut. The natives observed in the canoes that ventured to come somewhat near the ship, were remarkably stout and healthy-looking men; their skin perfectly smooth, and free from any disorder. They were quite naked, and of a copper colour: their hair resembling that of the New Hollanders. Some of their beards reached as low as the navel, and there was the appearance of much art having been used to form them into long ringlets, so that it seemed to be the prevailing fashion on this island to keep the beard heard well combed, curled, and oiled. Two or three of the men had something like a head or bone, suspended to a string, which was fattened round the neck. The largest of their canoes appeared to be about 28 feet long, and made out of a large tree, with a long outrigger. Lat. 1. 39. S. lon. 151. 31. E.

TENDA, a town of Piedmont, capital of a county of the same name, S. of the district of Coni, and N. of Nice, affording good pasturage and timber. TENEDOS, an island in the Archipelago, lying on the coast of Naxos, SE. of Lemnos. It is about 21 miles in circumference, and its muscadine wine is reckoned the best in all the Levant. On the N. coast is a pretty large town, with a fine harbour.

TENERIFF, formerly called NIVARIA, one of the Canary Islands, the second in dignity, but the first in point of extent, wealth, and fertility. It lies to the W. of the Grand Canary, and is about 45 miles in length, and 20 in breadth. Its form is triangular, extending itself into 3 capes, the nearest about 80 leagues or more from the coast of Africa. It abounds in wine, different sorts of fruits, cattle, and game. One part of this island is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and there is one in particular, called the Pike of Teneriff, which, according to Sir Thomas Herbert, may be seen 120 miles off, in a clear day. Dr. Heberden estimates the height at 15,396 feet above the level of the sea. The vertex, which appears sharp, and the exact resemblance to a cone, is flat for the extent of an acre of ground, in the centre of which is a dreadful volcano. Though it frequently breaks out into flames, and smoke constantly issues from it, there has been no eruption from this mountain since the year 1704 when the port of Garrachica was destroyed, and the harbour filled up by the lava. Ten parts of this island consist of rocks, and woody and inaccessible mountains and vineyards, and yet, from the small portion of arable ground remaining, 250,000 hannahs of wheat, besides immense quantities of rye and barley, are annually produced here. Nothing can be more delicately rich than the soil, if the Spaniards would take the trouble to cultivate it properly, communicating to grains, fruits, roots, &c. a peculiar elegance of flavour, unknown in other countries. Wine is the only considerable articles of foreign commerce, about 40,000 pipes being annually made here. There are two sorts of it, the vidonia and malvesia, or malmsey. The first is extracted from a long grape, and is a dull, heavy wine, greatly inferior to the other, which is drawn from a large, round grape, in such quantities as to be exported to all the corners of the world. The Spanish custom of dressing in black continues amongst the inhabitants. The laborious works in this island are chiefly performed by mules, horses being scarce. Oxen are also much employed here, to drag their calks along upon pieces of wood. Hawks and parrots are natives of the island, as also swallows, sea-gulls, partridges, black-birds, and large flocks of canary-birds. There are also lizards, locusts, and three or four sorts of dragon flies. The air and climate are remarkably healthful, and particularly adapted to afford relief in phthical complaints. Lat. of the Peak, 28. 18. N. lon. 17 W.

TETUAN, a town of Fez, in Africa. The houses have no windows toward the streets, except little holes to look out at; for the windows are on the inside toward the court-yard, which is surrounded by galleries; and in the middle is generally a fountain. They are two stories high, flat at the top, and the streets very narrow. The dress of both sexes is much alike; but nothing of the women is to be seen in the streets, except their eyes and naked legs, which are never covered in this country. When they are at home, they visit each other from the tops of their houses. They wear bracelets on their arms and legs, and large ear-rings in their ears. The shops in the city are very small, being without doors; and the owner, when he has opened the shutters, jumps in, and sits cross-legged on a counter, the goods being disposed in drawers round about him, and all the customers stand in the street. It is seated on the river Cus, 3 miles from the sea, and has a castle which commands the town. TEVERONE, a river of Italy, which rises in the Appenines, 50 miles above Tivoli, glides through a plain till it comes near that town, when it is confined, for a short space, between two hills, covered with groves. These were supposed to be the residence of the Sibyl Albunea, to whom a temple here was dedicated. The river moving, with augmented rapidity, as its channel is confined, at last rushes, at once, over a lofty precipice; the noise of its fall resounds through the hills and groves of Tivoli; a liquid cloud arises from the foaming water, which afterward divides into numberless small cascades, waters several orchards, and, having gained the plain, flows quietly on till it loses itself in the Tiber. The elegant form of the Sybil's Temple indicates its having been built when the arts were in the highest state of perfection at Rome. It is seated on a point of the mountain, fronting the grand cascade.

THAME, or TAME, a town of Oxfordshire, which gives name to the hundred. It is situated on the river Thame, (which is navigable here by barges, and washes the N. part of the town) 13 miles E. of Oxford, and 45 NW. of London. A market, well furnished with live cattle, and all necessaries, on Tuesday.

THAMES, the finest river in Great Britain, which takes its source, according to Dr. Campbell, from 4 rivulets, which rise in the Cotswold Hills, and connecting together, form one stream, near Lechlade, which there becomes navigable for barges. But the chief spring, or what is called Thames-Head, rises about 4 miles SW. from Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. It has been erroneously said, that its name is Isis, till it arrives at Dorchester, 15 miles below Oxford, which, being joined by the Thame, or Tame, it assumes the name of the Thames, which, it has been observed, is formed from a combination of the words Thame and Isis. What was the origin of this vulgar error cannot now be traced, but poetical fiction has perpetuated it. "It plainly appears," says Camden, "that the river was always called Thames, or Terns, before it came near the Thame; and in several ancient charters granted to the abbey of Malmesbury, as well as that of Ensham, and in the old deeds relating to Cricklade, it is never considered under any other name than that of Thames." He likewise says, that it occurs no where under the name of Isis. All the historians, who mention the incursions of Ethelwold into Wiltshire, in the year 905, or of Canute, in 1016, concur likewise in the same opinion, by declaring, that they passed over the Thames at Cricklade, in Wiltshire. It is not probable, moreover, that Thames-Head, an appellation by which the source has usually been distinguished, should give rise to a river of the name of Isis; which river, after having run half its course, should re-assume the name of Thames, the appellation of its parent spring. About a mile below the source of the river, is the first corn-mill, which is called Kemble-Mill. Here the river may properly be said to form a constant current; which, though not more than nine feet wide in the summer, yet, in the winter, becomes such a torrent, as to overflow the meadows for many miles round. But, in the summer, the Thames-Head is so dry, as to appear nothing but a large dell, interspersed with stones and weeds. From Somersford the stream winds to Cricklade, where it unites with many other rivulets. Approaching Kemsford, it again enters its native county, dividing it from Berkshire at Ingleham. It widens considerably in its way to Lechlade; and being there joined by the Lech and Coln, at the distance of 138 miles from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 90 tons. At Ensham, in its course NE. to Oxford, is the first bridge of stone; a handsome one of three arches. Passing by the ruins of Godstow nunnery, the river reaches Oxford, in whose academic groves, its poetical name of Isis has been so often invoked. Being there joined by the Charwell, it proceeds SE. to Abingdon, and thence to Dorchester, where it receives the Tame. Continuing its course SE. by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to the counties of Berks, Bucks, Surry, Middlesex, Essex, and Kent, it washes the towns of Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Eton, Egham, Staines, Laleham, Chertsey, Weybridge, Shepperton, Walton, Sunbury, East and West Moulsey, Hampton, Thames - Ditton, Kingston, Teddington, Twickenham, Richmond, Isleworth, Brentford, Kew, Mortlake, Barnes, Chiswick, Hammer Smith, Putney, Fulham, Wandsworth, Battersea, Chelsea, and Lambeth. Then, on the north bank of the river, are Westminster and London; and, on the opposite side, Southwark; forming together one continued city, extending to Limehouse and Deptford; and hence the river proceeds to Greenwich, Erith, Greenhithe, Gray's-Thurrock, Gravesend, and Leigh, into the ocean. It receives, in its course from Dorchester, the rivers Kennet, Loddon, Coln, Wey, Mole, Wandle, Lea, Rodding, Darent, and Medway. Though the Thames is said to be navigable 138 miles above bridge, yet there are so many flats, that in summer, the navigation westward would be entirely stopped, when the springs are low, were it not for a number of locks. But these are attended with considerable expence; for a barge from Lechlade to London pays for passing through them, 13l. 15s. 6d. and from Oxford to London 12l. 18s. This charge, however, is in summer only, when the water is low; and there is no lock from London Bridge to Batter's Lock; that is, for 51 miles above bridge. The plan of new cuts has been adopted, in some places, to shorten and facilitate the navigation. There is one near Lechlade, which runs nearly parallel to the old river, and contiguous to St. John's Bridge; and there is another, a mile from Abingdon, which has rendered the old stream, toward Culham Bridge, useless. But a much more important undertaking has lately been accomplished, namely, the junction of this river with the Severn. A canal had been made, by virtue of an act of parliament, in 1730, from the Severn to Wall-Bridge, near Stroud. A new canal now ascends by Stroud, through the Vale of Chalford, to the height of 343 feet, by means of 28 locks, and thence to the entrance of a tunnel near Sapperton, a distance of near 8 miles. This canal is 42 feet in width at top, and 30 at the bottom. The tunnel (which is extended under Sapperton Hill and Haley-Wood, making a distance of 2 miles and 3 furlongs) is near 15 feet in width, and can navigate barges of 70 tons. The canal, descending hence 184 feet, by 14 locks, joins the Thames at Lechlade, a distance of above 20 miles. In the course of this undertaking, the canal from the Severn, at Froolade, to Ingleham, where it joins the Thames, is a distance of more than 30 miles. The expence of it exceeded the sum of 200,000l. of which 3000l. is said to have been expended in gunpowder alone, used for the blowing up of the rock. This new canal was completed in 1789, in less than seven years from its commencement. Several canals are made, or making, to open a communication communication between this river and other parts of the kingdom; from London to Hertford and Biggleswade; from Brentford, by Uxbridge, Rickmansworth, &c. to join the Oxford canal at Braunston; from Weybridge, by Guilford, Godalmin, Petersfield, &c. to the sea, between Gosport and Southampton; to Basingstoke, and from thence to Southampton-Water; by the Kennet, to Hungerford, from Abingdon to Lechlade; from Oxford to Coventry; from Lechlade to Stratford-upon-Avon; and from Lechlade to the Severn, below Gloucester. The tide flows up the Thames as high as Richmond, which, following the winding of the river, is 70 miles from the ocean; a greater distance than the tide is carried by any other river in Europe. The water is esteemed extremely wholesome, and fit for use in very long voyages, in which it will work itself perfectly fine.

THAMES, a river of the NE. coast of New Zealand, in the S. Pacific Ocean.

THAMES, a river of N. America, which runs into Lake St. Clair, in lat. 42. 45. N. lon. 82. 10. W.

THAMES, a river of Connecticut. It is composed of two principal branches, the Shetucket on the E. and the Norwich, or Little River, on the W. This last, about a mile before its junction with the Shetucket river at Norwich, has a remarkable romantic cataract. From Norwich, the Thames is navigable 12 miles to Long Island, which it enters about 4 miles below New London.

Thames-Ditton, Surry, between Kingston and Esher.

THAMSBURCK, or THOMASBURCK, a town of Thuringia, 16 miles WNW. of Erfurt.

Thandislon, alias Francion, Suffolk.

THANNET, an island of Kent, formed by the two branches of the Stour, which cut off the NE. angle from the rest of the county. Its extent is about 9 miles from E. to W. and 8 from N. to S. The soil is fertile, producing much barley and other grain, of which above 20,000 quarters are sent annually to London, besides what is sold to other places, and also madder. The S. and W. parts contain rich tracts of marsh land. The husbandry of this isle, and of E. Kent, in general, has long been famous. The alga marina, or sea-weed, (what they call sea-ore) is their chief manure. This they also dry on the shore and burn, in order to make kelp of it. It contains the sea-ports of Margate and Ramsgate, and 8 other parishes.

Thanington, Kent, by the Stour, a mile SW. of Canterbury.

THANNHAUSEN, a town of Suabia, capital of a lordship of the same name, situated on the river Mindel, 22 miles E. of Ulm.

Tharfield, Hertford. situated among the tops of small hills, that hang over Royston, NE. of it. Tharleby, Lincolnshire, S. of Bourn. Tharston, Norfolk, SE. of Windham.

THASOS, an island of the Archipelago, anciently called ÆRIA, or ÆTHRIA, and famous, even to a proverb, for its rich gold mines. It is about 12 miles in length, and 8 in breadth, produces very delicate wines and fruits, and abounds in all necessaries, and has quarries of very fine marble. It is situated at the entrance of the Gulf of Contessa, with a town of the same name, and a harbour, frequented by merchants, in lat. 40. 59. N. and lon. 24. 32. E.

Thatcham, Berkshire, 2 miles NE. of Newbury.

THAXTED, a town of Essex, chiefly noted for its regular, stately church, which was built by John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, Lionel, duke of Clarence, Lady Clare, and William de Burgh; its chancel, by Edward III. and its tower and lofty spire, by Edmund, last earl of Marche. It is seated on the Chelmer, near its source, 20 miles NW. of Chelmsford, and 43 NE. of London. Mark. on Friday.

Theale, Berkshire, on the Kennet, 4 miles W. of Reading.

THEBAID, or SAID, a large country of Upper Egypt, bordering on Nubia. It is the least fertile, and the thinnest of people of any province in Egypt, being full of deserts, and celebrated formerly for the retreat of a great number of Christians, who lived here in a solitary manner. It is now chiefly inhabited by Arabs.

Thebarton, Suffolk, SW. of Dunwich.

THEBES, the ancient name of a city of Upper Egypt, now called Luxor. It was formerly celebrated for having 100 gates; and there are now a great many magnificent remains of the ancient city.

THEMAR, a town of Henneburg, in Franconia, situated on the Werra.

Thenford, Northampt. near Astrop. The Moat, Kent, near Maidstone. The Moat, Kent, near Ightham. Theobald's, Herts, by the New River, in Cheshunt parish, 12 miles N. of London. Here was a magnificent seat and gardens, purchased, or rather exchanged, for the manor of Hatfield, with lord Burleigh, by king James I. who enlarged the park on the W. side of the village, with a wall 10 miles round, often visited it for the pleasure of hunting in Enfield Chase, Epping Forest, &c. and, at last, died here. Its great park, partly in this county, and partly in Middlesex, is now converted into farms, and the small remains of its palace were demolished in 1765.

THENGEN, a town which gives name to a principality of Suabia. It is situated on the river Hegan, bordering on the Swiss Canton of Schaffhausen, 22 miles NW. of Constance.

THENON, a town in the dept. of the Dordogne, 15 miles E. of Perigueux.

Thereck, Cornw. SW. of Bodmin. Theresty, Lincolnshire, W. of Saltfleet-Haven. Theresthorp, Lincolnshire, N. of Alford. Therestway, Lincolnshire, SE. of Caistor. Therlesbouch, Derbyshire, in the Peak, near the 3 shire-stones.

THERMIA, an island of the Archipelago, near the Gulf of Engia, about 12 miles in length, and 5 in breadth. It is not so mountainous as some of the other islands and is so called from its abounding in hot springs. The soil is very good, when well cultivated, and produces a great deal of barley, wine, and figs, with fine silk, cotton, wax, and honey. Partridges are in great plenty. The principal town, of the same name, contains 15 or 16 churches, and several convents, and is the residence of a Greek bishop. The Greek inhabitants of the island are computed at 16,000. Lat. 37. 31. N. lon. 24. 59. E.

Therverton, Devonshire, NE. of Crediton. Therverton, or Thaverton, Devonshire, N. of Exeter, and on the same river, is a great thoroughfare.

THESSALY. See JANNA.

THETFORD, a town in Norfolk, containing several streets of well built houses, but the streets are not paved. It was formerly the metropolis of the kingdom of the East Angles; and in the 12th century, the see of a bishop, and a place of great note, when it had 20 churches, of which only two now remain, 5 markets, 23 streets, besides lanes, 6 hospitals, and 8 monasteries, several ruins of which are yet visible. The town then lay wholly on the Suffolk side of the river, which now contains but a few houses. It had formerly also a mint, which has produced a great number of Anglo Saxon and English coins, from the time of Athelstan. The chief magistrate found here at the Norman conquest, was styled a consul, from whence some suppose it to have been a Roman town. The Lent affizes for the county are held in its Guildhall, a fine old building of black flint. The chief manufacture is in wool combing, woollen cloth, and paper. It is situated in a pleasant, open country, on two navigable rivers, the Thet and Lesser Ouse, (the former of which runs through the town, and divides Suffolk from Norfolk, and the latter was rendered navigable to Lynn, by an act of parliament, in the reign of Charles II.) 29 miles SW. of Norwich, 30 miles SSE. of King's-Lynn, and 80 NNE. of London. Market on Saturday.

Thetford, Cambridgeshire, SE. of Ely. Theydon Bois, Garnon, and Mont, Essex. three villages in Epping Forest, W. of the Rodings.

THIANCOURT, a town in the dept. of the Meurthe, 15 miles SW. of Metz.

THIBERVILLE, a town in the dept. of the Eure, 9 miles E. of Lisieux.

THIBET, or GREAT THIBET, a large country of Asia, considered by most geographers as part of Tartary, and extending from the source of the Indus to the borders of China, and from Hindoostan to the deserts of Cobio. The length from E. to W. is about 1500 miles, and the breadth unequal and not known. This country is one of the highest in Asia; it being a part of that elevated tract which gives rise not only to the rivers of India and China, but also to those of Siberia and Tartary. It is divided into three parts, Upper, Middle, and Lower Thibet. The Upper lies toward the sources of the Ganges and Burrampooter; the Middle is that in which Lassa, the capital, is situated; and the Lower, that which borders on China. Little Thibet is situated between Upper Thibet and Cashgur, and is rather a dependency of the latter than of Great Thibet. Considering the exceedingly rough and sterile state of the country of Thibet, and the severity of its climate, from its wonderful elevation; it is astonishing, Major Rennel observes, to find its inhabitants in a high state of civilization; their their houses lofty and built of stone; and the useful manufactures in some degree of improvement. All these advantages they probably owe to their vicinity to the Chinese. The Thibetians are governed by the grand lama, or delai lama, who is not only submitted to by them, but is also the sovereign pontiff of numberless tribes of Tartars, in Chinese and independent Tartary. Princes, as well as the meanest of the people, are assiduous in paying their court to the great lama, and submit to the same debasing, servile ceremonies. He never returns any salute; never pulls off his hat; nor ever stirs from his seat; (a large and magnificent cushion, placed on a kind of altar, on which he sits cross-legged) he only lays his hands upon the heads of his superstitious adorers, who thereby fancy they obtain the remission of all their sins. They are persuaded that Fo lives in him; that he knows, sees, and understands all things, without asking any questions, or receiving any information; and that if at any time he does so, it is merely for form's sake, and in order to leave the infidel and ill-designing no room to complain. In a word, they believe him to be immortal, and endowed with all knowledge and virtue. Every year they come from different parts to worship, and make rich offerings at his shrine. Even the emperor of China, who is of a Tartar race, does not fail to acknowledge the lama, in his religious capacity, although, as a temporal sovereign, the lama himself is, in some respects, tributary to that emperor. The opinion of the most orthodox Thibetians is, that when the grand lama seems to die, either of old age or infirmity, his soul, in reality, only quits a crazy habitation, to look for another younger or better; and it is discovered again in the body of some child, by certain tokens known only to the lamas or priests, in which order he always appears. In 1774, the grand lama was an infant, who had been discovered some time before by the tayoshoo lama, who, in authority and sanctity of character, is next to the grand lama, and, during his minority, acts as chief. These lamas, who form the most numerous, as well as the most powerful body in the state, appear to have the priesthood entirely in their hands; and moreover, they fill up many monastic orders, which are held in great veneration among them. The residence of the grand lama is at Pateli, or Putala, a vast palace, on a mountain, near the banks of the Burrampooter, about 7 miles from Lassa. Besides the great lama, who is the head of their religion, and sovereign of Thibet, there are other princes in the country, who have cities and many subjects under them; these wear the lama habit, and are called officers of the great lama, though they are only subject to him as far as they themselves please. In many places are large pagodas, in which the lamas of distinction reside. The religion of Thibet has, in some respects, a great affinity to that of the Indian Bramins. The Thibetians have a great veneration for the cow, and highly respect also the waters of the Ganges, the source of which they believe to be in heaven. The Sunniassees, or Indian pilgrims, often visit Thibet as a holy place; and the lama always maintains a body of 2 or 300 of them in his pay. The temporal government of Thibet, however, has not been always possessed by the great lama. At the beginning of the last century, Thibet was ruled by a king, and the territories subject to the great lama were not very large. The fort of Dellamacolla, which commands the principal pass through the Bootan Mountains, being taken by storm by captain Jones, in 1773; the fame of this exploit induced the Thibetians to send an embassy to the Bengal government, and in 1774, the English East India Company made a treaty with the lama.

Thickbroom, Staffordshire, SE. of Lichfield, on a river that runs into the Tame. Thickley, E. and W. Durham, S. of Bishop Auckland.

THIEL, or TIEL, a town of Guelderland, situated in a small island called TIELER WEERT, on the N. side of the Waal, in a marshy country, the air of which is reckoned unwholesome, 15 miles W. of Nimeguen.

THIERS, a town in the dept. of the Puy de Dome, famous for its statuary, hardware, cutlery, paper, cards, &c. It is so remarkably seated on the side of a hill, that on which ever side it is viewed, one half of the town is never seen, from which circumstance it is said to derive its name, and is 22 miles E. of Clermont.

Thimbleby, Lincoln. NW. of Horn-castle. Thimblethorp, Norfolk, near Repeham. Thimum, Northumb. in Herteshewd. Tbingdon, or Findon, Northamptonshire, NW. of Higham Ferrers. Thingwall, Cheshire, near Woodchurch, between the Dee and Mersey. Thinost, Yorkshire, near Northallerton.

THIONVILLE, a considerable town in the dept. of Moselle, once the residence of the kings of Austrasia. It was taken by by the Prince of Conde, in 1643, after the battle of Rocroy, and finally ceded to France by the treaty of the Pyrenees. It is advantageously seated on the river Moselle, over which it has a bridge, defended by a horn-work, 14 miles N. of Metz, and 195 NNE. of Paris.

Thirkleby, Yorkf. near Thirsk. Thirkleby, Yorkf. NE. of Northallerton. Thirlesby, Yorkf. SW. of Helmesley. Thirlesby, Yorkshire, NE. of Thirsk. Thirwall-Castle, Northumberland, NE. of Brantton, on the Picts' Wall, where it crosses the Tappin, near the Irthing, on the borders of Cumberland. Here the Scots made gaps in the wall to force their passage into England, from which gaps, this part of it was called Thirlwall; the Saxon signifying the same as the words murus perforatus, in Latin. The castle which stands close by the N. side of the wall, is about 20 yards long and 12 broad, with walls 9 feet thick; it has been curiously vaulted underneath, and on the top are 6 little turrets. The floor of one of the apartments was lately cleared, and discovered to be of singular construction, consisting of 3 tiers of flags, laid upon sand. The only light admitted, is through apertures as narrow as those in the stair-case of ancient castles. The whole structure, indeed, carries the appearance of a horrid, gloomy dungeon.

* THIRSK, a small town in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, with a spacious market-place. It is 20 miles NW. of York, and 220 N. by W. of London. Market on Monday.

Thirton, E. and W. Northumb. near the river Coquet, SW. of Warkworth. Thisselton, Rutland, in the road from York to Stamford. Thissendale, Yorkf. SW. of York-Woulds. Thistleton, Lancashire, NW. of Kirkham. Thistleworth; see Ipsworth.

THIVA, or STIBES, anciently THEBES, an ancient and celebrated town of Greece, in Livadia, with a bishop's see. It was formerly very large, and yet is 3 miles in circumference, but full of ruins. The present walls appear very ancient, and have square towers at convenient distances, built of hewn stone, with great regularity and exactness. The houses are higher, and better built, than is usual in other towns of Greece. It contains 4 or 5000 inhabitants, who are half Turks and half Christians. It is now famous for a fine sort of white clay, of which they make bowls for pipes after the Turkish fashion. They are never burnt, but dry naturally, and become as hard as a stone.

Here are two mosques, and several Greek churches. The air of the country about Thebes is thick and foggy, whence the inhabitants of ancient Boeotia were accounted dull and phlegmatic. It is situated on a rising ground, between two small rivers, supposed to be the Ilmenus and Dirce of the ancients. 28 miles WNW. of Athens, and 290 SW. of Constantinople.

Thoby, Essex, in Mountnaiffing parish.

THOISSEY, a town in the department of Ain, with a handsome college. It is situated in a fertile country, near the rivers Saône and Chalerone, 20 miles W. of Bourg, and 200 SE. of Paris.

Tholtorp, Rutland, NW. of Stamford.

THOMAS, ST. an island of Africa, lying under the equator in 8 deg. E. lon. It was discovered in 1460, and belongs to the Portuguese. It is almost round, and is about 30 miles in circumference. The climate is hot, moist, and unwholesome for Europeans, although the natural inhabitants often complete a full century. The soil is well-watered with fresh rivers and rivulets, and amazingly fertile, producing the fruits of every denomination of the warm climates, in the utmost perfection, with little labour or expence. It abounds also with a variety of animals, tame and wild. The rivers, as well as the surrounding sea, are stocked with an incredible variety of fish, from the whale down to the smallest fish that swims. It consists chiefly of hills intermixed with valleys, which in their rainy, or rather foggy seasons, are constantly filled with a thick, fetid, sultry fog, intolerable to Europeans. However, it agrees perfectly well with the cattle, which are larger and finer here than on the Gold Coast of Guinea. In a word, the island might equal any spot on the globe, did the temperature correspond with the abundance of its trees, plants, shrubs, fruits, and animals, as well as the diversity and beauty of the landscapes.

Thomas, St. Cornwall, near Launceston. Thomas, St. Devonshire, SW. of Exeter. Thomas, St. Herts, 2 miles from Ickland. Thomas, St. near Stafford.

THOMAS. See TOMAR.

THOMAS, ST. a stately town or city of Hindoostan, on the coast of Coromandel, erected by the Portuguese, partly on the ruins, and partly in the neighbourhood of Meliapour, or Mailabour, once a powerful city. It was formerly, and is still inhabited by weavers and dyers, and is noted for making the best coloured stuffs in India. The excellence of the dye is attributed to the peculiar quality of the water, ter, which arises out of springs, in white, sandy ground, without any intermixture of clay. St. Thomas the Apostle was buried, it is said, here; the Portuguese pretend to show his sepulchre on the top of a neighbouring mountain, over which they have built a chapel that serves as a landmark to vessels at sea. The city had 7 gates, and was naturally very strong; yet the Moors took it after a long siege, and are still in possession. The road is very safe from April to September, when the S. and SE. winds blow, but not in the other season. It is about 3 miles S. of Madras.

THOMAS, St. an island of the West Indies, the principal of the Virgin islands, about 18 miles in circumference. It abounds with millet, manioc, potatoes, and most sorts of fruits and herbage, especially sugar and tobacco. Here are excellent kids, and a great variety of wild fowl, but from the number of people, and great plenty of money here, provisions are usually dear. Here is a safe and commodious harbour, with two natural mounds upon it, calculated, as it were, for placing two batteries for the defence of its entrance. Nearly in the centre of the harbour is a small fort, without ditch or outworks. About 50 or 60 paces W. of it the town begins, which consists chiefly of one street, with the Danish factory at the end, a large building, with convenient warehouses for the stowage of goods, and the reception of slaves, in which article they trade with the Spaniards. On the right side of this factory is the Brandenburg quarter, as it is called, consisting of two little streets, full of French refugees from Europe and the other islands, under the protection of the Danes. Most of the houses are of brick, being built and tiled in the Dutch fashion, yet but of one story, on account of the foundation, where before they dig to the depth of 3 feet, they meet with water and quicksands. The trade of this island, particularly in time of peace, is very considerable, it being the staple for such traffic as the French, English, Dutch, and Spaniards dare not carry on publicly in their own islands; and in war, the privateers commonly bring their prizes hither for sale. In 1688, the Danish factory here was attacked and plundered by the French buccaneers. Lat. 18. 22. N. lon. 64. 50. W.

THOMAS, St. a town of Cumana, in S. America, a town of Guatimala, in Mexico, a town of S. Carolina, 21 miles N. of Charles Town, and a town of the island of Cuba, 130 miles WSW. of the Havannah.

Thomas Street, in Roscommon, Connaught. Thomastown, in Tipperary, Munster.

THOMASTOWN, a town of Kilkenny, in Leinster, seated on a small river that runs into the Nore, 8 miles SE. of Kilkenny, and 58 SW. of Dublin.

THOMOND, an ancient district of Ireland, containing the present county of Clare, in Munster.

Thone, a river in Somersetshire, which passes by Taunton.

THONON, a town in the dept. of Mont Blanc, capital of Chablais, seated on the Lake of Geneva, 18 miles NE. of Geneva.

Thoralby, Yorkshire, on the Tees, S. of Stockton. Thoresby, Lincoln. near Burwell. The waters descending from the neighbouring hills join here, and form a considerable stream, which discharges itself into the ocean at Saltfleet. Thorganby, Lincolnshire, between Market-Raisin and Grimby. Thorganby, Yorkshire, between Cawood and Pocklington. Thorington, Essex, NW. of St. Oiyth. Thorington, Suffolk, S. of Blithborough. Thorkley, Northumberland, W. of Newcastle. Thorley, Isle of Wight, in West Medina. Thorley Hall, Hertfordshire, with a caufey that leads to Bishop's-Stortford. Thormanby, Yorks. SE. of Thirsk. Thormarton, Gloucestershire, near Cirencester. Thorn, Devonshire, in Thornbury parish.

THORN, a city of Western Prussia, formerly Hanseatic, the chief city of Polish Prussia, strongly fortified, and of very considerable trade, but from the river becoming wider, and consequently shallower, with other misfortunes, it has declined from its flourishing condition. Its soap and gingerbread are still in great request, and great quantities of them are exported. In 1793, the Prussian troops took possession of Thorn, from which time it has been annexed to the dominions of that king. It is seated on the river Vistula, over which is a remarkable bridge, 70 miles S. of Dantzick.

Thorn, Devon. in Thornbury parish. Thorn and Park, Yorks. W. of Scarborough. Thornaby, Yorks. SE. of Stockton-upon-Tees. Thornage, Norfolk, SW. of Holt. Thornalby, Yorkshire, SW. of Midlam. Thornay Island, Hants, at the mouth of Chichester Harbour.

THORNEY ISLAND, in a bay of the English Channel, on the coast of Sussex, at the mouth of the river Lavant. It is about about 4 miles in circumference, and has a village of the same name.

Thornborough, near Buckingham. Thornborough, Yorkf. NE. of Masham. Thornburn, Northumb. E. of Yarrow. Thornbury, Devonf. near Shepwash. Thornbury, Gloucesterf. NW. of Broomyard.

THULE. See FULA.

Thule, a river of Glamorganshire, which runs into the Lloghor, near its mouth.

THULE, SOUTHERN, a part of Sandwich Land, in the S. Atlantic Ocean, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1775. It is high and mountainous, and was entirely covered with snow in the beginning of February, which answers to August in the northern hemisphere. It lies in lat. 59. 54. S. lon. 27. 40. W. which being the most southerly land yet discovered, gave occasion for its name.

THUN, a pretty large town of Bern, in Switzerland, with a castle, where the avoyer resides. This is the place where they embark on the river Aar for Bern. It contains about 1200 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in spinning and carding silk for the manufactures at Basil, and is seated at the NW. extremity of the lake of the same name, partly in a small island and partly on a hill, 20 miles SE. of Bern.

THUN, a lake in Bern, Switzerland, about 12 miles long and 2 and a half broad. To judge by the steepness of the lofty mountains by which it is bounded, it must be very deep. The borders are richly variegated, and present several fine points of view, greatly heightened by many ragged rocks rising boldly from the edge of the water. It abounds with different kinds of fish, and the river Aar passes through it.

THUNDER BAY, a bay about 9 miles broad, at the NW. corner of Lake Huron, in N. America; so called from the frequent thunder that is heard there.

Thunderfield, Surry, near Horley. Thundersey, Essex, near Walden. Thundersleigh, Essex, SW. of Rayleigh. Thundridge, Hertford. 2 miles NE. of Ware, and S. of the river Rib. Thunock, a mile N. of Gainborough, now or late the seat of the Hickman family.

THUR, a river of Switzerland, which rises in the S. part of the county of Toggenburg, and runs into the Rhine, about 7 miles SSW. of Schaffhausen.

Thurcaston, Leicest. S. of Mountsorrel. Here they show the house where Bishop Latimer was born. Thuresby, Cumberl. between Wigton and Carlisle. Thurgartton, Nottingham. S. of Southwell.

THURGAU, a very ancient landgraviate of Switzerland, which lies along the river Thur, bounded on the E. by the Lake of Constance, on the N. by Suabia and the same lake, on the S. by St. Gal, and on the W. by the cantons of Zurich and Schaffhausen. It is the largest bailiwick in Switzerland, as well as the most pleasant. The country is extremely populous and well cultivated, containing 6 towns, with several handsome burghs, a great number of chateaux, and more than 170 villages. About one third of the inhabitants are catholics, subject, in ecclesiastical affairs, to the bishop of Constance. The territorial sovereignty belongs to the eight ancient cantons of Zurich, Bern, Lucerne, Schweitz, Underwalden, Lug, and Glaris, who send a bailiff here alternately; and since the year 1449, the cantons of Freyburg and Soleure have also obtained a seat in its criminal court. Frauenfeld is the capital.

Thurgoland, Yorks. SW. of Barnesley.

THURINGIA, a circle of Upper Saxony, forming the N. part of the landgraviate of the same name. It is about 73 miles in length, and 75 in breadth, containing 60 towns, and 674 villages. It is well watered by several rivers, and exports a great part of its natural productions, which are excellent wheat, fine timber-wood, wines, fennel, anise, saffor, horses, horned cattle, and sheep. The modern Thuringia lies nearly between the rivers Swale and Weera, but the ancient country extended to the Elbe, and comprised a large share of Franconia, Hesse, &c. In the 6th century, it was subjected by the Franks and Saxons, who divided it into N. and S. North Thuringia was, at length, annexed to Eastphalia, or the eastern part of the county of Saxony. Since the 13th century, the margraves of Meissen, who afterwards became electors of Saxony, have been in possession of the landgraviate. In the 11th century it had dukes, counts, &c.

Thurland, Lanc. a little above Hornby-Castle, on the same river. It communicates with all the late inland navigations. Thurlaston, Warwickshire, SE. of Dunmore-Heath. Thurlebar, Cornwall, near Stratton. Thurlepot, Cumberland, near Kefwick.

* THURLES, a town of Tipperary, in Munster, seated on the river Suir, which divides it into nearly two equal parts, 70 miles SW. of Dublin.

Thurleston, SE. of Derby. Thurleston, Devonshire, near Kingsbridge. Thurley, 4 miles from Bedford. Thurlmere, a river in Cumb. which runs from a lake of the same name, into the Derwent, near Kefwick. Thurlow, Magna and Parva, Suff. on the Stour, N. of Haveril. Thurloxton, Somers. NE. of Taunton. Thurlyton, Leices. NE. of Hinckley. Thurmaston, NE. of Leicester. Thurnby, SE. of Leicester. Thurnby, Westm. N. of Shapp. Thurne, Norfolk, E. of South Walsham. Thurnham, S. of Lancaster. Thurning, Huntingd. near Great Gidding and Ludington. Thurning, Norfolk, NE. of Foulsham. Thurustoe, Yorkshire, 5 miles from Doncaster. Thurvington, Suffolk, NW. of Dunwich. Thurrock, E. and W. Essex, near Gray's Thurrock. Thursby, Lincoln. E. of Alford. Thursby, Yorks. NE. of Midlam. Thursby, Cumberland, near Aikton. Thursford, Norfolk, between Holt and Great Walsingham. Thursland, Yorkshire, W. of Barnesley. Thursley, Surry, in Witley parish.

THURSO, a sea-port of Caithnessshire, situated on the N. coast, in Dunnett Bay; it has a considerable trade, and a manufactory of woollen and linen cloth. There is a salmon fishery at the mouth of the river Thurso, and the cod fishery also gives employment to many.

Thurstanefley, Dorsets. near Bridport. Thurstanton, Cheshire, on the Dee, near Hyle-Lake. Thursiborpe, Lincoln. SE. of Saltfleetby, by the sea. Thurston, Norfolk, between Loddon and Yarmouth. Thurston, Suff. S. of Pakenham. Thurwaston, Upper and Lower, Derbys. NE. of Boylston. Thurstington, Leices. TIBER, a river in Italy, which rises in the Apennine mountains, in the Florentino. It passes into the pope's territory, washes Borgo de St. Sepulchro, Citta-di-Castello, Perugia, Todi, Rome, &c. 10 miles below which last city, it falls into the Mediterranean Sea, at Ostia. Tivere is its modern name.

Tiberthwate, Lancas. N. of Fourness-Fells. Tiberton, Heref. N. of the Golden Vale. Tibshelf, Derbys. NE. of Alfreton. Tibthorpe, Yorkshire, N. of Bainton. Tichburn, Hampshire, SW. of Alresford. Tichfield, a river in Hampshire, which runs into the English Channel, E. of Hamble. Tichfield, Hants, E. of Southampton; has a bridge over the river Alre, and a good road below, called Tichfield Bay. On the site of its ancient abbey is Tichfield-House, (or rather some handsome remains of it) erected in the reign of Henry VIII. Here King Charles I. was concealed in his flight from Hampton Court, in 1647; it was then one of the seats of the Earl of Southampton, where his mother lived with a small family. Tichwell, Norfolk, W. of Burnham-Market.

TICKELL, an ancient town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, 5 miles S. of Doncaster, and 155 N. by W. of London. It gives name to an honour or distinct liberty of very extensive jurisdiction, and to which many manors owe suit and service: Market on Saturday.

Tickencote, Rutland, 2 miles and a half from Stamford, within a quarter of a mile of the great N. road. It has one of the most ancient Saxon churches in the kingdom, and the arch between the chancel and nave is remarkably so. The E. end of it is decaying. Dr. Stukeley styles it the entire oratory of Prince Peadar, the founder of the first church at Peterborough abbey. Tickenhall, Derby. SW. of Kegworth. Tickenhall, Worc. near Bewdley. Tickham, Yorks. near Sheriff-Hutton-Castle. Tickmarsh, Northamp. NE. of Thrapston. Ticknam, Somerset. near Clevedon. Tickton, Yorks. NE. of Beverley. Tiddenham, Gloucesters. near Chepstow. Tiddington, Warw. by Stratford-upon-Avon. Tide, or Tidi, a river in Cornwall, which rises near Leskard, and becomes navigable at Tidiford. About two miles lower, it washes St. Germans, and uniting with the Lynher, they both pass into the Tamar, below Saltash. Tiderington, Cheshire, in Macclesfield Forest.

TIDESWELL, a town of Derbyshire, consisting, in general, of meanly built houses, but with a large, handsome church, and a free-school. It is noted for a spring that ebbs and flows at uncertain times, twice or thrice an hour, after great rains; but in dry summers it entirely ceases. This well is reckoned one of the wonders of the Peak. It is about a yard deep, and the same in breadth; the water rises and falls about three quarters of a yard, and gushes from several cavities at once, for the space of five minutes. It is situated on a small, clear stream, which runs through the town, 22 miles NW. of Derby, and 158 NNW. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Tidmarsh, Berks, a mile from Theale and the Thames. Tidminton, Worcestershire, S. of Shipston on Stour.

TIDORE, called TADURA, or DACO, by the natives, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, one of the Moluccas, 15 miles SE. of Ternate, and W. of Gilolo. It is about 30 miles in circumference, produces flax, and abounds in spices, particularly cloves. The air is reckoned more wholesome here than at Ternate, from which island it lies about 15 miles SE. and W. of Gilolo. The woods and rocks that surround it, render it a place of defence. The Dutch have several forts on the island, though it has a king of its own, who possesses, likewise, some territory on the island of Gilolo. Lat. 1. 6, N. lon. 126. 0. E.

Tidwell, Devonshire, in Budley parish. Here is a pool fed by springs that are continually bubbling up, and so warm, that when all the neighbouring springs are frozen, these are not.

TIEL, a town of Dutch Guelderland.

TIENCHAN, a town of Asia, in Corea.

Tierkelly, in Down, Ulster, 2 miles NE. of Rathfriland, where there is a good chalybeate spring.

TIERRA-DEL-ESPIRITU-SANTO, the most western and largest island of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It was discovered by Quiros, and visited by Captain Cook, in 1774. The land is exceedingly high and mountainous, and in many places the hills rise directly from the sea. Except the cliffs and beaches, every part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Beside the Bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, on the north side of it, the isles which lie along the S. and E. coast, form several good bays and harbours. Lat. 16. 0. S. lon. 166. 0. E.

TIERRA-DEL-FUEGO, several islands at the southern extremity of America, separated from the main land by the Straits of Magellan. They take their name from a volcano on the largest of them. They are all very barren and mountainous; but from what Mr. Forster says, in his Voyage to the South Sea, the climate does not appear to be, at all times, so rigorous and tempestuous as it is represented in Anton's Voyage. Upon the lower grounds and islands, that were sheltered by the high mountains, he found several sorts of trees and plants, and a variety of birds. Among the trees was Winter's bark-tree, and a species of arbutus, loaded with red fruit of the size of small cherries, which were very well tasted. In some places there is also plenty of celery. Among the birds was a species of duck, of the size of a goose, which ran along the sea with amazing velocity, beating the water with its wings and feet. It had a grey plumage, with a yellow bill and feet, and a few white quill feathers.

At the Falkland Islands it is called a loggerhead-duck. Among the birds are also plenty of geese and falcons. The rocks of some of the islands are covered with large muscle-shells, the fish of which is well flavoured. The natives of this country are short in their persons, not exceeding 5 feet 6 inches at most, their heads large, their faces broad, their cheek-bones prominent, and their noses flat. They have little brown eyes; their hair is black and lank, hanging about their heads in disorder, and besmeared with train-oil. On the chin they have a few straggling short hairs. Those whom Mr. Foster saw, had no other clothing than a small piece of seal-skin, which hung from their shoulders to the middle of the back, being fastened round the neck with a string: the rest of their body was perfectly naked. Their natural colour seems to be an olive brown, with a kind of gloss, resembling that of copper: but many of them disguise themselves with streaks of red paint, and sometimes, though seldom, with white. Their whole character is a strange compound of stupidity, indifference, and inactivity. Their instruments for fishing are a kind of fish-giggs. They live chiefly on seal's flesh, and like the fat, oily part most. There is no appearance of any subordination among them; and from their indifference and inactivity, they seem rather content than very happy.

Tiffeld, Northamp. NE. of Towcester.

TIGAON, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, near the NW. coast of the island of Borneo. Lat. 6. 10. N. lon. 128. 42. E.

Tighe, Rutland, W. of Market-Overton.

TIGRE, a province in Abyssinia, about 200 miles in length, and 120 in breadth. It lies nearest to the market, that is, Arabia; and as all the merchandise destined to cross the Red Sea must pass through this province, the governor has the choice of all commodities, the strongest male, the most beautiful female, the purest gold, the largest teeth of ivory, &c. wherewith to make his market.

TIGRIS, a river of Asia, which rises in the mountains of Armenia, and passing by Diarbekir, Mosul, and many other cities and towns, unites with the Euphrates, when both together fall into the Persian Gulf below Bassora.

Tikeford, Bucks, near Newport.

TILBORG, a town of Brabant, 10 miles S. of Bois-le-Duc. It is noted for a manufacture of cloth.

Tilbrook, Bedf. NW. of Kimbolton.

Tilbury, Essex, near Clare-Hall and the Yealdams. Tilbury, Wilts, near War-dour Castle. Tilbury, East, Essex, by the Thames, to the E. of Tilbury Fort. It is supposed to be the place where the emperor Claudius crossed the Thames, in pursuit of the Britons. In this parish is a field, called Cave Field, in which is a horizontal passage to one of the spacious caverns in the neighbouring parish of Chadwell. Of these Camden has given a sketch in his Britannia; and he describes them as in a chalk cliff, built very artificially of stone, to the height of ten fathoms. Derham measured three of the most considerable of them, and found the depth of one of them to be 50 feet, of another 70 feet, and of a third 80 feet. Their origin is too remote for investigation. Tilbury Fort, lies more west, opposite Graveland. It is a regular fortification, planned by Sir Martin Beckman; chief engineer to Charles II. with bastions, the largest of any in England. It has a double moat, the innermost of which is 180 feet broad, with a counterscarp, covered way, ravelines, and tenailles. On the platform are mounted 106 cannon, from 24 to 46 pounders each, besides smaller ones planted between them; the bastions and curtains are also planted with guns. Here is also a high tower, called the Block House, which is said to have been built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. On the land side are two redoubts of brick; and here it is able to lay the whole country under water. The foundation of this fort is laid upon piles driven down in two ranges, one above the other, which reach below the channel of the river, and the lowermost being pointed with iron, enters the solid chalk rock which extends under the Thames to the chalk hills in Kent. Tilbury, West, Essex, on the Thames, N. of Tilbury Fort; here the four Roman præconsular ways crossed each other. In 680, this was the see of bishop Ceadda, or St. Chad, who converted the East Saxons. It is situated by the marshes, which are generally stocked with Lincolnshire and Leicestershire wethers, which are sent hither in autumn, and feed here till Christmas; and this is what the butchers call right March mutton. In this parish is a celebrated spring of alternative water, discovered in 1727. Tilbury, Berks, W. of Reading. Tilbury, Bedfordshire, near Chalgrave. Tiley, Dorsetshire, in Great Minterne parish. Tiley, Dorsetshire, near Cosmore-Common. Tilford, Surrey, SE. of Farnham. Tilgate and its Forest, Sussex, between Crawley and Slaughtam.

Till, a river of Northumberland, which runs into the Tweed, about 2 miles NE. of Coldstream.

TILLEMONT, or TIRLEMONT, a village of Austrian Brabant, anciently a considerable flourishing city, which made one fourth quarter of the assembly of the states; but it has suffered greatly by the calamities of war and by fire. It is seated on the river Geet, 9 miles SSE. of Louvain.

Tillingham, Essex, S. of Bradwell, by the sea. Tillington, Staff. between Creswell and Stafford. Tillington, Suffex, near Petworth.

TILLY, a town in the dept. of the Meuse, 9 miles S. of Verdun; a town in the dept. of Calvadoes, 19 miles W. of Caen; another town in the dept. of Calvadoes, 4 miles SSE. of Caen; a town of Brabant, 6 miles W. of Gemblours; and a town in the dept. of the Eure, 6 miles SE. of Grand Andelys.

Tilmeson, Kent, 4 miles S. of Sandwich. Tilney, and Tilney Smeth, Norfolk, in the marsh land. Tilney, Nottingham, on the Idle, N. of Redford. Tilsey, or Tildsey, Lanc. in the parish of Leigh. Tilthead, Wilts, 4 miles from E. Lavington. Till-House, Devonshire, near Rock-Bear. Tiltdown, Gloucestershire, near Dursley.

TILSIT, a large, rich and commercial town of Prussian Lithuania, containing about 600 houses and 7000 inhabitants. It consists chiefly of two long streets, of a proportionable breadth, and a contiguous suburb called the Liberty. The flat country about Tilsit, is one of the most fertile spots in the kingdom. It is situated on the river Memel, 56 miles NE. of Konigsberg.

Tilfop, Shropf. SW. of Clebury. Tilstock, Shropf. S. of Whitchurch. Tilston, Cheshire, NW. of Malpas. Tilsey, Essex, on the Chelmer, adjoining Broxted. Tilston-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire E. of Billelston.

Timahoe, in Queen's County, Leinster.

TIMAN, a town, capital of a territory of the same name, in Popayan, S. America, abounding in fruits and pastures. It is seated on a small river, 100 miles from Popayan. Lat. 1. 35. N. lon. 73. 55. W.

TIMERYCOTTA, a town and fortress of Golconda, 64 miles SE. of Hydrabad.

TIMOAN, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, with good anchorage almost all round it. It is inhabited by Malays, from whom ships may obtain wood and water. Lat. 2. 58. N. lon. 104. 35. E.

TIMOLEAGUE a decayed town of Cork, in Munster, seated on an arm of the sea, which formerly was navigable, but now is choked up with sand.

Timolin, in Kildare, Leinster.

TIMOR. See MOTIR.

TIMOR, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, in the S. of the Moluccas, and to the E. of the Island of Java; about 120 miles in length, and 37 in breadth. The principal productions are sanders, or sandal wood, wax, and honey, which the Dutch receive in exchange for coarse linens, &c. They have a settlement at Copan, a town and fortress at the W. end of the Island, erected originally by the Portuguese, but who were driven out by their implacable enemies the Dutch, in the year 1613. On the whole, the profits arising from this commerce, little more than defray the expences, and the settlement, in all probability, is continued, merely to keep out other nations. Lat. 10. 24. S. lon. 124. E.

TIMOR LAUT, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean. Lat. 1. 15. S. lon. 131. 50. E.

TIMOU, a town of Asia, in the country of Thibet, 225 miles ESE. of Lassa.

TIMOURKENG, or FORTRESS OF IRON, a town of Thibet, 60 miles WNW. of Latat.

TINCHEBRAY, a town in the dept. of Orne, 22 miles SSW. of Falaise.

Tinedale, Northumb. a valley, watered by the North Tyne, which separates it from Redefdale on the N. It was made a barony by Henry I. Several battles have been fought here, whereof memorials remain, both British and Pictish.

* TINEHALY, a town of Wicklow, in Leinster, 38 miles from Dublin.

Tineinch, or Tinnebinch, in Queen's County Leinster. Tineinch, in Carlow, Leinster.

TINEVELLY. See PALAMCOTTA.

TING, a city of the second rank of Pecheli, in China, seated near the river Tam, 107 miles SSW. of Peking.

Tinglaw, Yorkf. NW. of Wakefield. Tingrave, Devonf. near Newton Bushel. Tingrave, Bedfordf. SW. of Ampthill. Tingtweekele, or Tinchil, Cheshire. SE. of Micklehurst. Tingawick, SW. of Buckingham. Tinham, E. and W. Dorsetshire.

SW. of Corfe-Castle. Tinhead, Wiltshire, NE. of Westbury.

TINIAN, an island in the Indian Ocean, and one of the Marians. It is about 12 miles in length, and 6 in breadth. The soil is every where dry and healthy; and, being somewhat sandy, is the less disposed to rank and over-luxuriant vegetation. The land rises in gentle slopes from the shore to the middle of the island, intermixed with valleys of an easy descent and beautifully diversified with woods and meadows. The woods consist of tall and well-spread trees, and the lawns are covered with clean, uniform turf, producing fine trefoil, and a variety of flowers. There are at least 10,000 cattle here, that are all milk white, except their ears, which are brown or black. There are also a vast number of fowls, which are easily caught, and the flesh of both are exceedingly good, beside plenty of large, fierce, wild hogs, whose flesh is delicate food. In the woods are prodigious quantities of cocoa nuts, cabbage trees, as also guavaes, limes, sweet and sour oranges, water melons, and bread-fruit. It grows on all parts of the branches, is more long than round, being covered with a rough rind. It is about seven or eight inches long, and is fittest for use when full grown, but not quite ripe. There are also vegetables proper for the scurvy; such as water-melon, dandelion, creeping purslain, mint, scurvy-grass, and sorrel. This island produces also cotton and indigo, and would certainly be of great value if it were properly cultivated. There are now no inhabitants, but there were 30,000 who were taken away by the Spaniards to other islands, and particularly Guam, a little before the arrival of commodore Anson, in 1742. The climate is extremely healthful, according to the author of Anson's Voyage, by whom a very pleasing description is given of the island; but according to commodore Byron, who visited it in 1765, it is unhealthful in the rainy season, and its delightful lawns and meadows were, by that time, covered with trees and underwood so thick, that in endeavouring to force a passage through, they were entangled and cut, as if with whip-cord. There are no streams, but the water of the wells and springs is extremely good. The principal inconvenience arises from the number of muskitoes, and other kinds of flies; and there are likewise insects called ticks, which fasten upon the limbs and bodies of men, and bury their heads under their skin; with large, black ants, whose bite is very malignant, as well as other venomous reptiles and insects without number. But the worst of all is, that the road is inconvenient, and, in some seasons, there is little security for a ship at anchor. Lat. 15. 0. N. lon. 146. 0. E.

Tinkleton, Dorsetshire, SW. of Bere. Tinkley, Gloucestershire, in Nympsfield parish. Tinmore, Staffordshire, on the Tame, NW. of Tamworth.

TINMOUTH, a sea-port of Northumberland, seated at the mouth of the river Tyne, 9 miles E. of Newcastle. It has a large and stately castle, seated on a very high rock, inaccessible on the sea-side and well mounted with cannon. In this castle was formerly a monastery, of which many fine arches are yet standing, as is the gateway, tower, and the western gate; also several spacious apartments, one of which, from its large chimney, is termed the kitchen; the eastern part of the church is of most excellent workmanship, with carved ornaments on the walls and windows, all which present, on the whole, a crowded appearance of august ruins strikingly noble and picturesque. There is a bar across the mouth of the river, which is not above seven feet deep at low water. There are dangerous rocks about it, called the Black Middins; but to guide the ships by night, there are light houses set up, and maintained by the Trinity-House. Here are several salt-works, but the principal article of trade is coals. The place is now much resorted to as a watering place, during the summer months.

TINOS, anciently TENOS, an island of the Archipelago, about 17 miles long, and 8 broad, to the S. of Andros. It is mountainous, but well cultivated; the fruits are excellent, particularly melons, figs, and grapes, of which last the inhabitants make good wine; but the principal riches of this island consist in silk, of which it furnishes to the yearly amount of about 16,000 pounds; and the silk stockings and knit gloves for the ladies, which they make of it, are remarkably neat. It was lately subject to the Venetians. Tinos, which contains about 500 houses, and has a fortress on a rock, and St. Nicolo, are the principal towns; besides which, there are upwards of 50 villages.

TINTA, a town of Canas y Canches, (which is sometimes called Tinta) of Cusco, in S. America.

TINTENIAC, a town in the dept. of Ile and Vlainie, 19 miles S. of St. Maloes.

Tintern, in Wexford, Leinster.

Tintern Abbey and Little Tintern, Monmouthshire, on each side of a stream that runs into the Wye, between Monmouth and Chepstow. Tintinbull, Somersetshire, S. of Ilchester. Tinwell, Rutland, on the Welland, SW. of Stamford.

TINTO, a remarkable river of Seville, in Andalusia, whose waters are of a yellow colour, and petrifying quality. They indurate the sand, and if a stone happens to fall in and rest upon another, they both become, in the space of a year, perfectly united and conglutinated. This river withers all the plants on its banks, as well as the roots of trees, which it tinges with the same colour as its waters. No kind of verdure will come up where it reaches, nor will any fish live in its stream. It kills worms in cattle, when administered as a drink; but, in general, no animals will drink out of this river except goats, whose flesh has, notwithstanding, an exquisite flavour. These singular properties continue till other rivulets run into it and alter its nature, for when it passes by Niabla, it is not at all different from other rivers. It empties itself into the Atlantic, about 18 miles lower down, at the town of Huelva, where it is two leagues broad, and admits of large vessels, which may come up the river as high as San Juan del Puerto, 9 miles above Huelva.

TINZEDA, a town of Darah, in Africa. Lat. 27. 30. N. lon. 6. W.

TIPERA, or TIPRA, a country E. of Bengal, and bordering on Meckley; partly independent, and partly subject to Aracan. The inhabitants are said to be subject to goitres, or wens in the throat, a disease generally attributed to the water drank. A town of the same name, is laid down in the maps, as situated on the river Tipera, in lat. 24. 20. N. and lon. 92. E.

TIPPERARY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, about 52 miles in length, and from 12 to 31 in breadth; bounded on the NE. and NW. by King's County and Galway; on the E. by Queen's County and Kilkenny; on the S. by Waterford and a part of Limerick; and on the W. by Galway, Clare, and Limerick. The south parts are exceedingly fertile, and well furnished with good buildings; but the north, though to no great extent, is inclinable to be barren, and terminates in a row of twelve mountains, the highest in Ireland, and called Phelemdhe-Madina. It contains 147 parishes, 30,700 houses, and about 169,000 inhabitants. The river Suir runs through all the length of it, from N. to S. besides which, there are abundance of small rivers and brooks, on which near 50 boulding mills are counted, a much greater number than is found in any other county. The principal productions are cattle, sheep, butter, and flour. The most considerable places are Clonmel, which is the county town, Cashel, and Carrick.

TIPPERARY, a town in the county of Tipperary, Munster, 9 miles SSW. of Cashel.

TIPING, a town of Corea.

TIPSA, a town of Algiers.

Tipton, Stafford. N. of Dudley Castle, on a little river, where it runs into the Tame. Tiptrey House, Essex, SE. of the Braxteds.

TIR, a town of Chorasan, in Persia, 21 miles NW. of Herat; and a town of Faristan, in Persia, 60 miles NE. of Schiras.

TIRANO, a town of the Grisons, in the Valteline, capital of the Upper Terzero, and residence of the podesta. From the narrowness of the streets, and number of ruinous houses, its general appearance is desolate. The chief trade is in wine and silk. It is situated on the river Adda, which divides it into 2 parts, 17 miles SW. of Bormio.

Tirawley, in Mayo, Connaught.

TIREE, a small but fertile island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, lying to the SSW. of the Isle of Col, and noted for its marble quarry, and for a handsome breed of little horses. The number of inhabitants, who annually make about 245 tons of kelp, is estimated at 2416. Here are 24 lakes, great and small, which cover about 600 acres.

TIRLEMONT. See TILLEMONT.

TIRNAU, a town of Upper Hungary, containing 9 churches, and as many convents. It is situated on the river Tirnau, 20 miles ENE. of Presburg.

TIROL, or UPPER AUSTRIA, a country of Germany, in the circle of Austria, and part of the hereditary dominions of that house. It is about 150 miles in length, and 120 in breadth, and contains 12 towns, and 10 villages, which have markets. There are a great many mountains in this country, and yet it produces as much corn and wine as the inhabitants have occasion for. They have rich mines of gold, silver, lead, and several species of precious stones. The hunting of the chamois here is somewhat dangerous, on account of the rocks which they take to. In this country are included the county of Tirol Proper, the bishopric of Trent, and the bishopric of Brixen. Here are also profitable salt-pits, and medicinal springs and hot baths. It is bounded on the N. by Bavaria, on the E. by Carinthia and Saltzburg, on the S. by part of the late territory of Venice, and on the W. by Swisserland and the country of the Grisons. Inspruck is the capital.

TIROL, a town and citadel of Germany, which gives name to the county. It is 40 miles N. of Trent.

Tirrels-Hall, Essex, by Dunmow. Tirringham, Bucks, on the Ouse, NW. of Newport. Tirthington, Northumb. in Bothall manor. Tisehurst, Sussex, N. of Echingham. Tised, E. and W. Hants, between Alresford and Selborn. Tissington, Derbyshire, N. of Alborn.

TITAN, or LEVANT, an island of France, in the Mediterranean, the most eastern of the Hieres.

Titching, Surry, near Frimley and Horshill. Titcomb, Wilts, N. of Chute-Forest. Titbby, Nott. S. of Bingham. Titherington, Gloucest. near Thornbury. Titherington, Wilts, E. of the Deverels. Titherley, E. and W. Hants, NW. of Rumsey. Titherley, Dorsetst. near Chardstock.

TITICATA, or CHUCUITO, a very large island in the bishopric of Cusco, and vice-royalty of Buenos Ayres. It lies in a muddy lake of the same name, which is upwards of 60 leagues in circumference, and contains several other smaller islands. Its waters are so nauseous as not to be drank. This island was the residence of the first ynca, Mancho Capac, and is held sacred by the Indians.

Titley, Herefordshire, on the Arrow, NW. of Pembridge. Titley, Northumb. in the barony of Wark. Titlington, Northumb. NW. of Alnwick.

TITMANING, a town of Saltzburg, in Bavaria, seated on the river Saltza, 20 miles NNW. of Saltzburg. It was almost rendered desolate by the plague in 1310, and was reduced to ashes by lightning in 1571; but it has been since rebuilt.

Titon, Northamptonst. near Ravensthorp. Titseys, Surry, N. of Limpsfield. Titshall, Margaret and Mary, Norfolk, NE. of New Buckenham. Tittenbanger, Herts, 3 miles SE. of St. Alban's. Tittenley, Cheshire, SE. of Combermere. Tittensof, Staffordst. near Swinerton. Titting, Surry, SE. of Guilford. Tittleshall, Norfolk, between Rainham-Hall and Mileham.

TITUL, a town of Hungary.

* TIVERTON, an ancient, rich, and populous town of Devonshire, noted for its great woollen manufactory, particularly of kerseys; the greatest in the county next to that of Exeter. It was formerly called Twyford's Town, from two ford then over the Ex and Leman, where are now stone bridges. It has suffered greatly by fire, having been almost burnt down several times, particularly in June 1781 when 200 of the best houses were destroyed. It is now built in a more elegant taste, and they have a new church erected by subscription. The four principal streets form a commodious quadrangle, inclosing an area of gardens. The two rivers afford plenty of fish, and not only drive a great number of corn-mills, but also greatly assist in conducting the several branches of the woollen trade. It has a noble large free-school, which maintains eight scholars at Oxford and Cambridge, and is situated on a little hill, or slope, triangularly formed by the courses of the streams above mentioned; 14 miles N. of Exeter, and 161 W. by S. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday; also one on Monday for kerseys.

TIVERTON, a town of the United States, in Rhode Island, situated on the river Taunton, 15 miles SE. of Providence.

Tiverton, Cheshire, near Beeston Castle. Tivinton, Cheshire, W. of Congleton. Tivirot, or Cheviot Mountains, on the borders of England and Scotland.

TIUMEN, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolskoi, chiefly inhabited by Russians, Mahometans, Tartars, and Bucharians. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Pischma and Tura, 112 miles WSW. of Tobolsk.

TIVIOT. See TEVIOT.

TIVOLI, a town of Italy, in the Campagna di Roma. It is now wretchedly poor; it is, however, of greater antiquity than Rome itself, being the ancient Tibur, or Tobur, which Horace says, was founded by a Grecian colony. It was the favourite country residence of the ancient Romans, as Frascati is of the moderns. Near the bottom of the eminence on which Tivoli stands, are the ruins of the vast and magnificent villa built by the Emperor Adrian. Horace is thought to have composed great part of his works in this favourite retreat. In the marketplace are two images of oriental granite, representing Isis, an Egyptian deity. Near Tivoli is a celebrated cascade, a Sibyl's temple, a magnificent villa belonging to the duke of Modena, and the remarkable Lake of Solfatara. Tivoli is seated on the river Teverone, 17 miles N. by E. of Rome, and 10 NE. of Frascati.

TIVY, a river of Cardiganshire, which rises about 5 miles N. from Tregaron, and runs into the Irish Channel, about 3 miles below Cardigan.

Tixall, with its Heath, 2 miles E. of Stafford. Tixover, Rutland, in Ketton parish.

TLASCALA, a town of Mexico, formerly capital of a province of the same name. When the Spaniards first arrived here, it contained, according to Acosta, 300,000 inhabitants, with a market-place large enough to hold 30,000 buyers and sellers; but Gemelli, who was here in 1698, says, it was then become an ordinary village. It is situated on a river that runs into the Pacific Ocean, 62 miles SE. of Mexico, and 140 NW. of Vera Cruz. See ANGELOS.

TLASCALA, a province in the government of Mexico, bounded on the N. by Guasteca, on the NE. and E. by the Gulf of Mexico and Guaxaca, on the S. by the Pacific Ocean, and on the W. by Mexico Proper. Its towns and villages swarm with Indians, and it is by far the most populous country of Spanish America, the inhabitants being exempted from all services and duties to the crown, (only paying a handful of maize for each head, as an acknowledgment) in consequence of having been originally allies to Cortez, in the conquest of Mexico. The climate, soil, and produce, resemble those of Mexico Proper.

TOBAGO, the most southward of the islands in the West Indies, and the most eastward except Barbadoes. It is about 32 miles long from SW. to NE. and about 9 broad. The climate is far more temperate than could be expected from its situation so near the equator; nor does it lie in the track of those dreadful hurricanes which frequently desolate the other islands. It is agreeably diversified with hills and vales, and is equal in richness of soil and produce to any of the islands in these seas. The mould is rich and black; there is abundance of springs upon the island, and its bays and creeks are so disposed as to be very commodious for shipping. Wild hogs, peccaros, resembling swine, armadilloes, guanoes, Indian rabbits, and badgers are found here. Horses, cows, asses, sheep, deer, goats, and rabbits, were probably introduced by the Dutch, and have multiplied exceedingly. The sea is stored with excellent fish, particularly turtle of every kind, and mullets of a most delicious taste, with other kinds unknown in England. This valuable island was ceded to the English by the treaty of 1763, and to the French by that of 1783; but it was taken by the English, April 13th, 1793. Lat. 11. 10. N. lon. 60. 30. W.

TOBAGO, LITTLE, an island near the NE. extremity of Tobago, about 2 miles long, and a mile broad.

Tobberbunny, in Dublin, Leinster. Tubercorry, or Tubbercorr, in Sligo, Connaught. Taber, in Clare, Munster. Tog-Head, a high promontory, in Cork, Munster, a little to the W. of Castlehaven.

TOBOL, a river of Russia, which rises on the E. borders of the government of Upha, and runs into the Irtysh, at Tobolsk.

TOBOLSK, a considerable and populous city of Russia, formerly capital of Siberia, and at present of the government of Tobolskoi. It is divided into the Upper Town, which is properly the city, and stands very high, with a fort built with stone, in which are the governor's court, the governor's house, the archbishop's palace, the exchange, and two of the principal churches, all built of stone, and the Lower Town; both taken together, of a very large circumference, but the houses are all built with wood. It is mostly inhabited by Mahometan Tartars and Bucharians, who drive a great trade on that river. The houses are low; the Tartars that live round this town for several miles are all Mahometans, and their musti is an Arabian: in general they behave very quietly, and carry on some commerce, but practise no mechanic trades. There are also a great number of Calmuck Tartars, who serve as slaves. All the Chinese caravans pass through this town, and all the furs furnished by Siberia, are brought here, and thence forwarded to Moscow. The Russians commonly send their state prisoners hither. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Tobol and Irtysh, 800 miles E. of Moscow, Lat. 57. 30. N. lon. 68. 18. E.

TOBOLSKOI, a government of Russia, which comprehends a considerable part of Siberia, extending from lon. 76. 30. to 125. 30. E. and from lat. 55. to 78. N. Tobolsk is the capital.

TOBOSO EL, a town of New Castile, 37 miles S. of Hueta, or Gueta.

TOCANTINS, a large river of Brasil, which rises in about lat. 18. S. and runs into the Atlantic, in lat. 1. S. For about the last 100 miles before it falls into the sea, it is called PARA.

Tobridge, Somerset. W. of Taunton.

TOCAT, a considerable city of Carmania, the residence of a cadi, a waywode, wode, and an aga, who commands a thousand janizaries, and some spahis. The houses are handsomely built, but generally stand on uneven ground. The streets are pretty well paved, which is an uncommon thing in these parts. There are so many streams, that each house has a fountain. It contains about 20,000 Turkish families, 4000 Armenian families, who have 7 churches, and 400 families of Greeks, who have only one. Beside the silk of this country, they manufacture eight or ten loads of that of Persia, and make it into sewing silk. Their chief trade is in copper vessels, such as kettles, drinking cups, lanterns, and candlesticks. They also prepare a great deal of yellow Turkey leather. Tocat is the centre of trade in Natolia; for here the caravans arrive from Diarbekir in 18 days, from Sinop in 6, from Bursa in 20, from Smyrna in 27, &c. Its territory abounds in fruit and excellent wine, and it is 180 miles NW. of Erzerum, and 250 E. of Constantinople.

TOCAYMA, a town of Terra Firma, in New Granada, seated on the river Para, in a country abounding in fruit and sugarcanes. Lat. 4. 3. N. lon. 73. 50. W.

Toccotes, Yorkshire, N. of Gilsborough.

Tocholes, Lancashire, S. of Blackburn.

TOCKAY, a town of Hungary, in the country of Zimplin, celebrated for its wine, which, for strength and flavour, is preferred to all the wines of Hungary. At some distance from it are large salt-works. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Bodrog and Teisse, 90 miles NE. of Buda.

Tocklington, Gloucester, in Olveston parish. Tockwith, York. in Bolton parish. Todbere, Dorset. N. of Stourminster. Toddlewood, Northumberl. E. of Fetherston-Haugh. Todenham, Gloucester, 8 miles N. of Stow-on-the-Would, and 6 from Campden.

TODI, a town of Spoleto, in Italy, containing several churches and convents.

Todmore Bottom, Gloucesters. in Bisleigh parish. Todington, Gloucesters. NE. of Winchcombe, Tod Law, Northumb. near Eliden, is a mount on which are 3 stone columns, placed in a triangular form, 12 feet distant from each other. Each column is near 12 feet in diameter. It is supposed to have been the sepulchral monument of some eminent Danes. Todmerden, Lancas. N. of Rochdale.

TODS, a town of Virginia.

Todwick, York. E. of Sheffield.

TOELING-HOTIEN, a town of Chinese Tartary, 375 miles ENE. of Peking.

Toft, 5 miles from Cambridge. Toft,

Cheshire, 2 miles from Tableigh. Toft, Lincoln. W. of Bourn. Toft, Lincoln. on the Anken, SW. of Market-Raisin. Toft, Lincoln. on the Dun, SW. of Burton-upon-Trent. Toft, Norfolk, SE. of Watton. Toft, Warwick. near Dun church. Toft Monachorum, Norfolk, 10 miles SW. of Yarmouth. Toft Rees, Norfolk, near Rainham Hall. Toft, West. Norfolk, N. of Thetford.

TOGGA, or TODGA, a town and district of Africa, in the country of Segil-messa.

Tointons, Upper and Lower, Lincoln. SE. of Bullingbrook.

TOKENBURG, or TOGGENBURG, a county of Swisserland, depending on the abbot of St. Gal, as territorial lord, yet with a reservation of their rights and liberties. It lies among high mountains between Zurich on the E. and Appenzel on the W. is fertile in corn and fruits, abounds in numerous herds of cattle, and is divided into the Upper and Lower.

Tokenham, Wiltshire, SW. of Wotton-Basset.

TOLEDO, a considerable city of Spain, in New Castile, of which it was formerly the capital, and anciently a Roman colony. It is seated on a mountain near the river Tajo, and has an ancient wall built by a Gothic king, flanked with 100 towers. Its situation renders the streets uneven; they are also narrow, but the houses are fine, and there are a great number of superb structures, beside 17 public squares, where the markets are kept. The finest buildings are the royal castle, and the cathedral; which last is the richest and most considerable in Spain. It is seated in the middle of the city, joining to a handsome street, with a fine square before it. Several of the gates are very large, and of bronze. There is also a superb steeple, extremely high, whence there is a very extensive prospect. The Sagrario, or principal chapel, is a real treasury, in which are 15 large cabinets let into the wall, full of prodigious quantities of gold and silver vessels, and other works. There are two mitres of silver, gilt, set all over with pearls and precious stones, with three collars of massy gold, enriched in like manner. There are two bracelets and an imperial crown, dedicated to Mary the mother of Jesus, consisting of large diamonds and other jewels. The weight of gold in the crown is 15 pounds. The vessel which contains the consecrated water is of silver, gilt, as high as a man, and so heavy, that it requires, at least, 30 men to carry it; within it is another of pure gold, gold, enriched with jewels. Here are 38 religious houses, with a great number of churches belonging to 27 parishes, and some hospitals. Without the town are the remains of an amphitheatre, and other antiquities. It has an archbishop's see, a famous university, and several manufactories of silk and wool. The secret of hardening sword blades, for which Toledo was formerly so famous, has been lost, but is said to be again recovered. When one of these underwent the operation of tempering, if it was in the least notched by striking with it several violent blows on an iron head-piece, it was rejected. Two centuries ago, the inhabitants were about 200,000, but now they scarcely amount to 30,000, and it is said to be rapidly declining. Toledo is situated among rocks, eminences, and precipices, which present the image of sterility, yet several fertile and charming situations are seen about it, impenetrable to the rays of the sun. It is 32 miles SSW. of Madrid. Lat. 39. 50. N. lon. 3. 45. W.

TOLEN, a town in Dutch Zealand, in an island of the same name, partly formed by the E. branch of the Scheld, near Brabant, from which it is separated by a canal, about 10 miles in length, and 4 in breadth. It is 5 miles NW. of Bergen op-Zoom.

TOMBUCTOU, a populous kingdom of Africa, in Negroland, represented as lying in the SE. of the desert of Zahara, and W. of the empire of Cashnah. The houses in this country are built like bells, with walls of hurdles plastered with clay, and covered with reeds. They are the same in the city of Tombuctou, except a magnificent mosque of stone, and the royal palace, both of which were built after the design of a Moor, who was banished from Granada in Spain. Here are great numbers of weavers of cotton cloth; and hither the cloth, and other European merchandise, are brought by caravans from Tripoli, Barbary &c. and exchanged for ivory, slaves, senna, gold dust, dates, and ostrich feathers. The women have their faces covered, their religion being Mahometanism. They have great plenty of millet, wheat, barley, cattle, milk, and butter. Instead of money, they make use of shells and small bits of gold. The king has a guard of 3000 horsemen, armed with bows and poisoned arrows, besides foot soldiers, who wear shields and swords. He generally rides on an elephant. In the proceedings of the African Association, this place is mentioned as a luxurious, opulent, and flourishing city; subject to a severe police, and, as such, such, attracting the merchants of the most distant states of Africa. It is seated near the river Niger, in lat. 19. 59. N. lon. O. 8. E.

TONNINGEN, a town of Denmark, in Sleswick, capital of a territory of the same name. Its once noble castle was dismantled in 1734, by the king's orders, and the fortifications were demolished by the Danes and their allies, (when taken from the Swedes) in 1713 and 1714. It is seated on a peninsula formed by the river Eyder, near the German Ocean, with a commodious harbour, 25 miles SW. of Sleswick.

TONQUIN, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. by China, on the E. and SE. by China and the Bay of Tonquin, on the S. by Cochinchina, and on the W. by the kingdom of Laos. It is about 350 miles in length, and 220 in its greatest breadth, and is one of the finest and most considerable kingdoms of the East, as well on account of the number of inhabitants and the trade they carry on, as the excellency of the soil, and mild temperature of the climate. Only two winds commonly prevail here, the N. and the S.; the former blows from June, or July, to January, and the latter from January to July. The country is thick set with villages, and the natives in general are of a middling stature, and clean-limbed, with a tawny complexion. Their faces are oval and flattish, and their noses and lips of a neat form. Their hair is black, long, lank, and coarse; and they let it hang down their shoulders. They are at great pains to dye their teeth black. The country is so very populous, that many labour under extreme poverty for want of employment. The money and goods brought hither by foreign foreign ships, particularly the English and Dutch, put them in action; but one third at least of the money must be advanced before-hand by the merchants; and the ships stay here till the goods are finished, which is generally five or six months. They are so addicted to gaming, that, when every thing else is lost, they will stake their wives and children. The garments of the Tonquinese are made either of silk or cotton; but the poor people and soldiers wear only cotton of a dark tawny colour. Their houses are small and low, and the walls either of mud or hurdles daubed over with clay. They have only a ground-floor, with two or three partitions, and each room has a square hole to let in the light. They have stools, benches, and chairs; and on the side of a table is a little altar, with two incense pots thereon, which no house is without. The villages consist of 30 or 40 houses, surrounded by trees, and in some places are banks to keep the water from overflowing their gardens, where they have oranges, betels, pumkins, melons, and salad herbs. In the rainy season (from April to August, which is the most unhealthy part of the year) they pass from one house to another, by wading through the water, or by help of boats. In the only city in the kingdom, called Cachao, are about 20,000 houses, with mud walls, and covered with thatch; a few built with brick, and roofed with pantiles. In each yard is a small arched building, like an oven, about six feet high, made of brick, which serves to secure their goods, in case of fire. The principal streets are very wide, and paved with small stones. The king of Tonquin has three palaces in it, such as they are; and near them are stables for his horses and elephants. They buy all their wives, of which the great men have several; but in hard times the men will sell both their wives and children, to buy rice to maintain themselves. When a man dies, he is buried in his own ground, and if he was master of a family, they make a great feast. The first new moon in the year that happens after the middle of January, is a great festival, when they rejoice for 10 or 12 days together, and spend their time in all manner of sports. Their common drink is a kind of tea, like Chinese bohea: but they make themselves merry with arrack. At their great entertainments, they give their visitants arek, folded up in a betel leaf, daubed over with lime made into mortar. They have another great feast in May, or June, when their first harvest is got in. Their religion, which is founded on that of China, is Pagan; and yet they own a Supreme Being; their idols have human shapes, but in very different forms. They have likewise some resembling elephants and horses, placed in small, low temples, built of timber. The Christian religion was established here in 1626, by the Jesuit Baldinoty; and in 1639 there were 80,000 converts, who had built 200 churches at their own charge; it was utterly proscribed, however, in 1721, after several dreadful persecutions, attended with the imprisonment, torture, and death, of the missionaries and their catechists. The language is spoken very much in the throat, and some of the words are pronounced through the teeth; it has a great resemblance to the Chinese. They have schools of learning, and their characters are the same, or like those of China; and like them they write with a hair pencil. They have several mechanic arts, or trades, and export great quantities of their manufactures, at which they are very dexterous and ingenious. Their fruit-trees are said to excel all the rest of Asia, in the flavour and beauty of their fruit; and their elephants are reckoned the largest and nimblest in the world. The commodities are gold, musk, silks, calicoes, drugs of many sorts, woods for dying, lackered wares, earthen wares, salt, anise-seed, and worm-feed. The lackeredware is scarcely inferior to that of Japan, which is accounted the best in the world. With all their merchandise, one would expect the people to be very rich; but they are, in general, very poor, the chief trade being carried on by the Chinese, English, and Dutch. The natives, indeed, export no merchandize on their own bottoms, neither have they any vessels fit for these rough seas. The goods imported, beside silver, are saltpetre, sulphur, English broad-cloth, pepper, spices, lead, and guns. Tonquin, about seven centuries ago, was subject to China, till Din, a famous robber, threw off the yoke of servitude, and placed the crown on his own head. This independence has been the source of many cruel wars and miseries, and the families on the throne have been already changed six times. The issue of the last civil war was a treaty, by which it was agreed, that the chouab, or competitor of King Le, and his descendants, were to have the absolute command of the armies, with the greatest part of the revenues, while the bua, or sovereign, was to enjoy all the honours and external splendor of royalty.

TONSA, a river of Romania, which runs into the Mariza, near Adrianople.

TORTOLA, an island of the West Indies, and the principal of the Virgin Islands. It is about 18 miles long from E. to W. and 7 in its greatest breadth. It produces excellent cotton, sugar, and rum, and, within the last 20 years, has received considerable improvements. Their fruits, of which they have no great variety, are but indifferent, apples excepted. The entrance into the harbour is at the E. end of the island. Tortola was first settled by a party of Dutch buccanniers; these, in 1666, were driven out by others, who took possession in the name of the King of England. Protection being afforded them, Tortola was soon after annexed to the government of the Leeward Islands. Lat. 18. 30. N. lon. 63. 40. W.

Torton, Suffex, between Torrington and Arundel.

TORTONA, a town of Milan, but ceded to the principality of Piedmont. It has a good citadel, on an eminence, gives name to a district called the Tortonese, and is situated on the Scrinia, 9 miles E. of Alexandria.

TORTOSA, a large town of Catalonia, founded long before the Christian æra, and named Dordosa, and made a municipal city by Scipio. The cathedral, the royal college of Dominicans, the convent of the Carmelites, the castle, which is a mile square, but in a state of decay, and only serving as a place of residence for a governor, are the most remarkable public buildings. In its neighbourhood are quarries, and mines of silver, iron, alabaster, jasper of divers colours, and stones with veins of gold. They have a great deal of silk and oil, and very fine potter's ware, which resembles porcelain. It is seated on the river Ebro, over which it has a large bridge of boats, about 15 miles from its mouth, and 77 miles SW. of Barcelona.

TORTUGA, or TORTUGA SALADA, an island in the W. Indies, about 36 miles in circumference, and uninhabited. The E. end is full of bare, rugged, broken rocks, which stretch a little way out to sea. Near this end is a large salt-pond, within 200 paces of the sea, where the salt begins to kern in spring. There have been 20 sail of merchantmen here at a time for salt, who come hither from May to August, and find tolerably good anchorage at the SE. part. At the W. extremity there is a small harbour, with some fresh water; this part is full of low and shrubby trees. There are some, but not many goats on it, which live on the coarse grais at the E. end; and the turtles, or tortoisés, come upon the sandy bays to lay their eggs, whence this island has its name. They are of divers colours, as blackish, dark brown, light brown, dark green, light green, yellow, and speckled. This island lies near the coast of Terra Firma, 40 miles W. of the island of Margareta. Lat. 11. 30. N. lon. 64. 50. W.

TORTUGA, an island of the West Indies, about two leagues from the NW. end of the island of St. Domingo. It is about 40 miles in circumference, and has a very safe harbour, but difficult of access. It was formerly much resorted to by the French buccanniers, who fortified themselves here, being countenanced and openly supported by the government of France. Lat. 20. 10. N. lon. 72. 48. W.

* TORNESS, a town of Devonshire, the chief trade of which is the manufacture of serges, and other woollens; but here are more gentlemen than merchants, or tradesman of note. It has a spacious church, with a fine tower, above 90 feet high, a town-hall, and a school-house. Provisions of all sorts are cheap and plentiful here, particularly good fish and delicate trout. It is seated on the river Dart, (over which it has a fine bridge, and which is here pretty broad, it being but 7 or 8 miles from the sea, and the tide flowing 10 or 12 feet at the bridge) 27 miles SSW. of Exeter, and 196 W. by S. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Tottenham High Cross, a large village of Middlesex, 5 miles N. of London. It is so called from a cross, which was erected here on the place where Queen Eleanor's corpse was rested. It was formerly a column of wood, raised upon a hillock; but was taken down about 200 years ago, and the present structure erected in its stead by Dean Wood. In this parish are 3 alms-houses. Of one of them, for eight poor people; it is remarkable, that it was erected by Balthazar Zanches, a Spaniard, who was confessor to Philip II. of Spain, with whom he came over to England, and was the first that exercised that art in this country. He became a Protestant, and died in 1602. A rivulet, called the Mosel, which rises on Muswell-Hill, Hill, near Highgate, runs through the principal street of this village. Tottenham and Park, Wilts, by Savernake-Forest. Tottenhoe, Bucks, by Whaddon. Totterdown, Somerset, near Bristol. Totteridge, Herts, near Barnet and Whetstone. Tottington, Lancast. TOULOMBA, a fortress of Hindooistan, in the province of Moultañ, situated on the S. bank of the Rauvee, 50 miles ENE. of Moultañ.

TOULON, a celebrated city and seaport of France, and the chief town of the dept. of Var. Before the revolution, it was the see of a bishop, and besides the cathedral, and other parishes, contained 9 convents, a seminary, and a college. It is divided into the Old Quarter and the New Quarter. The first, which is very ill-built, has nothing remarkable in it but the Rue-aux-Arbres, which is a kind of course, or mall, and the town-house; the gate of this is surmounted by a balcony, which is supported by two termini, the master pieces of the famous Pujet. The New Quarter, which forms, as it were, a second city, contains, beside the magnificent works constructed in the reign of Louis XIV. many fine houses, among which that of the late seminary is, beyond comparison, the grandest; and a spacious, oblong square, lined with trees, and serving as a parade. The harbour, respecting these two quarters, is distinguished likewise by the names of the Old Port, or the Merchant Port, and the New Port. The Merchants' Haven, along which extends a noble quay, on which stands the town-house, is protected by two moles, begun by Henry IV. The New Haven was constructed by Louis XIV. after the designs of Vauban, as were the fortifications of the city and harbours. In the front of this haven is the rope-house, built wholly of free-stone, 620 feet in length, with three arched walks, in which as many parties of rope-makers may work at the same time; and above is a place for the preparation of hemp. The long sail-room, the dock yards, the basins, cannon foundry, armoury, working houses for blacksmiths, joiners, carpenters, locksmiths, carvers; &c. are all very extensive, and well contrived. The galleys, transferred from Marseilles some years ago, occupy at Toulon a second basin in the New Port. Many of the galley slaves are artisans, and some are merchants. They no longer sleep on board the galleys, but have been lately provided with accommodations on shore, in a vast building, newly erected for that purpose. The Old and New Harbour lie contiguous, and communicate with one another by a canal; they have also an outlet into the extensive outer road, which is surrounded by hills, and formed by nature almost circular. The entrance on both sides is defended by a fort with strong batteries. In 1707, the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene laid siege to this city, but without success. In 1721, it suffered greatly by the plague. The inhabitants were induced to surrender this city in trust to the English, in September, 1793; but the consequences were dreadful.—Their new friends, in about three months, were driven out of the place; and the precipitation with which the evacuation was effected, caused a great part of the Toulonese ships and property to fall into the hands of the enraged and implacable republicans. Of 31 ships of the line, which the English found at Toulon, 13 were left behind; 9 were burned at Toulon, and 1 at Leghorn; and 4 Lord Hood had previously sent to Brest and Rochefort with republican seamen, whom he was afraid to trust. The inhabitants are computed at 800,000. Toulon is situated on a bay of the Mediterranean, 27 miles SE. of Aix, and 388 SE. of Paris. Lat. 43. 7. N. lon. 5. 47. E.

TOULON EN CHAROLLOIS, a town in the dept. of the Saone and Loire, seated on or near the Arroux river, 15 miles NE. of Bourbon Lancy.

TOULOUSE, a city in the dept. of Upper Garonne, lately the capital of Languedoc, the seat of a parliament, and the see of an archbishop. It is the largest city in France, next to Paris and Lyons, although its population bears no proportion to its extent; containing only about 60,000 inhabitants. It was anciently the capital of the Tectosages, who made so many conquests in Asia and Greece. It was next a Roman colony, and was successively the capital of the Visigoths (who destroyed the superb amphitheatre, of which there are still some remains, the capitol, and other Roman monuments) and that of Aquitaine. The streets are mostly broad, and the walls and houses are built of brick. The town-house, a modern structure, forms a perfect square, 324 feet long, and 66 high. It is called the Capitolium, and the aldermen are termed Capitouls. Among other curiosities preserved in it, are 15 large parchment folios, delicately written and illuminated, being partly annals of the city, with portraits and names of the capitouls, and partly of the memorable events and transactions throughout the whole kingdom, commencing from the year 1288. They were drawn up originally in Latin, but under Francis I. were altered to French. The principal front occupies an entire side of the grand square, lately called the Place Royale. From its fine situation, communicating with the ocean on one side, and with the Mediterranean on the other, by the celebrated canal of Languedoc, which joins the Garonne a little below the town, Toulouse might have been a very commercial city; but the taste of the inhabitants has been, principally for the sciences and belles-lettres. Of course, here were two colleges, two public libraries, and three academies. The little commerce of Toulouse consists in Spanish wool and carpets, together with some slight silk and woollen stuffs. The bridge over the Garonne is, at least, equal to those of Tours and Orleans: it forms the communication between the suburb of St. Cyprian and the city. The quays extend along the banks of the Garonne; and it has been in contemplation to line them with new and uniform houses. Toulouse is 125 miles SE. of Bourdeaux, and 356 by W. of Paris.

TOURNAINE, a ci-devant province of France, N. of Berry and Poitou, E. of Anjou, and S. of Maine; and divided into Higher and Lower. The river Loire runs through the middle. It is about 58 miles in length, and 55 in breadth, and is watered by several rivers, very commodious for trade, and is, in general, so pleasant and fertile a country, that it is called the Garden of France.

TOUR-DE-ROUSILLON, a town in the dept. of the Eastern Pyrenees, seated near the river Tet, (on a spot where once stood a city, called Ruscino) two miles E. of Perpignan.

TOUR-DU-PIN, a town in the dept. of Isere, situated on a small river of the same name, 27 miles SE. of Lyons.

TOUR-LA-VILLE, a town in the dept. of the Channel, almost adjoining to Cherbourg. It is celebrated for a manufacture of glass.

TOURNAY, a city of Flanders, generally considered as the most ancient town of Belgic Gaul, and once the capital of the Nervii. It is, at present, a considerable place, and was lately the capital of the Tournaysis. It has several fine manufactories, and is particularly famous for good stockings. Tournay was taken by the allies, under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, in 1709, and ceded to the house of Austria, by the treaty of Utrecht; though the Dutch put in a garrison, as being one of the barrier towns. It is extremely well fortified, and is seated on the river Scheldt, which divides it into two parts, that are united by a bridge, 14 miles S. by E. of Lille, and 185 N. by E. of Paris.

TOURNON, a town in the dept. of Ardèche, seated near the river Rhone, 24 miles SSW. of Privas.

TOURNAY, a town in the dept. of the Upper Pyrenees, 9 miles SE. of Tarbes.

TOURNUS, a town in the dept. of Saone and Loire, seated on the river Saone, 13 miles S. of Chalons, and 202 S. by W. of Paris.

TOURS, a considerable city, capital of the dept. of Indre and Loire, seated on the Loire, and near the Cher. Over the former is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 15 elliptical arches, each 75 feet diameter; three of these were carried away by the breaking up of the ice in 1789. This bridge is terminated, in a line which crosses the whole city, by a street 2400 feet long, with foot pavements on each side; and lined with fine buildings recently erected. Under the ministry of Cardinal Richelieu, 27,000 persons were employed here in the silk manufacture; at present, the whole number of inhabitants is about 33,000. The red wines made here are much esteemed. Tours is 127 miles SW. of Paris.

TOURS, a town in the dept. of the Puy de Dome.

TOURVILLE, a town in the dept. of the Eure, 11 miles SW. of Pont de l'Arche.

TOUSERA, a town of Africa, in Biladulgerid, seated in a country abounding in dates, and dependant on Tunis. Lat. 32. 30. N. lon. 10. 55. E.

Towsey, Bucks, in Tame parish. Torva a river in Carmarthenshire, which runs into the Cowen at Clear.

TOWCESTER, a handsome, old, populous town of Northamptonshire, with a flourishing manufactory of lace and silk. It is situated on two streams, into which the little river Tove, or Wedon, is divided, which encompasses the town, and over which it has three bridges, 29 miles S. of Northampton, and 60 NW. of London. Market on Tuesday.

Trakiernam-Cove, in Cork, Munster.

* TRALEE, the shire town of Kerry, in Munster. Considerable quantities of herrings are taken in the bay, which, however, is so shallow, that vessels of 50 or 60 tons cannot come within a mile of the town. On the N. side there is a fine chalybeate spa. It is 144 miles SW. of Dublin.

Tralong, in Cork, Munster. Tramore, in Waterford, Munster.

TRA-LOS-MONTES, or TRA-OS-MONTES, a province of Portugal, lying on the other side of the Mountain of Marao, with respect to the province of Entre Douro e Minho, whence it had its name. It is bounded on the N. and E. by Spain; on the W. by Entre Douro e Minho; and on the S. by Beira, and a part of Leon. The valleys are fertile in wine, oil, and fruits, and abound in cattle, but, in general, it is wild, barren, and thinly inhabited. It contains 2 cities, 27 villas or towns, and 549 parishes, with about 135,800 inhabitants.

Its chief dependance is on its coal-works, which have been carried on for many years, even under the town, but now extended to the circumjacent country. It is remarkable for a very ancient church, said to be built by the Picts, and is about 9 miles SSE. of Edinburgh.

TRANI, a town of Naples, capital of Bari, decayed since the harbour has been choked up with mud. It is 104 miles ENE. of Naples.

TRANQUEBAR, a town of Hindoostan, on the coast of Coromandel, subject to the Danes, who erected a fortress here in 1621. They had previously obtained a grant of the town and a fertile territory, from the rajah of Tanjore, for an annual rent of about 720l. The territory is considerable, and full of populous villages.

The town is between two and three miles in circumference, and surrounded with a wall, and several bastions, well provided with artillery. Within the walls are 3 Christian churches, one of which is for Portuguese Catholics, (who were in possession of the town before the Danes) a large mosque for the Mahometans, and several pagodas for the Gentoos. It is seated at the mouth of one of the branches of the Couvery, 56 miles S. of Pondicherry. Lat. 11. 1. N. lon. 79. 57. E.

Transdown, in Cork, Munster.

TRANSYLVANIA, a country of Europe, formerly annexed to Hungary; bounded on the N. by Hungary, Poland, and Moldavia; on the E. by Moldavia; on the S. by Walachia and the bannat of Temeswar; and on the W. by Hungary. It is surrounded on all parts by high mountains, which, however, are not barren, and the air is healthier than that of Hungary. The inhabitants have a sufficiency of corn and wine, and there are rich mines of gold, silver, lead, copper, quicksilver, and alum. It has undergone various revolutions, but, since 1722, has been rendered hereditary to the house of Austria. The inhabitants are a mixture of Romanists, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Armenians, Greeks, and Mahometans; to which may be added, Jews and Cingars, who live in tents, and lead a vagabond life like gipsies. Its form is nearly oval; about 400 miles in circumference. The principality is governed in the name of the prince and nobility, by the diet, which meets at Hermanstadt, by summons from the prince; the government being wholly different from that of Hungary.

TRAPOLIZZA, a town in the Morea, 18 miles WSW. of Argos.

TRAPPE, LA, a once-celebrated monastery, or regular abbey, situated in a deep and woody valley, near Sees, in the dept. of Orne (Normandy.) The great object of this order (St. Benedict) was, that the monks should be mutual guards upon each other; and for this purpose, they were never suffered to be alone, except in their cells at bed time; they ate, they drank, worked, reposed, and prayed all together, in order to be a check and restraint on each other, increasing their austerities by emulation of pains and sufferings. They were likewise famous for keeping perpetual silence, unless when spoken to by their superior, or in their religious conferences, or to accuse themselves, and never tasted meat or wine, except when sick. They fasted continually, and were in all respects the most rigorous ascetics in Europe.

Tratton, Suffex, near Portsmouth, on a small stream that runs quite through the rape of Chichester, to the river Arun.

TRAVANCORE, a province of Hindoostan, extending about 90 miles along the coast of Malabar, and bounded on the N. by Mysore, and on the E. by the Carnatic. It is subject to a rajah, who is an ally of the English East India Company. Travancore, the capital, is 108 miles SSW. of Madura.

TREBISOND, or TARABOSAN, a city of Turkey, in Asia, with a Greek archbishop's see, and a harbour, seated at the foot of a pretty steep hill. The walls are almost square and high embattled, and though they are not of the first ages, they probably stand on the foundations of the ancient inclosure, from which this city obtained the name of Trapezium. They are built with the ruins of ancient structures, on which are inscriptions not legible, because they are too high. The town is not populous; for there are more woods and gardens in it than houses, and these but one story high. The harbour is at the east end of the town, but the mole built by the Genoese is almost destroyed. From the Romans, this city was taken by the Scythians, or Tartars, in the time of Valerian. Under the Greek emperors, it was erected into a principality, or empire. Alexis Comnenes took possession of it in the year 1204. In 1462, it was taken by Mahomet II. who carried David Comnenes, and all his family, prisoners to Constantinople, where they were mostly put to death. An inscription on the gate of the castle, indicates that the Emperor Justinian caused the edifices of the town to be repaired. It stands on the Black Sea, 220 miles ENE. of Erivan. Lat. 41. 0. N. lon. 40. 25. E.

TREVES, or TRIERS, a city of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, capital of an archbishopric of the same name, whose archbishop is an elector, assumes the title of archchancellor of the empire for the Gauls, and gives the first vote at the election of the emperor. The chapter consists of 40 canons, including 16 capitulars and 24 domicelli. It has 3 colleges, a cathedral, 3 collegiate and 5 parish churches, as also 13 monasteries and nunneries, with a house of the Teutonic Order, and another belonging to that of St. John. Treves has greatly suffered in the wars, and is now neither large nor populous. It is reckoned, however, one of the most ancient cities in Germany, having been a place of note of the Treviri, long before the Christian æra, and the capital of all Gaul in the time of Constantine the Great. It is situated between 2 mountains on the river Moselle, over which it has a stone bridge, in a fertile country, abounding with wine, 20 miles NE. of Luxemburg.

TREVES, or TRIERS, an electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, bounded on the N. by the electorate of Cologne; on the E. by the estates of the Elector Palatine and of Nassau; on the S. by France; and on the W. by Luxemburg and Lorrain. It is about 80 miles in length, but the breadth is uncertain. It is full of mountains and forests; but, near the rivers Rhine and Moselle, the soil is fruitful, and the country populous.

TREVES, a town in the dept. of the Gard.

Trevithin, Monmouthshire, W. of Usk. Trevethock, Cornwall, NE. of Helston.

TRIERS. See TREVES.

TRIEST, a sea-port town of Carniola, situated on the side of a hill, extending to the Adriatic, about which the vineyards form a semicircle. The streets are narrow; but there is a large square, where they keep the annual fair. The harbour consists of an inner and outer, and has been considerably improved and fortified by the Empress Maria Theresa, who also declared this place a free port; with an exception of the articles of iron, steel, copper, quicksilver, salt, gunpowder, mirrors, and crystal. The inhabitants have a good trade in salt, oil, almonds, iron, &c. brought from Laubach; and they make good wines. It is 8 miles NNE. of Caho-d'Itria. Lat. 45. 56. N. lon. 14. 4. E.

TRIFELS CASTLE, a citadel of Deux Ponts, circle of Upper Rhine, where, according to some authors, Richard I. king of England, was kept a prisoner. It is one mile SE. of Anweiler.

bridge Havens.

Trimpley, Worcester. in Kidderminster parish.

TRINCOMALE, a sea-port town of Ceylon, on the E. side, with a harbour, reckoned the best and finest in the East Indies. It is situated in a bay capable of containing a thousand vessels, where they may winter, careen, and refit, with entire safety. The citadel, built by the Dutch, has four bastions, well supplied with artillery; it is situated on a peninsula, and commands the harbour. It was taken from the Dutch by the English, in January 1782; retaken by the French in August following; and restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1783. It has been again taken by the English since the commencement of the present war. Trin-male is 70 miles NE. of Candy. Lat. 8. 45. N. lon. 81. 52. E.

Trincow, Cornwall, near Padstow.

* TRING, a pretty little town of Hertfordshire, situated on the borders of Buckinghamshire, near the Braunston canal, 22 miles W. of Hertford, and 81 WNW. of London. At little Tring, in this parish, rises one of the heads or branches of the Thames, which, leaving the county at Puttenham, runs by Aylesbury to Thame. A good market on Friday, especially for corn, of which here are large granaries.

Tringford, Herts, between Long Marston and Tring.

TRINIDAD, an island in the West Indies, of a quadrangular form, separated from Paria, in Terra Firma, by a strait about 8 miles over. The soil is fruitful, producing sugar, cotton, Indian corn, fine tobacco, cassava, and other roots, and, in general, all that is found in N. and S. America. Here are several sorts of animals, with plenty of wild hogs, fish, fowl, and fruits. The northern part of it, according to Sir Walter Raleigh, (who spent some time in examining the island, in the year 1593) is high land, but the air is said to be unhealthy, being often covered with thick fogs. It is upwards of 70 miles in length, and from 6 to 30 in breadth; and was discovered by Columbus in 1498. All the interior parts are covered with intricate and impenetrable forests. The English have lately taken this island, and still continue in possession of it.

TRINIDAD, a town of Guatemala, in Mexico, situated on the South Sea, 100 miles SE. of Guatemala. It is a very important place, because there is no other harbour on this coast.

TRINIDAD, a town of Terra Firma, in New Granada, seated on the river Magdalena, 30 miles NW. of Santa Fé. Also a town of Moxes, in Buenos Ayres; a town of the island of Cuba, 140 miles SE. of Havannah; a town of Veragua, in Mexico, 18 miles SE. of La Concepcion; and a town of Nicaragua, in Mexico, situated on the E. coast of the lake of Nicaragua, in lat. 11. 42. N. and lon. 88. 10. W.

TRINITY, or TRINITE LA, a thriving sea-port town of the island of Martinico, much frequented by shipping, the cargoes of which are sure to meet with a quick sale. During the hurricane season, ships have a safe station in this port. Lat. 14. 53. N. lon. 61. 8. W. Also a town in the dept. of the Morbihan, and a town of Piedmont.

Trinity-Parish, in Waterford, Munster.

TRINO, a town of Italy, in Montferrat, situated in a country that produces great quantities of corn, rice, and excellent cheese, 8 miles W. of Cassal.

TRINCOMALE, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, about 45 miles SSW. of Arcot, and 52 WNW. of Pondicherry. Near this place, in 1768, the troops of Hyder Ally were totally defeated by the English, under Colonel Smith, with the loss of the greatest part of their artillery.

Trip, Somersetsh. in Old Cleeve parish, by Clatworthy. Tripall, or Trippall, a river in Northumb. which runs into the S. Tyne, at Bellister Cattle, 7 miles W. of Hexham. Triplow, Cambridgeshire near Fulmer.

TRIPOLI, a city of Africa, in Barbary, capital of a territory of the same name. It is pretty large, and has a harbour, the most commodious of any along this whole coast, except Alexandria. The houses are low and mean, and the streets narrow, dirty and irregular. It was formerly very flourishing, and has now some trade in linen cloth, manufactured here, stuffs, saffron, corn, oil, wood, dates, ostrich feathers, skins, ashes, which they sell to the Europeans to make glass and soap) and particularly Christian slaves, whom they take at sea. At the W. end is a strong castle, fortified after the modern manner, and furnished with some large cannon. In the year 1685, Tripoli was bombarded by a French squadron, under Marshal d'Estrees, and the government compelled to sue for peace. It is seated on the Mediterranean, in a barren, sandy soil, which, though destitute of rivers, springs, wells, or any other water, but what is supplied by cisterns or reservoirs of rain water, produces palm-trees, delicious dates, and the lotus, a plant which supplies them with both meat and drink, 275 miles SE. by S. of Tunis. Lat. 32. 34. N. lon. 13. 12. E.

TRIPOLI, a country of Barbary, on the Mediterranean, E. of Tunis and Biledulgerid; and W. of Barca. It is about 600 miles from E. to W. but the breadth is various, from 120 to 250 miles. Some parts of it are pretty fruitful; but that toward Egypt is a sandy desert. It had the title title of a kingdom but is now a sort of regency, at the head of which is a dey, or bey, who is not merely a titular vassal to the Porte, but really under subjection and tribute. They have about 7 or 8 corsairs, only one of which can properly be fitted a ship; the rest are small galleys, poorly manned and equipped, but take, however, a great number of ships. Here are a number of villages, very poor, and thinly inhabited; but few cities or towns of consequence.

TRIPOLI, or TARABOLUS, a town of Syria, on the Mediterranean. It has no harbour but a simple road, the bottom of which is rocky, and soon wears out the cables of vessels, which are, moreover, frequently exposed to the violence of the NW. winds. The inhabitants are near 60,000, consisting of Turks, schismatic Greeks, Latins, and Jews. All the houses have fountains belonging to them, with orchards, where the nopal grows spontaneously. The commerce is wholly in the hands of the French, who have a consul here, and three commercial houses within the town. They export coarse silks, sponges fished in the road, exchanging them for cloth, cochineal, sugar, or West-India coffee. The bashaw farms the government from the Porte, on a lease of one year only, at 750 purses, or about $9,000l. per annum. In the territory about it, are a great number of mulberry-trees, and other fruits. It is situated near the mouth of a small river, called Kadisha, at the foot of Mount Lebanon, which overlooks and surrounds it on the E. S. and partly on the NW. 130 miles S. of Scandaroon, and 72 NW. of Damascus.

Trippils, Essex, near Woodford-Wells.
Trippleton, Hereford. NE. of Brampton-Brian.

TRIST, a small uninhabited island of Mexico, on the S. coast of the Bay of Campeachy, and W. of Port Royal Island, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. It is about 18 miles in circumference.

Trisull, Stafford. on the Sneftal Water, by Wolverhampton. Triswell, Nottingham. SE. of Retford.

TRITCHINOPOLY, a strong town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, garrisoned by English troops. It is 67 miles SSW. of Tranquebar.

Trithall, Cornwall, N. of Helston.
Trilington, Northumberland, N. of Morpeth.

TRIVENTO, a town of Moliso, Naples.

TROGEN, a town of Appenzel, with a manufacture of cloth, and a mineral spring.

Troham, Gloucester. a hamlet to Bisley. It is remarkable for quarries of good tiles.

TROJA, a town of Capitanata, Naples.

TROIS-RIVIERES, a town of Upper Canada, so called from three rivers, whose streams unite about a quarter of a mile below the town, and afterwards fall into the great river St. Lawrence. Under the French government it was the mart or emporium for furs and other Indian commodities. It is not very populous, though the inhabitants are wealthy, and the houses large, and richly furnished. The country round it is pleasant and fertile. It is seated on the river St. Lawrence, 55 miles SW. of Quebec.

Trokenhole, Cambridgeshire, W. of Wisbeach.

TROKI, a town of Lithuania, capital of a palatinate of the same name. It was formerly the residence of the great dukes, who afterwards removed to Wilna. It is situated among lakes, 16 miles W. of Wilna.

TRON, ST. a town of Liege, anciently named Sarcinium, or Sarcine, but named Tron, from a famous Benedictine abbey, built here about the year 657, by St. Trudon, a rich lord of the country.

Trone, Berks, in Wantage parish.

TROPEA, a town of Calabria Ultra, seated on a high rock, near the sea.

TROPFAU, a city of Silesia, the seat of the regency for the Austrian part; 40 miles N. by E. of Olmutz.

* TROWBRIDGE, a town of Wiltshire, with a considerable manufacture of broad cloth, for the most part of the fine sorts, mixed mixed with Spanish wool. It is seated on the river Were, (over which it has a stone bridge) 10 miles SE. of Bath, and 98 W. of London. Market on Saturday.

Trowell, W. of Nottingham. Troweryn, a river of N. Wales, which rises from a lake in Merionethshire, and runs into the Dee. Trowse-Newton-Hall, 2 miles NE. of Norwich.

TROY, or ILIUM, an ancient and famous city of Asia, near the Archipelago, at the foot of the Mount Ida, and opposite the Isle of Tenedos. It is well known in story, or at least in poetic fiction, for its ten years siege.

TROYES, a city in the dept. of Aube, before the revolution, the capital of Champagne, and the see of a bishop. It contained 14 churches, 4 abbeys, 10 convents, a college, and an hospital. As the stone in its neighbourhood is too tender to be employed in building, almost all the houses are of wood; which, nevertheless, produce an effect pleasing to the eye. Among the objects of curiosity are St. Stephen's, the principal church, the public library of the late Cordeliers; and the castle in which the ancient counts of Champagne resided. Its commerce, once very flourishing, and still considerable, consists in linens, dimities, fustians, flax, hemp, wax-chandlery, candles, and wine. It is seated on the river Seine, 30 miles ENE. of Sens, and 90 ESE. of Paris.

Troy House, and Michel, S. and SW. of Monmouth.

Trull, Somersetsh. SW. of Taunton. Truly, Suffex, E. of Stening. Trumpington, 2 miles from Cambridge. Here are still the ruins of the mill commemorated by Chaucer, in the Miller's Tale. Trunch, Norfolk, NE. of N. Walsham.

* TRURO, a town in Cornwall, with regular streets, a large market-house, and a spacious, old church, not inferior to any in the county for its Gothic architecture. It has the benefit of the coinage of tin, and the lord warden of the stannaries holds his parliament here. Its chief business is in shipping tin and copper ore, found in abundance in the neighbourhood. Truro is seated at the head of the river Fale, with a large, commodious wharf or quay, for vessels of about 100 tons burden, 11 miles N. of Falmouth, and 257 W. by S. of London. Well frequented markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

Trusham, Devonshire, N. of Chudleigh. Trusley, Derbyshire, E. of Boylston.

TRUXILLO, a rich and trading town of Peru, in the audience of Lima, and valley of Chimo. In its pleasant, well-cultivated, and fertile territory, are above 50,000 tributary Americans. It is seated on a small river, near the S. Sea, 6 miles S. of Guanchaco, its port or harbour, and 300 miles NNW. of Lima. Lat. 8. 1. S.

TRUXILLO, a town of Honduras, seated on a gulf of the same name, with a good harbour. It is built between two rivers, and surrounded by thick groves, but, at present, is much decayed. Lat. 15. 20. N. lon. 88. 50. W.

Truxton without, Hants, SW. of Weyhill. Tryley, Monmouthsh. N. of Abergavenny.

TSCHUTSKI, a country situated on the NE. extremity of Asia, near the NW. coast of America, being bounded by the great river Anadir on the S. The attention of the natives, like that of the wandering Koriacs, is confined chiefly to their deer, with which their country abounds. They are a hardy race of people, and are formidable neighbours to the Koriacs of both nations, who often experience their depredations. The Russians have long endeavoured to bring them under their dominion; and though they have lost a great number of men, in their different expeditions to accomplish this purpose, they have never yet been able to effect it.

TSHETSHEN. See KISTI.

* TUAM, in the county of Galway, in Connaught, was once a city, but is now reduced to a small village. It is 20 miles NNE. of Galway, and 93 W. of Dublin.

TUBINGEN, a town of Suabia, the second in Wittenburg, with an university, a seminary for the study of the law, and a college for the nobility. In the town-house is a very curious clock. Here the ancient Palatines of Tubingen, whose origin is unknown, had their pfalz, or palatium, which stood on the spot of the present castle. It is seated on the river Neckar, between two hills, 18 miles SW. of Stuttgart.

TUCUMAN,

TUCUMAN, or TACMA, a large province of S. America, W. of Paraguay, E. of the Andes, which separate it from Chili, and N. of Cordova, in the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres. The air is hot, and the earth sandy, and almost without stones; it is, however, very well watered, producing great plenty of cotton, wax, honey; pastel for dyeing, and a variety of fruits, with roots, Indian wheat, &c. Vast numbers of cattle are bred here, and the sheep are very large and strong, (being used for carriage by the natives) but with fine wool. They have plenty of deer and other game, with lions and tigers in their woods. The original natives, who live in small villages close to one another, are somewhat civilized by the Spaniards, being covered with cotton and woollen manufactures.

TUCUYO, a town of Terra Firma, in Venezuela, in a valley of the same name. A river runs through the middle of the town and valley; the air is good, and the soil abounds in sugar-canes, cotton, and the necessaries of life. Lat 7. 31. N. lon. 67. 40. W.

Tuddenham, Suffolk, near Ipswich. Tuddenham, Suffolk, SW. of Lackford. Tuddenham, E. W. and N. Norfolk, E. of Dereham. Tuddey, S. of Durham. Tuddisford, Hants, between Lymington and Christchurch.

TVERSKOE, a government of Russia, bounded on the N. by Novogrodskoe, and on the E. by Jaroslav and Vladomir. It was once an independent sovereignty, called the Duchy of Tver; and afterwards comprised in the government of Novogo-rod. The number of inhabitants in this district has of late increased very much. The country produces plenty of grain, hemp, flax, and vegetables. Its forests yield oak, birch, alder, &c. and here are vast numbers of wild and tame quadrupeds, with a variety of birds, eagles, falcons, cranes, &c. Beside the fishes common to most lakes and rivers, there is a fish which is peculiar to the waters of these northern regions. It is called the sterlet, the acipenser ruthenus, of Linnæus, and is a species of sturgeon, highly esteemed for the flavour and delicacy of its flesh, and for its roe, of which the finest caviare is made.

TVER, a considerable commercial town of Russia, capital of the government of the same name, and seated at the confluence of the Tverza and the Volga, along which are conveyed all the goods and merchandise sent by water from Siberia, and the southern provinces toward Petersburg. It is divided into the old and new town: the former, situated on the opposite side of the Volga, consists almost entirely of wooden cottages: the latter having been destroyed by a dreadful conflagration in 1763, has been much improved in being re-built. The empress ordered a regular and beautiful plan of a new town to be made; enjoining all the houses to be constructed according to this model. At her own expence, she raised the governor's house, the episcopal palace, the courts of justice, the exchange, the prison, and some other public edifices; and to every person who engaged to build a house of brick, she offered a loan of 300l. for a year, without interest. The money which she advanced on this occasion amounted to 60,000l. and she has since remitted one third of this sum. The streets, which are broad and long, issue in straight lines from an octagon in the centre. The houses are of brick stuccoed white, and make a magnificent appearance. The plan, when completed, was to comprise two octagons, with several streets leading from them, and intersecting each other at right angles. Here is an ecclesiastical seminary, which admits 600 students. In 1776, the empress founded a school for the instruction of 200 burghers' children; and, in 1779, an academy was also opened in this town, for the education of the young nobility of the province, at the public charge. It admits 120 students, who are instructed in foreign languages, arithmetic, geography, fortification, tactics, natural philosophy, music, riding, dancing, &c. Tver is 99 miles NNW. of Moscow.

* TUNBRIDGE, a town of Kent, consisting of houses mostly ill built, and the streets but indifferently paved. Here is a famous free-school, founded by a native of the town, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Tunbridge is seated on the river Tun, one of the five little streams of the Medway, over each of which is a stone bridge, 14 miles SSW. of Maidstone, and 30 SE. by S. of London. Market on Friday.

TUNBRIDGEWELLS, a town of Kent, 5 miles S. of Tunbridge, but in the same parish. It is much resorted to in summer, on account of its chalybeate waters. It is seated at the bottom of three hills, called Mount Sinai, Mount Ephraim, and Mount Pleasant, on which are scattered houses, orchards, and gardens; and as the country here is naturally wild, the effect of the whole is romantic and picturesque. Here are the buildings requisite for the accommodation of the visitors, with a plentiful market, and shops noted for their elegant turnery ware. About a mile and a half from the Wells, are stupendous rocks, in some parts 75 feet high, the mean height being 40; they have the appearance of the hulks of large men of war, ranged close together. Surprising cliffs and chasms are interspersed, with narrow, gloomy passages that lead through the midst of them. The water is a great deobstruent and bracer, operates by urine and perspiration, and is efficacious in cold, chronical distempers, weak nerves, and bad digestion.

Tunford, Hertford. SE. of Wormley. Tunford, or Toniford, Kent, near Thenington.

TUNCEBADRA;

TUNGEBADRA, a river of Hindoostan, which runs into the Kistnah, 7 miles E. of Rachore, in the country of Golconda.

TUNJA, a town that gives name to a district of Terra Firma, in New Granada, 30 miles SW. of Truxillo.

TUNIS, a city of Barbary (called by Diodorus Siculus, Leucon Tuneta, that is, White Tunis, perhaps from the chalky cliffs that lie round it, when viewed from the sea), and capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is in the form of an oblong square, and is rather more than 8 miles in circumference, including the suburbs. Here are five gates, and the number of houses, according to Dr. Shaw, is about 12,000. The bey's palace, where the divan assemble, the great mosque, with an exchange, a custom house, and an arsenal, are the only buildings of note. Here are 9 colleges, for students, and 86 petty schools, with doctors of the Mahometan law, partly maintained by the public. The janizaries are quartered in barracks. The harbour, which has a very narrow entrance, is defended by a castle, which is its chief defence, and the fortress of Goletta, situated on the side of a canal, but not carefully supported. In the city they have no water, but what is obtained at a mile's distance. Here are English, French, Dutch, and other European consuls, who are treated with civility and respect, the Tunisians having little of the insolent haughtiness of the Algerines, and being, by far, the most civilized nation of Barbary. Tunis has long been famous for the manufacture of linen and woollen goods, for the sale of which, there is a piazza of vast extent, near the centre of the city, which is said formerly to have contained not less than 3000 shops. The inhabitants, indeed, are more intent on trade than plundering and cruising. It is situated on a rising ground, on the W. bank of a lake, among lakes and marshes, which, however, do not render it unhealthy, (which is, by Dr. Shaw, attributed to the number of mastic and myrtle trees, rosemary, and other gummy, aromatic plants, with which they heat their ovens and baths) in lat. 36. 42. N. and lon. 10. 16. E.

TUNIS, a country of Africa, usually dignified with the title of kingdom, bounded on the N. and E. by the Mediterranean, and the kingdom of Tripoli; on the S. by several tribes of the Arabs; and on the W. by the kingdom of Algiers, and the country of Elab; extending about 200 miles from N. to S. and 120 from E. to W. This country was formerly subject to the emperor of Morocco, and afterwards, for a space of time, became a powerful and independent kingdom. In the year 1538, it was overrun by Barbarossa, and notwithstanding the endeavours of Charles V. and his successors, was made a province of the Ottoman empire, under Selim II. by Sinan, bashaw of the Levant. At present, the whole kingdom is divided into two circuits, the summer and the winter, which the bey makes in person, through his dominions, at those two seasons. It is now, therefore, considered as a republic, under the protection of the Turks; and a bashaw still resides here, although, in power and influence, he is a mere cypher. The beyship is hereditary, and independent both of the Porte and the divan, but is seldom filled up, when vacant, without violence and bloodshed. The air, in general, is healthy, but the soil in the eastern parts is but indifferent, for want of water. Toward the middle, the mountains and valleys abound in fruits; but the northern part of the bey's summer circuit is by far the most fertile, pleasant, and populous, and hath the greatest number of cities, villages, and dowers. The environs of Tunis, the capital city, are very dry, upon which account corn is generally dear. However, there are plenty of citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, grapes, and other fruits. There are also olive-trees, roses, and odoriferous plants. In the woods and mountains are lions, wild beeves, ostriches, monkeys, cameleons, roe-bucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The most remarkable rivers are the Guadilcarbar, Magrida, Mageada, and Caps. The Tunisians, in general, trade in horses, olives, oil, soap, and ostriches eggs and feathers; and they export to France, in particular, corn, oil, beans, lentils, wax, hides, and Morocco skins; receiving, in exchange, Spanish wool, Languedoc cloths, vermilion, sugar, pepper, cloves, wine, brandy, paper, hardware, iron, and steel. The Italian trade is wholly carried on by the Jews. The Turks and Moors export to the Levant woollen stuffs, lead, gold-dust, and chequins, and a vast number of bales of caps; and bring, in return, silks, calicoes, iron, alum, and vermilion. They send much the same kind of commodities into Egypt. They import, in exchange from thence, linen, cotton, rice, flax, and coffee. The number of French ships freighted at Tunis, by Turks, Moors, and Jews, Jews, amounts yearly to about 150 to the Levant, and 50 for France and Italy; as for those of the English, their number is uncertain.

TURCKHEIM, a town in the department of Upper Rhine, 3 miles W. of Colmar; a town of Mindelheim, in Suabia; and a town of Worms, Upper Rhine, situated on the Rhine, 4 miles N. of Worms.

TURCOIN, a town in the department of the North, 6 miles NNE. of Lille. It is remarkable for an unfortunate conflict, May 18, 1794, (in which the British, Austrian, Hanoverian, and other allied forces under the Duke of York, General Clairfayt, &c. were compelled to retreat with great loss) and which decided the fate of the Netherlands. The British troops alone lost upwards of 1000 men, and 43 pieces of cannon.

and after receiving the Wurway, falls into the Tanat. Turghie, a river in Carmarthenshire, which runs into the Cothey, below Capel Lapyment.

TURIN, anciently called TAURINI, a city of Italy, the capital of Piedmont, and residence of its sovereign, the king of Sardinia, with a university. It is charmingly seated on a vast plain, at the confluence of the rivers Doria and Po. It is one of the handsomest places in Italy, but the air is thick and moist in autumn and winter, on account of the thick fogs. The approaches to it are magnificent, and the environs beautiful. Most of the streets are well-built, uniform, clean, straight, and terminating on some agreeable object. No inhabitant can rebuild or repair his house but on a uniform plan, laid down by government, for the improvement of the city. The Strada-di-Po, the finest and largest in the city, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas that are at once beautiful and convenient. The royal palace consists of two magnificent structures, in a simple but noble style of architecture, joined together by a gallery, in which are several pictures, statues, and antiquities of great value. The furniture is rich and elegant, and the floors are curiously inlaid with various kinds of wood, and kept always in a state of shining brightness. The fortifications of Turin are regular, and kept in excellent repair. The citadel is a regular pentagon, consisting of 5 strong bastions, and is reputed one of the strongest in Europe. There are fine walks on the ramparts, which require two hours to pass round them. There are also very fine gardens on the side of the river Po; and the house called La Charité is remarkable, as there is room for 3000 poor people. The college of the academy is very large and well built, and has a great number of ancient inscriptions. The chief trade of the city and country is in thrown silk, which is sent to England and Lyons: some of it they manufacture into excellent stockings, and silk for furniture. Turin is the see of an archbishop, and contains 110 churches or chapels, several hospitals, and about 65,000 inhabitants. The French besieged this city, in 1706, for upwards of three months, but were totally defeated, and compelled to raise the siege by Prince Eugene and the Duke of Savoy. Lat. 45. 5. N. lon. 7. 45. E.

Turk Dean, Gloucestershire, 3 miles N. of Northleach.

TURK ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands, intermingled with the Bahamas.

The largest is situated in lat. 21. 26. N. and lon. 70. 52. W.

TURKESTAN, or TURAN, a country of Asia, bounded on the N. by deserts, on the E. by Kalmuc Tartary, on the S. by Bukharia, and on the W. by Charasm, near 300 miles in length, and not much less in breadth. It is divided between two Tartar khans, or chiefs; one of whom, residing at Tashkant, possesses the eastern part; the other, who possesses the western part, resides at Turkestan or Taraz, (situated on a small river that runs into the Sir, in lat. 44. 45. N. and lon. 69. 13. E.) The latter is generally called the khan of the Karakalpacks. In a large sense, Turkestan includes all the country between Russia, Bukharia, the Caspian Sea, and Chinese Tartary, extending not less than 700 miles from E. to W. and 350 from N. to S.

TURKEY, a very large empire, extending over part of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Turkey in Europe contains Bessarabia, Moldavia, Walachia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Romania, Macedonia, Janna, Livadia, Epirus, Albania, part of Dalmatia, the Morea, and the islands of the Archipelago. Turkey in Asia contains the countries of Irak-Arabia, Diarbeck, Curdistan, Turcomania, part of Circassia, Natolia, and Syria, with Palestine. In Africa, the Turks have still a precarious sovereignty over Egypt and part of Nubia. Constantinople is the capital of all Turkey. In general the Turks are moderate in eating, and lovers of rest and idleness; and by their haughtiness, despise manufactures, improvements, and traffic. Polygamy is allowed among them; but their wives are no more than four in number. They are charitable towards strangers, let their religion be what it will, and no nation suffers adversity with greater patience than they. The grand signior is absolute master of the goods and lives of his subjects: he assumes the titles of God upon Earth, the Shadow of God, the Brother of the Sun and Moon, the Disposer of Crowns, &c. The grand vizier is the chief in power next the emperor, with a salary of about 600,000 dollars a year, exclusive of presents and other perquisites. Here, however, it may be observed, that though the grand signior has such prodigious power, he seldom extends it to those that live a private life, for these may remain as quiet as in any other part of the world. The Turks were originally a Scythian, or Tartar nation, dwelling betwixt the Black and Caspian Seas, and became first known in the 7th century, when Herodius, emperor of the east, took them into his service; after which the Arabian and Saracen caliphs had particular bodies of them for guards, and filled their armies with them. Having gradually got the power into their own hands, several governors of this nation revolted from the caliphs. In the year 1214, Schah Soliman, prince of Nera, a town on the Caspian Sea, passed Mount Caucasus with an army of 50,000 men, making himself master of several countries and places in Lesser Asia. His grandson, Othman, in the year 1300, at the city of Karahissar, assumed the title of emperor of the Ottomans, and called his people after his own name. Exclusive of many other towns, in 1326, he took Prusa, in Bithynia, now called Bursa, which his son and successor, Orchan, made the seat of his empire. Orchan sent his 2 sons, Solyman and Amurath, on an expedition into Europe; the former of whom reduced the city of Gallipoli, and the latter took Tyridos. Amurath, succeeding his father in 1360, conquered Anlyra, Adrianople, and Philipopolis. In 1362, he instituted the janizaries, overran Servia, and fell upon Macedonia and Albania. His son and successor, Bajazet, was successful both in Europe and Asia, defeating the Christians near Nicopolis; but in 1401, he himself was routed and taken prisoner by Tamerlane. His son Amurath, distinguished himself by several important enterprises, and particularly in the year 1444, gained a signal victory over the Hungarians near Varna. Mahomet II. the greatest, or perhaps most fortunate, of all the emperors, in the year 1456, made himself master of Constantinople, reducing the whole Grecian empire under his dominion. He subdued 12 kingdoms, and took 200 towns. Bajazet II. Selim I. and Solyman I. enlarged the Turkish empire, in Europe, Asia, and Africa; but the succeeding emperors have not been so fortunate. In the succession to the empire, no regard is paid to age or birth-right, the Turks thinking it sufficient, if, in their elections, they keep to the Ottoman family. Women, however, are excluded from the throne. The number of the janizaries, who are all infantry, and the flower of the Turkish forces, is generally 40,000. The navy is laid up at Constantinople, near the arsenal, and consists of about 40 men of war, exclusive of auxiliary and hired ships, and galleys of 2, 3, and 4 benches of oars. The English trade here has for some years been greatly on the decline. In the islands, the merchants are generally French. The Turks believe believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mahomet.

TUSCANY, a sovereign state of Italy, situated between the Mediterranean, the pope's territories, the Modenese, and the state of Lucca.

It is about 115 miles in length, and 80 in breadth, exclusive of some parts distributed in the territories of Modena, Lucca, and Genoa.

It is watered by several rivers, of which the Arno is the chief.

There are several mountains, in which are found mines of divers sorts, such as iron, alum, and vitriol.

They have also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot-baths and mineral waters.

Many parts of it are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce plenty of citrons, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, olives, and other fruits.

The inhabitants apply themselves to trade, and have established divers manufactories, particularly of silks, stuffs, fine earthen-ware, and gilt leather.

This duchy is divided into three parts; namely, the Florentino, the Pisano, and the Siennese, to which some add the islands.

TWEEDSMUIR, a tract of rugged, heathy mountains, in the S. part of Peeblesshire.

Twemlow, Cheshire, on the Dane, SE. of Northwich. Twenge, Northumb. on the Wolds. Twenge, or Thwing, Yorks. W. of Burlington. Twesleton, Yorks. NW. of Ingleton. Twickbere, Devon. near Merland. Twickenham, a very pleasant village of Middlesex, seated on the Thames, with several fine houses and handsome villas. The church, an elegant Doric building, is remarkable for being the burial-place of the celebrated Mr. Pope, and his parents, to the memory of whom respectively, a monument is erected, by Warburton, and by Pope himself. The celebrated villa of Pope is now that of Welbore Ellis, lord Mendip. In Pope's life-time, the house was humble and confined: the centre building only was his residence. Sir W. Stanhope, who purchased it on his death, added the two wings, and enlarged the gardens. Lord Mendip stuccoed the front of the house, and adorned it in an elegant style. The lawn has been also enlarged. Towards the margin of the river, propped with uncommon care, stand the two weeping willows, planted by Pope himself. These trees, one of which is one of the finest of its kind, and considered as a vegetable curiosity, are as flourishing as ever. Slips of it are annually transmitted to different parts; and in 1789, the empress of Russia had some planted in her own garden at Peterburgh. The once celebrated grotto is almost brought to ruin, from the dilapidations of time, and the pious thefts of visitors. It no longer forms a "camera obscura;" the "thin alabaster lamp" no longer "irradiates the centre of it," and even the "perpetual rill that echoed through the cavern, day and night," is no longer in existence. Some gunpowder and oil-mills are on the Crane, a branch of the river Coln, which flows into the Thames, at Isleworth. It is 11 miles WSW. of London. Twicross, Leicesters. SE. of Hog's Norton. Twidall, Kent, near Gillingham. Twidnack, Cornwall, in Lant parish. Twiford, Berks, between Maidenhead and Reading, near the conflux of the Thames and the Loddon, over which last it has a mill and 4 bridges. Twiford Bucks, NE. of Bedford. Twiford, Derbyshire, in Barrow parish. Twiford, Dorset. S. of Shaftsbury. Twiford, Hants, 2 miles from Winchester. Twiford, Leices. NE. of Bilsdon. Twiford, Norfolk, near Foulsham. Twiford Bridge, Kent, near Nettled. Twiford, E. and W. Middlesex, near Wemley Green and the Brent, between Halden Green and Perivale. Twiggworth, near Gloucester. Twineham, Suffex, E. of Shermanbury. Twinstead, Suffex, E. of Castle Heningham. Twining, Gloucest. 3 miles N. of Tewkesbury. In this parish, on the top of a little head of land, which stands on a great eminence above the meadows next the Severn, is a camp, consisting of several acres of ground, and fortified all round with double entrenchments. It surveys the river for a considerable length, and commands a great extent of country. From some Roman coins found here, it is supposed to have been a Roman camp. Twitching or Tuchyn, Devon. NE. of South Moulton. Twittham, Kent, near Wingham. Twiverton, Somers. 2 miles SW. of Bath. Twivell, Northampton. between Thrapston and Kettering. Twizell Castle, Northumberland, near Grindon, S. of Northam, and near the junction of the rivers Till and Tweed. Valence, Essex, near Dagenham.

VALENCE, a city in the department of Drome, before the revolution, the see of a bishop, and capital of a district, called the Valentinois. Valence is seated on on the river Rhone, 30 miles N. by E. of Viviers, and 335 S. by E. of Paris.

VALENCE, a town in the dept. of Lot and Garonne, situated on the river Garonne, 12 miles SSE. of Agen.

VALENCEY, a small town in the dept. of Indre, seated on the river Nabon, 21 miles N. of Chateauroux.

VALENCIA, a province of Spain, formerly a kingdom; bounded on the E. and SE. by the Mediterranean, on the N. by Catalonia and Arragon, and on the W. and SW. by new Castile and Murcia. It is about 220 miles in length, and 54 in its mean breadth, and is one of the most populous, fertile, and pleasant countries in Spain; it is watered by 35 rivers, all of which run towards the E. In the mountains are mines of gold, silver, iron, alum, and sinopica, or blood stone: there are also quarries of marble, jasper, &c.

VALENCIA, a city of Spain, capital of the province of the same name. It is a large place, containing about 12,000 houses within the walls, besides those in the suburbs, and in the pleasure gardens round about it, which amount to much the same number. It has a university, founded in 1470, and consisting of several colleges. It was taken from the Moors in the 13th century, who were all expelled. The streets, which are narrow, crooked, and unpaved, are impassable after rain. The cathedral, which has a steeple 130 feet high, the palace of the viceroy, that of Ciuta, the monastery of St. Jerome, the exchange, and the arsenal, are all fine structures. It has several manufactories of cloth and silk, and there are several remains of antiquity. It is pleasantly seated on the river Guadalaviar, 20 miles from the sea, and 170 ESE. of Madrid. Lat. 39. 23. N. lon. 0. 10. W.

VALENCIA, NEW, a town of Caraccas, in Terra Firma, 6 miles W. of the town of Caraccas.

VALENCIENNES, a city of Hainault, in France; in the dept. of the North, founded by the emperor Valentinian. It contains about 20,000 inhabitants, and it is a very important place: the citadel, and the other fortifications, are the work of Vauban. These were constructed by order of Louis XIV. who took the town by storm, in 1677, after 17 days open trenches; and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nimeguen, in 1678. In 1793, it surrendered to the allied army, commanded by the Duke of York, after a severe siege. The grand square is handsome; but the streets are in general narrow, dark, and crooked. Beside lace, this place is noted for manufactures of woollen stuffs, fine linens, and cambrics. It is situated on the river Scheldt, which divides it into two parts, 17 miles NE of Cambrai, and 120 NE. by N. of Paris.

VALENTIA, an island which forms a fine harbour on the SW. coast of Kerry, in Munster. It is about 5 miles long, half a mile broad, and of a sufficient depth for vessels to sail through at any time of the tide.

VALENTINE, a town in the dept of Upper Garonne. It is the usual road into Spain, and is 2 miles SW. of St. Gaudens.

VALENZA, a town of Milan.

VALETTA, a city of Malta, and the capital of that island, built in 1566, by the grand master, Frederick John de Valetta. It has the happiest situation imaginable, and is wonderfully strong, both by nature and art. Its walls are of large square stones, dug out of the rock, and planted with a great number of batteries. It is seated upon a peninsula, between two of the finest ports in the world, which are defended by almost impregnable fortifications. That on the SE. side of the city is the largest; it runs about two miles into the heart of the island, and is so very deep, and surrounded by such high grounds and fortifications, that the largest ships of war may ride here in the most stormy weather almost without a cable. This beautiful basin is divided into five distinct harbours, all equally safe, each capable of containing a vast number of shipping. The mouth of the harbour is scarcely a quarter of a mile broad, and is commanded, on each side, by batteries that would tear the strongest ship to pieces before she could enter. Besides this, it is fronted by a quadruple battery, one above the other, the largest of which is level with the water's edge. The harbour on the N. side, though only used for fishing, and as a place of quarantine, is likewise well defended: and in an island in the centre of it is a castle and a lazaret. The fortifications of Malta are indeed a very stupendous work. All the boasted catacombs of Rome and Naples are trifles, compared to the immense excavations that have been made in this little island. The ditches, of a vast size, are all cut out of the solid rock, and extend many miles. The Turks besieged this city in 1656, but, after many dreadful assaults, were compelled to raise the siege, with the loss of 30,000 men. The inhabitants of Valetta are about 2000.

VALETTE, a town in the dept. of Charente, 10 miles S. of Angouleme.

VALLADOLID, a city of Leon, capital of a principality of the same name, with a university. It is embellished with handsome buildings, large public squares, and fountains, and contains 11,000 houses with fine long and broad streets. The market-place, called E. Campo, is 700 paces in circumference, surrounded by a great number of convents. There is another square in the middle of the city, surrounded by handsome brick houses, having under them piazzas, within which are shops. All the houses are of the same height, being four stories; and there are balconies at every window of iron, gilt. The town-house takes up the entire side of a square. The house of the inquisition is an odd sort of a structure, for there are no windows, but a few holes to let in the light. An academy of the belles lettres was established here in 1752. It is seated near the Douero, 52 miles S.W. of Burgos, and 95 N. by W. of Madrid.

VALLADOLID. See MECHOACAN.

VALLADOLID, or COMAYAGUA, a town of Honduras, in Mexico, on the confines of Nicaragua. It is the seat of a bishop, who takes the title of bishop of Honduras. Lat. 14. 30. N. lon. 87. 20. W.

VALLADOLID, a town of Mexico, in Yucatan, 75 miles E. of Merida.

VALLAIS, a county of Switzerland, called in the middle ages, Valesia, extending from E. to W. about 100 miles, and from N. to S. about 22. It is divided into Upper and Lower Vallais, and is bounded on the N. by the Canton of Bern, and the Lake of Geneva; on the E. by Valmaggia, and Locarno; on the S. by Milan, Piedmont, and Savoy; and on the W. by France and Piedmont. The Upper Vallais is sovereign of the Lower Vallais, and contains seven independent dixains, or commonwealths; namely, Sion, Goms, Brieg, Visp, Leuk, Raren, and Siders. Of these, Sion is aristocratical, and the others democratical. They are called dixains, because the Upper Vallais being divided into seven, and the Lower into three districts, each division is a dixain, or tenth of the whole. The Lower Vallais is divided into hailiwicks. The Vallais contains about 100,000 inhabitants, who profess the Romish religion. The bishop of Sion was formerly absolute sovereign over the greatest part of the Vallais; but his authority is now limited. He has the sole power of pardoning criminals, and signs all the warrants for executions. The money is coined in his name, and with the arms of the republic.

In his acts he signs himself Bishop of Sion, prince of the German empire, and count and præfect of the Vallais; and the seven dixains form, conjointly with the bishop, the republic of the Vallais, all the affairs of which are transacted in a diet, which consists of nine voices, and meets twice every year in the Majoria house, at Sion. At this diet the bishop presides. The republic is an ally of the thirteen cantons; having formed a perpetual alliance with Bern in 1475, and with the whole Helvetic body in 1529. The inhabitants of the Upper Vallais are very much subject to goiters, or wens, that grow from the throat, and often increase to an enormous size. Idiocy also remarkably abounds among them. A country entirely inclosed within high Alps, and consisting of plains, elevated valleys, and lofty mountains, must necessarily exhibit a great variety of situations, climates, and productions. Accordingly, the Vallais presents to the curious traveller, a quick succession of prospects, as beautiful as they are diversified: vineyards, rich pasture grounds, covered with cattle, corn, flax, fruit trees, and forests, occasionally bordered by naked rocks, the summits of which are covered by everlasting snow. The striking contrast between the pastoral and the sublime, the cultivated and the wild, naturally affects the mind of an observer with the most pleasing emotions. The productions of the Vallais vary also, according to the great diversity of climates, by which this country is peculiarly distinguished. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption; and a considerable quantity of both are yearly exported; the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile. In the plains, where the heat is collected, and confined between the mountains, the harvest is generally finished in July; whereas, in the more elevated parts, barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success; and the crop is seldom cut before November. About Sion, the fig, the melon, and all the other fruits of Italy, come to perfection. "In consequence of this singular variety of climates," says Mr. Coxe, "I tasted, in the same day, strawberries, cherries, plums, pears, and grapes, each of them the natural growth of the country." There are no manufactures of any consequence in the Vallais. The people are accounted both ignorant and indolent; so that they may be considered, in regard to knowledge and improvements, as much behind the Swiss, who are certainly an enlightened nation.

The

The peasants, having few wants, seldom endeavour to meliorate their lands, where the soil is bad; nor to draw the most advantage from those that are fertile.

VENDEN, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, situated on the Aa, 36 miles NE. of Riga.

VENDOME, a considerable town in the department of Loir and Cher, seated on the river Loir, 30 miles NE. of Tours, and 95 SW. of Paris. Before the revolution, it gave name to a country in Beauce.

VENERIE, LA. a small town of Piedmont, 3 miles NNW. of Turin. It has manufactures of wool and silk, but is chiefly noted for a magnificent palace built by Emanuel II. duke of Savoy, for a hunting seat. The adjacent country abounds with game.

VENEZUELA, a pretty populous province of Terra Firma, in S. America, lying on a gulf of the same name, about 50 miles in length. It is bounded on the N. by the Gulf of Mexico, on the S. by New Granada, on the W. by the province of St. Martha and Popayan, and on the E. by that of Cumana. Near the sea-coast are high mountains, the tops of which are barren; but the valleys are fertile, producing plenty of corn, rich pasturage, sugar, tobacco, cotton, sarsaparilla, and fruits. There are also plantations of coconuts; gold is found in the sands of the rivers, and the country abounds in game and wild beasts. They often have two crops of corn in a year. Venezuela is the capital.

VENEZUELA, or CORO, a town of Terra Firma, in S. America, situated on a bay or gulf of the same name, on the Gulf of Mexico, and which communicates with the Lake Maracaibo, by a narrow strait, in lat. 10. 35. N. lon. 68. 50. W.

VENICE, a city of Italy, one of the most celebrated in the world, and lately capital of a republic of the same name, in the Dogado, with a university. It stands on 72 little islands, though some reckon only 60, in the Gulf of Venice. The approach to the city is marked by rows of stakes, or pales, on each side, which direct vessels of a certain burden to avoid the shallows; it makes a very grand appearance at a distance, as seeming to float on the sea; or rather, with its stately buildings and steeples, rising, as it were, out of it. The marshy lake on which Venice stands, about 5 miles from the main land, is a kind of small inner gulf, separated from the large one by some islands, at a few miles distance, and which, on the appearance of an enemy's fleet can be cut away. These islands, in a great measure, break the force of the Adriatic storms, before they reach the Laguna, or Lake; yet, in very high winds, the navigation of the lake is dangerous to gondolas, and sometimes the gondoleers (as their watermen are called) do not trust themselves even in the canals within the city. This is not so great an inconvenience to the inhabitants as might be imagined; for most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another communicating with the street; by means of which, and of the bridges, a person may go to almost any part of the city, by land, as well as by water. From its insular situation Venice is strong without fortifications; and the fish, which are caught at the very doors of the houses, may be reputed a good preservative against famine. The number of the inhabitants is computed to be about 150,000. The houses are built on piles. The streets, in general, are narrow; and so are the canals, except the Grand Canal, which is very broad, and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. It is said, that there are 500 bridges in Venice, though some say only 450, great and small, and the greater part of them built of stone: but what pass for such are only single narrow arches thrown over the canals.

nals. The highest and longest is the Rialto, which, in the middle of the city, crosses the great canal, at its narrowest part, where it is only 40 paces broad. It consists also of one single arch, but a very noble one, 24 feet high; the foundation, which takes up 90 feet, rests on 12,000 elm piles; and it is every where incrustured with marble. The beauty of it is impaired by two rows of booths, or shops, which divide its upper surface into three narrow streets. At each end is an ascent of 56 steps. The view from the Rialto is equally lively and magnificent; the Grand Canal, covered by boats and gondolas (which strike the eye, however, with a mournful appearance, being all either lined with black serge, or painted black) and flanked on each side by magnificent palaces, churches, and spires. But this fine prospect is almost the only one in Venice; for, except the Grand Canal, and the Canal Regio, all the others are narrow. Some of them have no quays, and the water literally washes the houses. In rowing along these wretched canals, there is scarcely one agreeable object to cheer the sight, and the stench, which, at certain seasons, exhales from the water, is quite offensive. The only place where a person can walk with ease and safety is in the Piazza-di St.-Marco; a kind of irregular quadrangle, formed by a number of buildings, all singular in their kind; namely, the Ducal Palace; the churches of St. Mark and St. Geminiano; the Old and New Procuraties, a fine range of buildings, in which are the Museum, the Public Library, and nine large apartments belonging to the procurators of St. Mark. All these buildings are of marble. The patriarchal church of St. Mark, though one of the richest and most expensive in the world, does not strike the eye very much at first. The architecture is of a mixed kind, mostly Gothic; yet many of the pillars are the Grecian orders. The outside is incrustured with marble: the inside, ceiling, and floor, are all of the finest marble, as are the numerous pillars; and the whole is crowned by five domes; but all this labour and expence have been directed by a very moderate share of taste. The front, which looks to the palace, has five brass gates, with historical bas-relievos; over the principal gate are placed the four famous bronze horses, said to be the workmanship of Lycippus; they were given to the emperor Nero by Tiridates, king of Armenia: the fiery spirit of their countenances, and their animated attitudes, are perfectly agreeable to their original destination, of being harnessed to the chariot of the sun. Nero placed them on the triumphal arch consecrated to him: they were removed to Constantinople, placed in the Hippodrome, by Constantine, and remained there till the taking of Constantinople by the French and Venetians, in the beginning of the 13th century, when they were conveyed to Venice. The treasury of St. Mark is very rich in jewels and relics. The ducal palace is an immense building, partly Gothic and partly modern, and mostly of marble. Besides the apartments of the doge, there are halls and chambers for the senate, and all the different councils and tribunals. The principal entrance is by a spacious stair, called the Giant's Stair, on account of two colossal statues, in white marble, of Mars and Neptune, placed at the top. Under the portico are the gaping mouths of lions, to receive anonymous letters, informations of treasonable practices, and accusations of magistrates for abuses in office. From the palace is a covered bridge of communication to a state prison, on the other side of the canal: prisoners pass to and from the courts over this bridge, which is named Ponte del Sospiri, the Bridge of Sighs. The apartments of the ducal palace, as well as the churches and convents, are ornamented by Titian, Paul Veronese, Tintoret, Palma, the Bassians, &c. with paintings which far surpass those of Rome itself. Within the palace is a little arsenal, which communicates with the hall of the great council. Here a great number of muskets are kept, ready charged, with which the nobles may arm themselves on any sudden insurrection. The lower gallery, or piazza, under the palace is called the Broglio. In this the noble Venetians walk and converse: it is only here, and at council, that they have opportunities of meeting together; for they seldom visit openly, or in a family way, at each others houses; and secret meetings would give umbrage to the state inquisitors; they chuse, therefore, to transact their business on this public walk. People of inferior rank seldom remain on the Broglio, for any length of time, when the nobility are there. There is an opening from St. Mark's Place to the sea, on which stand two lofty pillars of granite. Criminals, condemned to suffer death privately, are executed between these two pillars. The arsenal of Venice is a fortification of between two and three miles in compass: it is at once a dock-yard, and a vast repository for naval and military stores. Here the Venetians build their their ships, cast their cannon, make their cables, sails, anchors, &c. The Venetians have a flourishing trade in silk manufactures, bone-lace, all sorts of glasses and mirrors, which make their principal employments. The sons are generally of the same business as the father. The handsome structure, called Il Fontica-di-Tedeschi, containing 500 rooms, is that where the German merchants lay their commodities. There are two academies of paintings, to which belong very skilful masters. Provisions are in great plenty at Venice, but the spring water being very indifferent, almost every house has a cistern, into which the rain water is conveyed from the roof, and clarified by being filtered through sand. Venice contains 70 parish churches, besides others; 54 convents of monks; 26 nunneries; 17 rich hospitals; 18 oratories; 40 religious fraternities, with their chapels; 53 squares, &c. It is 70 miles E. by N. of Mantua, and 140 E. of Milan. Lat. 45. 26. N. lon. 12. 10. E.

VENICE, a republic of Italy, which comprehends the following provinces; the Dogado, Paduano, Vicentino, Veronese, Bresciano, Bergauo, Cremasco, Polesino-di-Rovigo, Trevisana, Feltrino, Bellunese, Cadorino, and great part of Friuli and Istria. To these may be added a part of Dalmatia, the islands of Corfu, Zante, Cephalonia, Paxu, Antipaxu, and some others. In the 4th century, when Attila, king of Huns, called the Scourge of God, ravaged the N. part of Italy, many of the inhabitants abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic Sea. As these islands are near each other, they found means to join them together, by driving piles on the side of the canals, and on which they built houses, and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. The government of the republic of Venice is aristocratic, for none can have any share in it but the nobles. The doge is elected by a plurality of voices, and keeps his dignity for life, and they make use of gold and silver balls, which are put in a vessel, and serve for balloting. Those who draw nine golden balls first, elect 40 counsellors, who draw 12 others. These elect 25 other counsellors, who draw 9 golden balls. The 9 elect 40 counsellors, who draw 11. Those that have the 11, chose 41 counsellors, who proceed to the election, till 25 votes, or more, fall upon the same person, who is then declared doge. After this election, they place the ducal cap upon his head, upon which he takes possession of the doge's palace. He never uncovers his head to any person, because he does not wear the cap in his own name, but in that of the republic. When there are any pompous formalities, a nobleman carries the sword, which is an emblem of the supreme authority; but it is not before the doge, but before the senate, to show that the power is lodged in them. The office of the doge is to marry the Adriatic Sea, in the name of the republic, which he does, by dropping a gold ring into it annually; to preside in all assemblies of the state; to have an eye over all the members of the magistracy; and to nominate to all the benefices annexed to the church of St. Mark. On the other hand, he is to determine nothing without the consent of the council; he is not to open any letter addressed to the republic, or that comes from the republic; he is not to receive any present; he is not to leave the city without permission of the states; he is not to chuse an assistant; and he is never to resign his dignity. In short, he is a prisoner in the city, and out of it he is no more than a private person. There are five councils, the first of which is composed of the doge and six counsellors, called the Signiora. The second is the Consiglio Grand, or Grand Council, in which all the nobles, who are said to be near 2000, have a voice. The third is the Consiglio-del-Pregadi, which consists of about 250 of the nobility. The fourth is the Consiglio-Proprio, whose members are called Savii Grandi, or the Grand Sages, which join to the Signiora, and consist of 28 assessors. This gives audience to the ambassadors. The fifth and last is Il Collegio-delli-dieci, and composed of 10 counsellors, who take notice of all criminal matters; and the doge himself, when accused, is obliged to appear before them. There is no appeal from this council, and it is a dreadful misfortune to be cited before it. The Venetians are Romanists, but they tolerate the Greeks and Mahometans. The Protestants are not allowed the public exercise of their religion; but they are not otherwise molested. The head of the clergy is the patriarch of Venice, who must be a noble Venetian, and is elected by the senate. This patriarch, in consequence of the policy of the senate, has scarce any power over the priests and monks, who are greatly corrupted. There is another patriarch belonging to Venice, whose authority extends over Friuli, Istria, and most of the bishops on the main land.

land. The tribunal of the inquisition at Venice is composed of the pope's nuncio, the patriarch of Venice, and the father-inquisitor; but as these had need of a bridle, they have added three counsellors to the number, without whose consent they can determine nothing. Their famous carnival begins with the year, and continues till Lent; all which time is employed in sports and diversions. Then libertinism reigns through the city, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. They all appear in masks, which no one dares venture to take off, and in this disguise they imitate the sports of the ancient Bacchanals; and the nearer Ash-Wednesday approaches, the more mad they are. The principal spot of the masquerade is St. Mark's Place, where there are sometimes above 15,000 people; and it swarms with harlequins, jesters, mountebanks, ropedancers, and puppet-shows. Even the priests and monks enjoy the diversion of the carnival; but when the diversions of the carnival are over, nothing is heard from the clergy, (who are generally accounted ignorant) but sermons on repentance. Whatever degree of licentiousness may prevail among the Venetians, jealousy, poison, and the stileto, have been long banished from their gallantry. The poorer people of Venice display some qualities very rarely to be found in that sphere of life, being remarkably sober, obliging to strangers, and gentle in their intercourse with each other. The Venetians, in general, are tall and well made; they have a ruddy brown colour, with dark eyes. The women are of an easy address, and have no aversion to cultivate an acquaintance with those strangers who are presented to them by their relations, or have been properly recommended. The number of inhabitants in the city is estimated at 160,000, of the whole state at 2,500,000, and of the annual revenue of the republic at 8,200,000 ducats. By a late remarkable revolution, the sovereignty of this celebrated republic, which has now continued upwards of 1300 years, in absolute freedom and independence, is entirely, and for ever subverted. The French, without the show of military enterprise, suddenly made themselves masters of the city, while their troops were diffusing themselves all over the Venetian territory. Soon after, Dalmatia was taken possession of by the emperor, and it is now annexed to his dominions, together with the city of Venice, and part of the late Venetian estates in Italy, by the treaty of Udina. The other part has become an accession to the new Cisalpine Republic.

VENICE, GULF OF, a sea between Greece and Italy, extending from lat. 40. to 45. 55. N. It is the ancient Adriaticum Mare, and is still called the Adriatic.

VENLO, a town of Ruremonde, in Guelderland, formerly in alliance with the Hanseatic towns. The inhabitants are mostly Romanists. In 1702, this town, with Fort St. Michael on the other side of the Maese, was taken by the army of the allies, under the Duke of Marlborough. It is seated on the E. side of the river Maese, 12 miles NNE. of Ruremonde, and 25 NW. of Dusseldorf.

VENOSA, a town of Basilicata, in Naples, containing 7 churches, and 7 convents. It is 9 miles NNW. of Acerenza.

Vent, a river in Cumberland, which runs into the S. Tyne, at Alston-Moor.

VENTA-DE-CRUZ, a sea-port town of Terra Firma, situated on the Isthmus of Darien, 20 miles N. of Panama. Here the Spaniards embark their merchandise, on the river Chagre, which they send from Panama to Porto Bello.

VENTRY, in Kerry, Munster, in the harbour, on the N. side of Dingle Bay, from which it is divided by a narrow isthmus.

VER DU GARD, a town in the dept. of the Gard, 6 miles SE. of Uzes.

VERA, a sea-port of Spain, in Granada, 32 miles SW. of Carthage.

VERA CRUZ, a sea-port of Tlascala, in Mexico, with a secure harbour, defended by a fort upon a rock of a neighbouring island, on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. This is occasionally one of the most considerable places in Spanish America for trade, it being the natural centre of the American treasure, and the magazine of all the merchandize sent from Mexico, as well as of that transported hither from Europe. It also receives a prodigious quantity of East-India goods overland from Acapulco, brought from the Phillipine Isles. Upon the annual arrival of the flota here from Old Spain, a fair is opened, which lasts many weeks, when this place may be said to become, of a sudden, immensely rich. At this period, such crowds of Spaniards arrive from all parts of America, that they erect tents for them while the fair lasts. It is surrounded by a wall, and the air is so unhealthy here, from the bogs around it, and the barrenness of the soil, that when the fair is over, there are few inhabitants, except mulattoes and blacks. It is 180 miles ESE. of Mexico. Lat. 19. 12. N. lon. 97. 25. W.

VERA CRUZ, OLD, a sea-port of Tlascala, in Mexico, 15 miles NNW. of Vera Cruz. Here Ferdinando Cortez landed with 500 Spaniards, when he undertook the conquest of Mexico.

VERAGUA, a province of Mexico, so called from a river of the same name. It is bounded on the E. by Darien, on the W. by Costa Rica, on the N. by the Atlantic, and on the S. by the Pacific Ocean. It is a mountainous and barren country, exposed to the incursions of the Indians. A good deal of gold and silver is obtained here. Conception is the capital.

VERA PAZ, a province of Mexico, bounded on the N. by Yucatan and Chiapa, on the E. by the bay and province of Honduras, on the S. by Guatemala, and on the W. by Soconusco. It is about 120 miles in length, and 70 in breadth, and abounds with mountains and thick forests of cedar, &c. in which are many wild beasts, and yet there are many fertile valleys, which feed a great number of horses and mules. The country is subject to earthquakes, thunder, and 9 months rain. The principal commodities are drugs, cocoa, cotton, wool, and honey. The capital, of the same name, but inconsiderable, is situated in lat. 15. 10. N. lon. 90. 54. W. besides which there are many towns and villages of the native Americans.

VERBERIE, a town in the department of Oise, seated on the river Oise, 10 miles NE. of Senlis.

Verby, Yorkshire, N. of Gisborough.

VERCELLI, a town of Piedmont, capital of a considerable lordship. The inhabitants are about 20,000. Here are two cathedral churches, 12 others, 2 abbies, 19 convents of both sexes, 2 priories, 2 provostships, 3 poor-houses, and 5 hospitals. It is 10 miles NNW. of Casal, and 40 NE. of Turin.

VERD, CAPE, a promontory on the W. coast of Africa, 45 miles NW. of the mouth of the river Gambia. Lat. 14. 45. N. lon. 17. 28. W.

VERD, CAPE DE, islands seated on the Atlantic Ocean, about 400 miles W. of Cape Verd, and between the 14th and 18th degrees of N. latitude. They are so called from the cape of that name, or, according to some authors, from a green plant which grows in the sea near them, resembling water-creffes, and bearing a fruit something like a gooseberry. This plant, called sargosso, is sometimes found so thick, as to impede vessels in their course. The principal are 10 in number lying in a semi circle; their names are St. Antonio, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, St. Nicholas, the Isle of Sal, Bona-Vista Mayo, St. Jago, Fuego, and Bravo; the others, 4 or more, are only uninhabited rocks. They are, in general, mountainous, and the soil is often stony and barren; nevertheless the lower hills are covered with a beautiful verdure, as well as the extensive valleys between them, but with little water, in general, except what is found in ponds and wells. Both the ground and air are so extremely hot, that one can hardly stand in places exposed to the sun. It is reckoned dangerous also to pass the night in the open air, for the great heat is often succeeded by a sudden cold, which is said to prove mortal to such as are exposed to it. Many parts produce rice, maize, bananas, lemons, oranges, citrons, pomegranates, figs, and melons; grapes also are gathered twice a year. The inhabitants, about 100,000 in number, catch and salt a great number of turtles, which they send to America; they also manufacture leather and salt, and procure from Africa, slaves, sugar, rice, cotton stuffs, ambergris, civet, ivory, salt petre, and gold. The uninhabited islands are all stocked with cows, goats, hogs, asses, mules, &c. under their particular lords. These islands are said to have been known to the ancients under the name of Gorgades, but were not visited by the moderns till the year 1499, when they were discovered by Antonio Nolli, a Genoese, in the service of the Infant Don Henry, of Portugal; at that time they were almost uninhabited. Two of them, St. Jago and St. Philip, depend immediately on the king, and are the only ones that are fortified. The governor exercises a despotic military power. Few whites are now to be seen; the influence of the climate has entirely changed the ancient Portuguese to negroes.

VERDEN, a duchy of Lower Saxony, having Bremen on the N. and W. and Lunenbourg on the E. and S. It extends both in length and breadth about 24 miles. It consists chiefly of heaths and high dry lands and forests, but there is good marsh land on the rivers Weser and Aller. In 1712, the Danes wrested this duchy from Sweden, and, in 1715, ceded it to the king of Great Britain, as elector of Hanover; which cession, in 1718, was confirmed by the Swedes. This duchy has the the same regency with that of Bremen. The inhabitants are Lutherans.

VERDEN, the capital of the duchy of the same name, in Lower Saxony, containing 4 churches, and a Latin school. It is seated on the Aller, 40 miles NW. of Hanover.

VERDUN, a town in the department of Meuse, noted for fine sweetmeats. It is seated on the river Maese, which runs through the middle, 33 miles NNW. of Toul, and 150 E. of Paris.

VERDUN, a town in the department of Upper Garonne, seated on the river Garonne, 18 miles NNW. of Toulouse.

Veres, a river in Hertfordshire, which runs into the Coln, about 2 miles SE. from St. Alban's; also a county on the S. side of the island of Jamaica. Veres, or Verse Wotton, Dorset. W. of Bridport.

VERMAND, a town in the department of Aisne, 6 miles W. of St. Quintin. Before the revolution, it was capital of a territory called the Vermandois.

VERMANTON, a town in the dept. of Yonne, 10 miles SE. of Auxerre.

Verminster, Dorsetshire, NE. of Sturminster.

VERMONT, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the N. by Canada; on the E. by the river Connecticut, which divides it from New Hampshire; on the S. by Massachusetts; and on the W. by New York. It is about 155 miles long, and 60 broad, and is divided into seven counties. A chain of high mountains, running N. and S. divides this state nearly in the centre, between the river Connecticut and Lake Champlain. The height of land is generally from 20 to 30 miles from the river, and about the same distance from the New-York line. The natural growth upon this mountain is hemlock, pine, spruce, and other evergreens: hence it has always a green appearance, and on this account, has obtained the descriptive name of Vermont, from the French Verd Mont, Green Mountain. On some high parts of this mountain, snow lies till May, and sometimes till June. The country is generally hilly, but not rocky. It is finely watered; the soil is very fertile, and there is not a better climate in the world. The inhabitants have very lately been estimated at 100,000. The bulk of them are emigrants from Connecticut and Massachusetts. The principal town is Bennington, but the assembly generally hold their sessions at Windsor.

VERNEUIL, a town in the dept. of Eure, seated on the river Aure, 22 miles SSW. of Evreux, and 65 W. of Paris.

VERNEUIL, a town in the department of Allier, 15 miles S. of Moulins.

VERNON, a town in the department of Eure, seated on the river Seine, 27 miles SSE. of Rouen, and 42 NW. of Paris.

Vernon, Cheshire, SW. of Sandbach.

VEROLI, a town in the Campagna-di-Roma, containing 8 churches, and 3 convents. It is 8 miles S. of Alatri.

VERONA, a city of Italy, in the late territory of Venice, and capital of the Veronese, fortified in the ancient manner, and defended by three castles. The inhabitants amount to near 50,000. The streets are mostly narrow, crooked, and dirty, and the houses are mean; but there is a large, handsome square, called the Piazza-d'Armi, and a pretty long, good street, called the Corso; and its outlets are more delightful than the city is within. The bishop and governor have superb palaces, but the most magnificent is that of Count Maffei. The town-house and the opera-house are fine buildings; but the most celebrated structure here is the ancient amphitheatre built by the Romans, in which are 44 rows of benches, of white marble, still entire (which will hold, according to Count Maffei, 22,184 spectators) on which the people sat. But very little, however, of this valuable piece of antiquity appears ancient, having been carefully repaired from time to time at the city's expence. The outward walls of the upper story are wanting. In the Academy of the Phil-Harmonics, is a large collection of ancient inscriptions and monuments, in the Etrurian, Punic, Egyptian, Greek, and Latin languages, either found or brought here for a great many years past. It is seated on the river Adige, on which they transport very good linen, woollen, stuffs, olives, oil, wine, sewing-silk, and medicinal plants, growing on Mount Balbo, &c. to Venice, and over which it has 4 stone bridges, the principal of which is 348 feet long; 62 miles W. of Venice, and 18 NNE. of Mantua.

VERONESE, a territory of Italy, lately in Venice, about 47 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. It is one of the most fertile countries in Italy, abounding in corn, wine, fruits, and cattle. The Venetians became masters of the city and territory, in 1409.

VERNOIS, a town and river of Russia, in the government of Rezzan.

VERREZ, a town of Aosta, Piedmont.

Verrian, Cornwall, 3 miles from Tregony, and N. of Gwyndrith Bay.

VERSAILLES, a town in the dept. of Seine and Oise, 12 miles SW. of Paris. In the reign of Louis XIII. it was only a small village. This prince built here a hunting seat in 1630, which Bassompierre calls "the paltry chateau of Versailles." Although the situation was low, and very unfavourable, Louis XIV. built a magnificent palace here, which was the usual residence of the kings of France, till the 6th of October, 1789, when the late unhappy Louis XVI. and his family were removed from it to the Tuilleries. The buildings and the gardens are adorned with a vast number of statues, canals, fountains, &c. and the water-works are much admired. The great gallery is thought to be as curious a piece of workmanship of that kind, as any in the world; and the chapel is no less admired for its fine architecture and ornaments. The gardens, with the park, are 5 miles in circumference, and surrounded by walls. There are three fine avenues to Versailles, one of which is the common road to Paris, the other comes from Seaux, and the third from St. Cloud.

VERSAILLES, a town of Kentucky, 10 miles SE. of Frankfort.

VERTUS, a town in the department of Marne, 17 miles SW. of Chalons, and 78 E. of Paris.

VERUE, or VERRUA, a town of Asti, Piedmont, seated on a hill, near the river Po. It was taken by the French in 1705, after a siege of six months, when it was reduced to a heap of ruins. It was afterwards restored to the duke of Savoy.

VERVIERS, a town of Franchemont, in Liege. The inhabitants carry on a very considerable traffic in cloth, which they export to Germany, Italy, Turkey, &c.

VERVINS, a town in the department of Aisne, noted in history for a treaty of peace concluded here, in 1598, between Henry IV. king of France, and Philip II. king of Spain. It is 110 miles NNE. of Paris.

VERULAM, the vestiges of a Roman oppidum, or town, in Hertfordshire, on the Verlam river, opposite St. Alban's. In the time of Nero it was a municipium, the inhabitants of which enjoyed the privileges of Roman citizens. By Tacitus it was called Verulamium, and by Ptolemy Urolanium. After the departure of the Romans, it was entirely ruined in the wars between the Britons and Saxons; and nothing remains of it but the ruins of walls, tessellated pavements, and Roman coins, which are still sometimes dug up. On the NE. corner is a piece of the wall, 3 yards and a half thick, composed of flints, and layers of Roman bricks. The site of it has long ago been converted into corn-fields.

Verwood, Dorsetshire, near Winborn-Abbas.

VESLE, two rivers of France, the former of which runs into the Aisne, near Veilly; and the latter runs into the Saone, opposite Varenne le Grand.

VESELIZE, a town in the department of Meurthe, seated on the river Brenon, 15 miles SE. of Toul, and 162 SSE. of Paris.

VESLY. See VEILLY.

VESOUL, a town in the department of Upper Saone, 22 miles N. of Besançon, and 200 SE. of Paris.

VESPRIN, a town which gives name to a county of Hungary, 32 miles SSE. of Raab.

VESUVIUS, a celebrated Volcano of Italy, in Naples. The first eruption of this volcano was in the year 79 of the Christian era, under Titus. It was accompanied by an earthquake, which overturned several cities, particularly Pompeii and Herculaneum. This eruption proved fatal to Pliny, the naturalist. "Great quantities of ashes and sulphurous smoke," says Dion Cassius, "were carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean into Africa, and even to Egypt. Birds were suffocated in the air, and fell down upon the ground; and fishes perished in the neighbouring waters, which were made hot, and infected by it." Sir William Hamilton mentions, that the eruption in 1767 was the 27th from the time of Titus, since which there have been 9 others; those of 1779 and 1794 being the most violent and alarming. In this last, 5000 acres of rich vineyards were destroyed, and most of the houses in the town of Torre-del-Greco buried, or rendered uninhabitable. Vesuvius is 6 miles E. of Naples.

VEVAY, a town and bailiwick of Bern, in Switzerland, with a manufacture of hats, and a large trade in cheese. Here General Ludlow retired on the restoration, and died in 1693. It is seated near the head of the Lake of Geneva, 10 miles SSE. of Lausanne.

VEUDRE, a town in the department of Allier, seated on the river Allier, 17 miles NNW. of Moulins.

VEZELAY, a town in the department of of Yonne, seated on a mountain, 20 miles S. of Auxerre, and 117 S. by E. of Paris.

UFA, one of the 41 governments of Russia, formerly included in the government of Orenburgh. It is divided into the two provinces of Ufa and Orenburgh.

UFA, a town of Russia, capital of a government of the same name. It is seated a few miles below the mouth of the river Ufa, 682 miles ESE. of Moscow.

VIATKA, a government of the Russian empire, which was formerly a province of Casan. The capital is of the same name.

Vic, a town in the dept. of Meurthe,

12 miles NE. of Nanci, and 197 E. of Paris.

Vic BIGORRE, a small town in the dept. of the Upper Pyrenees, situated on the river Adour, 12 miles N. of Tarbes.

Vic, a town of Catalonia, formerly more considerable than at present; however, it still contains handsome buildings. It is 80 miles NNE. of Barcelona.

VICEGRAD, a town of Hungary, on the Danube, 9 miles SSE. of Gran.

VICENTINO, a territory of Italy, lately subject to the Venetians, about 40 miles in length, and from 10 to 24 in breadth; bounded on the N. by the Tyrolese; on the E. by the Trevisan and the Paduan; on the S. by the Paduan; and on the W. by the Veronese and Tyrolese. It is a pleasant and fertile country, abounding in game, and is called the garden and flesh-market of Venice. The wine is excellent, and the butter and cheese very good. Here are also great numbers of mulberry-trees, which serve to nourish silk-worms; and there are mines of silver and iron, and quarries of stone, almost as fine as marble.

VICENZA, a city of Italy, capital of the Vicentino, with a bishop's see. It is adorned with several regular, stately palaces, and other elegant edifices, (particularly the council-house, the grandeur of which is heightened by 2 very lofty columns) and it has a fine square, with piazzas under the houses. There are several other squares, and 57 churches, parochial and conventual, with several good hospitals. The great altar of the Dominican church is an august piece of Palladio's architecture. There is an academy for the improvement of the Italian language, whose members meet in the Olympic theatre, a master-piece of workmanship by the same skilful architect. The seats are disposed in the manner of the ancient amphitheatre, and the perspective is surprisingly beautiful. It is seated in a fertile plain, between 2 hills, at the union of 2 small rivers, the Bachiglione and Rerone, 35 miles W. of Venice.

VIC-FEZENSAC, a town in the dept. of Gers, 15 miles NNW. of Auch.

VIELMUR, a town in the dept. of the Tarn, 9 miles W. of Castres.

VIELSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Vologda, situated on the Vaga, 156 miles ENE. of Vologda.

VIENNA, the capital of the circle of Austria, in Germany, and of the whole German empire, where the emperor resides. The city itself is not large, and contains about 60,000 inhabitants, being limited by a very strong fortification; but the suburbs and town together are said to contain above 300,000. The streets, in general, are narrow, and in part crooked, and the houses built high. Some of the public buildings are magnificent; but they appear externally to no great advantage, on account of the narrowness of the streets. The chief of them are the Imperial Palace, the Library, and the Museum; the palaces of the princes Lichtenstein, Eugene, &c. No houses without the walls are allowed to be built nearer the glacis than 600 yards; so that there is a circular field of that breadth all round the town, which has a beautiful and salutary effect. The suburbs are not near so populous, in proportion to their size, as the town; as many houses in the former have extensive gardens belonging to them, and many families, who live during the winter within the fortifications, spend the summer in the suburbs. The second floor of all burghers' houses, is allotted for the reception of officers of the imperial court, and the owners can only purchase an exemption, by paying a sum of money for the erection of barracks. Vienna contains 50 churches or chapels, and 21 convents. The cathedral is built of free-stone, is 114 yards long, and 48 broad, and the steeple is 447 feet high. Here is a monument in honour of Prince Eugene of Savoy. Instead of a weathercock, there is a black spread eagle, over which is a gilded cross. Joining to this church is the archbishop's palace, the front of which is very fine. Besides the university, containing a great number of students, there is the academy of Lower Austria; and the archducal library, which is open every morning 3 or 4 hours to the public, contains 5 or 6000 volumes, printed in the 15th century, with a well-furnished and valuable collection of prints and useful modern books. The academy of painting is remarkable for the fine pictures it produces. The imperial cabinet is very rich in medals, and still more so in natural history. Provisions are brought here in great plenty and variety; and wild hogs, stags, with cart-loads of hares, pheasants, and partridges, may be seen in the game market. Here is a sort of a harbour on the Danube, where there are magazines of naval stores; and ships have been fitted out to serve on that river against the Turks. The manufactures of this city are numerous; and the trade extensive. Vienna has been twice ineffectually besieged by the Turks, in 1589, and 1683. At the latter period, the siege was raised by John Sobieski, king of Poland, who totally defeated the Turkish army before this place. Vienna is seated at the place where the river Vien falls into the Danube, near the site of the ancient Videbona. Lat. 48. 13. N. lon. 16. 28. E.

VIENNA, a town of Kentucky, 124 miles WSW. of Frankfort; and a town of Maryland, situated on the river Nanticoke, 85 miles S. of Philadelphia.

VIENNE, a city in the dept. of Isere, seated on the E. bank of the Rhone, over which it had formerly a stone bridge, built in the year 1265, now destroyed, or of which only some piers remain, that render the navigation dangerous, 15 miles S. of Lyons. Its commerce consists in wines, silk, and sword blades, which last are highly esteemed. Near Vienne, on the banks of the Rhone, are produced the excellent wines of Côte-Rotie; and the famous hermitage wines. Before the revolution, it was the see of an archbishop, and capital of a territory called the Viennois. It was anciently a Roman colony, but in the 5th century it was taken by the Burgundians, whose kings made it their place of residence. In the 9th century, it was the capital of the kingdom of Provence.

VIENNE, a department of France, joining ing on the W. to that of the Two Sevrès, and on the E. to the department of the Indre. Before the revolution, it was part of Poitou. It takes its name from a river which rises in the department of Correze, about 3 miles E. from Tarnac, passes by or near to Tarnac, Aimoutter, St. Leonard, Limoges, Aix, St. German, Isle Jourdain, Chinon, &c. and falls into the Loire, in the department of the Indre and Loire, about 5 miles above Saumur.

VIENNE, Upper, a dept. of France, composed of the ci-devant Limousin. Limoges is the capital.

VIERRADEN, a town of Uckermark, Brandenburg.

VIERZON, a town in the dept. of Cher, famous for its forges. It is seated at the confluence of the Cher and Yevre, 17 miles NW. of Bourges, and 100 S. of Paris.

VIESTI, a town of Capitanata, Naples.

VIGAN, a town in the dept. of Gard, 30 miles NW. of Nîmes.

VIGEVANO, a town of Piedmont.

VIGNAMONT, a town of Liege.

VIGO, a town of Spain, in Galicia, with a good harbour, seated on the Atlantic ocean, 12 miles NNW. of Tay, and 260 WNW. of Madrid. Here, in 1702, the English and Dutch fleets, having broken the boom laid across the mouth of the harbour, defeated a squadron of French men of war, with 13 Spanish galleons under their convoy. The English took 4 galleons and 5 men of war, and the Dutch 5 galleons and 1 man of war. Fourteen men of war and 4 galleons were destroyed, and a great deal of silver was taken. In 1719, it was again taken by the English, who relinquished it, after raising contributions.

VIHERS, a town in the dept. of Maine and Loire, whose inhabitants have a great trade in cattle. It is 20 miles S. of Angers, and 162 SW. of Paris.

VILAINE, a river of France, which rises in the dept. of Maine, waters Vitré, Rennes, Redon, &c. and enters the Bay of Biscay below Roche Bernard.

VILLA BOHIM, a town of Alentejo.

VILLACH, a town of Carinthia, situated near the Baths of Toplitz, 13 miles of Clagenfurt.

VILLA-DE-CONDA, a sea port of Douro, 14 miles N. of Oporto.

VILLA-DU-HORTA, the principal town of the Island of Fyal, one of the Azores. It is seated on the western coast, and has a harbour, the best in the island, being land-locked on every side except the E. and NE. and defended by several forts. Lat. 38. 32. N. lon. 28. 36. W.

VILLA-DE-MOSE, a town of Mexico, in Tabasco, seated on a river of the same name, which is navigable by boats to Tabasco, 30 miles from the sea.

VILLA-DEL-REY, a town of Galicia; and a town of Estramadura, both in Spain.

VILLA-FLOR, a town of Tra-los-Montes.

VILLA-FRANCA, the capital of St. Michael, one of the Azores, the most ancient town in the whole island, and so called from its being at first a free port. Before its harbour lies an island, about a mile in circumference, and towards the sea the town is defended by a fort and some other works. It consists of 1813 hearths, and contains 2 parish churches, and 2 convents. Lat. 37. 50. N. lon. 25. 35. W

VILLA-FRANCA, three towns in Old Castile, the first 10 miles E. of Burgos; the second, 30 miles W. of Burgos; and the third, situated on the Tormes, 50 miles NW. of Toledo. Also a town of Leon, 50 miles WSW. of Leon; a town of Italy, in the Veronese, with a silk manufactory; a town in the principality of Piedmont, a town of Piedmont, in the duchy of Aosta; and a sea port town of Nice, with two castles and a harbour sheltered by lofty hills, 3 miles E. of Nice. It was taken by the French in 1792.

VILLA-FRANCA-DE-PANADES, a town of Catalonia, situated near the sea, 20 miles SW. of Barcelona.

VILLA-FRANCA-DE-XIRA, a town of Portuguese Estramadura, situated on the N. bank of the Tagus, 15 miles NE. of Lisbon.

VILLA-REAL, a town of Portugal, in Tra-los-Montes, capital of Comarca.

VILLA-REAL, a town of Valencia.

VILLA-RICA, a sea port of Mexico; a town of Paraguay, Buenos Ayres; and a town of Minas Geraes, in Brasil.

VILLA-VICIOSA, a town of Alentejo, with a palace and park, in which the dukes of Braganza formerly resided. It sustained a famous siege against the Spaniards, in the year 1667. A battle also was fought near it, much about the same time, the success of which greatly contributed to fix the crown of Portugal on the head of the Duke of Braganza. In the suburb is an ancient temple, originally built to the honour of Proserpine, as appears from the inscriptions. The soil about this town is extremely fertile, and there are quarries of beautiful green marble. It is 16 miles SW. of Elvas, and 83 SSE. of Lisbon.

VILLA-VICIOSA, a sea port of Asturias, 30 miles NE. of Oviedo.

VILLE-DIEU, a town in the department of the Channel, 12 miles NNE. of Avranches.

VILMANSTRAND, a town of Russia, in the government of Viborg.

VILVORDE, a town of Brabant, seated on the river Senne, 6 miles N. of Brussels.

VINCENT, CAPE, a promontory of Portugal, 25 miles W. of Lagos. Lat. 37. 2. N. lon. 9. 0. W.

VINCENT, ST. an island of the W. Indies, about 40 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. It is one of the Caribbee Islands, and inhabited by a race of people, of whom Dr. Robertson gives this account: "There is a great distinction in character between the Caribbees and the inhabitants of the larger islands. The former appear manifestly to be a separate race. Their language is totally different from that of their neighbours in the large islands. They themselves have a tradition that their ancestors came originally from some part of the continent, and having conquered and exterminated the ancient inhabitants, took possession of their lands and of their women. Hence they call themselves Banaree, which signifies a man come from beyond sea. Accordingly, the Caribbees still use two distinct languages, one peculiar to the men, and the other to the women. The language of the men has nothing common with that spoken in the large islands. The dialect of the women considerably resembles it. This strongly confirms the tradition which I have mentioned. The Caribbees themselves imagine that they were a colony from the Galibis, a powerful nation of Guiana, in S. America. But as their fierce manners approach nearest to those of the people in the northern continent, than to those of the natives of S. America; and as their language has likewise some affinity to that spoken in Florida, their origin should be deduced rather from the former than the latter. In their wars, they still preserve their ancient practice of destroying all the males, and preserving the women, either for servitude, or for breeding." This island was only inhabited by native Caribs, till towards the latter end of the last century, when a ship from Guinea, with a large cargo of slaves was either wrecked or run ashore on the coast; great numbers of the negroes escaped into the woods and mountains, whom the Indians suffered to remain. These Africans soon became very numerous, partly by the accession of runaway slaves from Barbadoes, and partly by the children they had by the Indian women. After this the country became the theatre of savage hostilities between the negroes and the Caribbees, in which the former were generally victorious, or at least proved so in the end; their numbers in 1763 being computed at 2000, whereas of the red or native Caribs, there were not left more than 100 families. St. Vincent's was long considered as a neutral island, island, by the two countries of England and France; but, at the peace of 1763, the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English; who, in the sequel, at the instance of some rapacious planters, engaged in a war against the Caribbees, who inhabited the windward side of the island, and who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a very large tract of valuable land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that retaining their resentment against the English, they aided the French in the reduction of the island, in 1779, who, however, restored it by the peace of 1783. The country is generally mountainous and rugged: the valleys are, however, extremely fruitful. It contains about 84,000 acres, every where well watered, of which 28,605 acres are possessed by British subjects: and as much more was lately held by the Caribs. All the rest of the country has not been yet cleared, but retains its native woods. The soil is a black mould upon a strong loam, the most proper for the raising of sugars: and indigo thrives here remarkably well. The number of inhabitants appears, by the last official returns, to be 1450 whites, and 11,853 negroes. The governor's salary is 2000*l.* sterling; one half of which is raised within the island, and the other half is paid out of the exchequer of Great Britain. Lat. 13. 0. N. lon. 61. 0. W.

VINCENT, ST. a town of Beira; and a sea-port of Asturia, 9 miles WSW. of Santillana.

VINCENT, ST. a town of Brasil, in the government of St. Paul, situated on the sea-coast, 150 miles SSW. of St. Sebastian.

VINCENT, ST. one of the Cape de Verd Islands, about 30 miles in circumference; in general lofty, except towards the NW. where it is low and sandy. In this part is a commodious bay or harbour, about a league and a half broad at the mouth, surrounded with high mountains, stretching to the middle of the island, and securely sheltered from the westerly and north-west winds. Hence it is justly accounted the best harbour in all the Cape Verd islands; yet it is difficult of access, by reason of the impetuous winds that blow off the mountains, along the coast, with so much fury, as greatly to endanger shipping before they can arrive at this place of security. Besides this harbour, where ships frequently wood and water, and where wild goats may be obtained, (for the island is uninhabited) there are several other bays on the S. side, at which ships may anchor; and of these the Portuguese generally make choice, for the purpose of loading their hides. St Vincent has also good fresh water, which does not fail to spring up, on digging a little way into the soil of the valley; but the hills afford not a single drop. It is said, also, that more turtle is caught near this island, than round all the rest, and that it abounds with saltpetre.

VINCENT'S ROCKS, ST. Gloucestershire, E. of the Avon, and a mile and a half NNW. of Bristol. They are very steep and rugged precipices, which continue their course about 3 miles, and seem to have been almost miraculously cleft asunder, to admit a passage for the river Frome. The Avon flows between them, and the tide rises here 42 feet. At the bottom of these rocks, near the water-side, rises a medicinal hot spring, the taste of which is soft, milky, and grateful to the stomach. It is successfully prescribed in inflammations, hectic coughs, immoderate fluxes, and scrophulous and cancerous cases.

Vine, Hants, near Basingstoke. Vineyard, near Gloucester. Vineyard, Gloucestershire, near Tewkesbury. Vineyard-Flory, Somerset. SW. of Taunton.

VINGORIA, a Dutch settlement on the coast of Concan, 22 miles NNW. of Goa.

Vinniton, Devonshire, NW. of Honiton.

VINTIMIGLIA, a town of Genoa, with a small harbour, situated on the Mediterranean, 8 miles NE. of Monaco, and 70 SW. of Genoa.

Vintners, Kent, in Boxley parish.

VIRE, a town in the dept. of Calvados, with manufactures of coarse woollen cloths. It is seated on the river Vire, 27 miles SW. of Caen.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, certain islands and keys in the W. Indies, situated in about lat. 18. 30. N. to the E. of Porto Rico, and extending about 20 leagues in length and upwards of 12 in breadth. They were called Las Virgines by the Spaniards, the first discoverers, in honour of the 11,000 Virgins of the Legend. Though every way dangerous to navigators, there is a basin in the midst of them, 6 or 7 leagues in length, and 3 or 4 in breadth, in which ships may securely anchor, landlocked from all winds. They are about 30 in number, mostly desert, barren, and are possessed by the English and Danes. The Spaniards, however, claim those near Porto Rico. In the first division of those possessed by the English, is Tortola, the principal, to which belong Jost Van Dyke's and Little Van Dykes, and Guana Isle, with beef and Thatch Islands. In the second division is Virgin Gorda, or Great Virgin, called also Spanish Town, having two good harbours; to this island belong the following: Anageda, or, Drowned Island, Nicker, Prickly Pear, and Moskito Islands, the Cammanoes, Scrub and Dog Islands, the Fallen City, (two rocky islets, close together, at a distance resembling ruins) the Round Rock, Ginger, Cooper's, Salt Island, Peter's Island, and the Dead Chest. To the Danes belong St. Thomas's Island, on which Brass, Little Saba, Buck Island, Great and Little St. James, and Bird Island are dependant; with St. John, to which belong Lavango, Cam, and Witch Islands; and they have also the Island of St. Croix.

VIRGINIA, one of the United States of North America, bounded on the S. by North Carolina; on the W. by Kentucky; on the NW. by the Ohio; on the N. by Pennsylvania and Maryland; and on the E. by Maryland, the Chesapeake, and the Atlantic. It is about 300 miles from E. to W. and 180 from N. to S. The principal rivers are James, York, Rappahannoc, Potomac, Roanoke, and Kanaway, Great and Little, all which are full of convenient and safe harbours. There are also many small rivers, some of which are capable of receiving the largest merchant ships. In general, the land is tolerably good, and capable of producing corn, pulse, cotton, flax, and hemp; and, in the marsh lands, rice has been lately cultivated. The lands towards the mouth of the rivers, are generally low, and at present well stocked with many forts of trees, from 30 to 70 feet high. The land higher up the rivers is generally level, and well watered with springs; but there are here and there some small hills. That near the sea is generally sandy and without stones, for which reason they seldom shoe their horses. The richest lands lie near the branches of the rivers, and abound with various sorts of timber, surprisingly large. At the heads of the rivers are mountains, valleys, hills, and plains, with different trees; and indeed not many years ago, the whole country seemed to be one continued wood, with plantations here and there, where the roots of the trees had been grubbed up. The principal produce of Virginia is tobacco, wheat, and Indian corn, but the culture of tobacco has much declined of late, in favour of that of wheat. Virginia is divided into 82 counties, and has but few towns of consequence; the principal are Williamsburg, Norfolk, Alexandria, and Richmond. The number of inhabitants, in 1790, amounted to 747,610. The Virginians now manufacture about three fourths of their clothing, and they have also manufactures of iron and lead; but agriculture is the principal employment.

* VIRGINIA, a town of Cavan, in Ulster, seated on Lough Ramor, in which are several islands, 40 miles from Dublin.

Virginflow, Devonshire, SE. of Luffen-cote.

VIRTON, a small town of Luxemburg.

VISAGAPATAM, a town of Hindoostan, in the circar of Cicacole, 50 miles SW. of Cicacole.

VISET, a town of Liege.

VISEU, anciently VISONTIUM, a town of Beira.

VISHNEI-VOLOTCHOK, a town of Russia, in the government of Tver. It is one of the imperial villages enfranchised by the late empress, and is remarkable for its canal, which connects the Tvertza and the Mysta. The inhabitants, raised from the situation of slaves to that of freemen, seem to have shaken off their former indolence, and to be awakened to a sense of their commercial advantages. The town is divided into regular streets. All the buildings are of wood, except the court of justice erected at the charge of the empress, and a few brick houses. It is seated on the river Zna, 60 miles NNW. of Tver. Lat. 57. 23. N. lon. 35. 0. E.

VISIAPOUR, a considerable city of Hindoostan, the capital of a county of the same name. It is now subject to the Poonah Mahrattas. It is 130 miles SE. of Poonah, and 234 SE. of Bombay. Lat. 17. 26. N. lon. 75. 19. E.

VISSOGOROD, a town of Masovia.

UIST, N. and S, two islands of the Hebrides, on the W. coast of Scotland. They are each about 20 miles in length, and of considerable breadth. Kelp is the staple commodity of these islands; and they export annually, between them, 800 cows and young oxen. Here is abundance of game and aquatic birds.

VISTULA, the largest river of Poland. It rises in Mount Crapach, on the N. part of Hungary, passes by Cracow, Sandomirz, Warsaw, Thorn, Culm, &c. and falls into the Baltic below Dantzic.

VITERBO, a town of Italy, capital of the Patrimonio. It contains only 15,000 inhabitants, although the number of churches, convents, and hospitals is 69. Near it is a spring, so hot, that it will boil boil an egg, and even fish. It is 20 miles S. of Orvieto, and 35 N. by W. of Rome.

VITRE, a town in the dept. of Ille and Vilaine, trading in linen-cloth, knit stockings, and gloves. It is seated on the river Vilaine, 20 miles E. of Rennes.

VITRI-LE-BRULE, a village in the dept. of Marne, 3 miles NE. of Vitri-le-François. It was formerly a considerable town, but was taken, (and, as its name imports, burnt) by Thibaut, count of Chartres, when many of the inhabitants were burned; and great part of the town destroyed. It was also burnt, together with 60 villages, in the year 1422, by the English and Burgundians.

VITRA-LE-FRANÇOIS, a populous town in the depart. of Maine, trading in corn. It is well built, though the houses are of wood, and there is a fine square. It is seated on the river Marne, 15 miles SSE. of Charlons, and 100 E. of Paris.

VITTEAUX, a town in the department of Côte-d'Or, seated among mountains, where there are quarries of marble. It is 21 miles W. of Dijon, and 9 SE. of Semur.

VITTORIA, a town of Biscay, in the province of Alava. It contains 5 parishes, 4 convents, 3 hospitals, a college, and a square. The large streets are bordered with trees, as a defence against the heat of the sun. The merchants here deal in wool and wines, and particularly in sword blades and other cutlery, which they make in large quantities. It is seated in a pleasant plain, fertile in corn and grapes, 32 miles SSE. of Bilboa.

VITTORIOSA, or CITTA VITTORIOSA, or IL BORGO, a fortified town of the island of Malta, situated on a narrow neck of land to the left of Valetta. On each side a broad, natural canal, or stream, runs up into the land, and surrounding the town, forms a fine harbour. One of these canals or harbours is called Portico della Renella, and the other Porto delle Gallere. The strong castle of St. Angelo stands on a high rock, at the extremity, towards the sea, and has a communication with the town by a bridge. The palace of the inquisition, and the arsenal, are reckoned among the principal buildings of this place. Formerly the grand master resided here. The number of inhabitants amounts to about 3000.

VIVERO, a town of Spain, in Galicia, near the river Vivero, or Landrova, whose mouth forms a good harbour on the Atlantic. It is 12 miles E. of Cape Ortegal.

VIVIERS, a town in the department of Ardeche, seated among rocks, on one of which the cathedral is built, near the river Rhone, 20 miles N. of Orange.

UKRAINE, a large country of Europe, lying on the borders of Turkey in Europe, Poland, Russia, and Little Tartary. Its name properly signifies a frontier. But the whole of the Ukraine, on both sides of the Dnieper, now belongs to Russia, and forms a part of the government of Ekaterinoflav. The principal town is Kiof. See COSSACKS.

ULADISLAW. See INOLADISLAW.

ULCAMI, or ULCUMA, a country of Guinea, N. of Adra, and W. of Benin.

Ulcaster, Derbyshire, on the Dove, near Burton-upon-Trent. Ulkhorn, Suffex, by Uckfield. Ulcumb, Kent, SW. of Lenham. Uldale, Cumberl. on the Elen, near Ireby. Ulcaster, Northumberland, in the lordship of Woller.

ULEA, or Ulaborg, a sea-port of E. Bothnia, 320 miles N. of Abo.

Uley, a populous village of Gloucestershire, with a manufacture of fine broad cloth, 2 miles E. of Dursley.

ULIETEA, one of the Society Isles, in the S. Pacific Ocean. Lat. 16. 45. S. lon. 151. 26. W.

Ullapool, Rossshire, seated on the N. side of Loch Broom. Ullenhall, Warw. S. of Umlerlade. Ullejkelf, York. S. of Tadcaster. Ullington, Gloucester. in Pebworth parish. Ullock, Cumberl. 4 miles SW. of Cockermouth. Ullsby, or Ullsley, Cumberl. S. of Penrith, near Ullswater.

ULLSWATER, a lake, partly in Westmorland and partly in Cumberland, 10 miles N. of Ambleside, and 14 SW. of Penrith. It is about 8 miles long, is of a sufficient depth for breeding char, and abounds with a variety of other fish. Trout, of upwards of 30 pounds weight, are said to have been taken in it. The navigators of this lake find much amusement by discharging guns, or small cannon, in certain stations. The report is reverberated from rock to rock, promontory, cavern, and hill, with every variety of sound; now dying away upon the ear, and again returning like peals of thunder, and thus re-echoed, is heard seven times distinctly.

ULM, an imperial city of Suabia, and chief of that order in the circle where the archives of the free towns in Suabia and Franconia are deposited. The inhabitants are Protestants. There is a good college in this city; and in the cathedral, which is a very lofty structure, are 63 copper-vessels full of water, ready for the extinguishing of fire. It is large and well fortified, and the town-house is a handsome John's edifice. There is a handsome bridge over the Danube, which greatly favours the trade of the inhabitants in linen, fustians, hardware, and wool. The elector of Bavaria became master of it in 1702, by a stratagem; but after the battle of Blenheim, the Bavarians surrendered it by capitulation. It is seated on the Danube, where it receives the river Iller, 47 miles SSE. of Stutgard, and 275 W. of Vienna. Lat. 48. 25. N. lon. 10. 12. E.

ULMEN, a town of Treves.

Ulpha, or Ouffa, Cumberland, in Mililum parish, on the river Dudden. Ulseby, Lincolnshire, N. of Spilsby. Ulseby, Lincolnshire, between Great Limbergh and Barton-on-the-Humber.

ULSTER, a province of Ireland; bounded on the E. by the Irish Sea, on the N. by the Northern Ocean, on the W. by the Western Ocean, on the S. by the province of Leinster, and on the SW. by that of Connaught, being about 116 miles in length, and 100 in breadth. The principal rivers are, the Banne, the Loughfoyle, the Swilly, the Mewry Water, and the Maine. It abounds with large lakes, the soil in general, is fruitful in corn and grass; and there are plenty of horses, sheep, and bees. The waters are deep, and yield plenty of fish, particularly salmon. The southern parts of this province are rich, fertile, and well cultivated; but the northern are hilly and mountainous. It includes within itself, by far the greatest part of the linen manufactory; and contains the counties of Donegal, Derry, Antrim, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Cavan, Armagh, Monaghan, and Down.

ULSTER, a river in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which runs into the Werra, near Vacha, in the principality of Hesse.

Ulsherp, Leicestershire, N. of Lutterworth. Ulling, Essex, near Malden.

UETZEN, or VELTZEN, a town of Lunenburg, containing 8 churches, 3 hospitals, and about 330 houses. The principal articles of trade are wool, brandy, and meal. It was formerly Hanseatic, and is situated on the Ilmenau, 20 miles SSE. of Lunenburg.

ULVERSTONE, called by the country people OUSTON, a pretty good thriving town of Lancashire, in the hundred of Furness, with regular, well paved streets. This town is the port of Furness, sitting out about 70 ships for the coasting trade. The principal inns are kept by the guides, who regularly pass to and from Lancaster, three times a week. It is seated at the bottom of immense hills, between the branches of the Duddon, near its mouth, 15 miles NNW. of Lancaster, and 267 NNW. of London. Market on Thursday.

Ulvescroft-Abbey, Leicesters. in Charnwood-forest, was founded in a sequestered and romantic spot by Robert Blanchmains, Earl of Leicester, in the reign of Henry II. It is now converted into a farm-house.

UMAGO, a sea-port of Istria, lately subject to Venice.

Umbersley, or Umberslade, Warwickshire, near Stratford upon-Avon.

UMBRIA. See SPOLETO.

UMBRIATICO, a town of Calabria Citra.

UMEA, a sea-port of W. Bothnia.

UNALASHKA, one of the Fox Islands, in the Northern Archipelago.

Underbarrow, Westm. SW. of Kendal.

Underditch, Wilts, a hundred between Ambresbury and Sarum. Underley, Westmorland, on the Lune, by Kirby-Lonsdale.

UNDERSWEN, a town of Bern, Switzerland situated between the Lakes of Brienz and Thun, near the famous cavern of St. Pat. It is 25 miles SE. of Bern.

Underton, Shropshire, SW. of Bridgenorth.

UNDERWALDEN, a canton of Switzerland, and the sixth in rank. It is bounded on the N. by the canton of Lucerne, and by the lake of the four cantons; on the E. by the Canton of Uri; on the S. by the canton of Bern; and on the W. by the cantons of Bern and Lucern. It takes its name from a large forest of oaks, which is nearly in the middle of the country, and runs from N. to S. It is about 25 miles in length; and 17 in breadth, and is divided into two parts, that above the forest and that below it; for this reason there are two councils, two justices, and two land ammanies. It has no towns nor bailiwicks; and the chief advantage of the inhabitants arises from cattle, and the fish taken in five small lakes. The people are of the Romish church; and the grand council is composed of 58 members. Sarnen is the principal place of the Upper Vale; and Stantz of the Lower, and of the whole canton. The Underwalders, in conjunction with the states of Uri and Schwitz, shook off the Austrian yoke, in 1308; of all the people of Switzerland, they are the most honoured and loved by the other cantons, for their courage and love of liberty, joined to a strict concord, and amiable simplicity of manners.

Underton, Shropshire, SW. of Bridgenorth. Underwood, Derbyshire, NE. of Ashbourn. Underwood, Devonshire.

UNGWAR,

UNGWAR, a town of Hungary, 46 miles NNE. of Caschan.

UNITED PROVINCES OF THE NETHERLANDS, a republic of Europe, consisting of seven provinces, and extending from N. to S. not more than 150 miles, and 100 in breadth from E. to W. They are bounded on the W. and N. by the German Ocean, and on the S. and E. by Brabant and Germany. These provinces rank in the following order: 1. Guelderland, subdivided into the districts of Nimeguen, Zutphen, and Arnheim; 2. Holland, subdivided into N. Holland, S. Holland, and W. Friesland; 3. Zealand, subdivided into the part near the E. Scheldt, and the part near the W. Scheldt; 4. Utrecht; 5. Friesland; 6. Overijssel; and 7. Groningen. Besides these provinces, are the lands of the generality, (including Dutch Brabant, Flanders, and Limburg) in which are the town of Bois-le-Duc, Breda, Bergen-op-Zoom, Maastricht, Venlo, Sluys, Hult, &c. This republic (which is likewise called by the general name of Holland) affords a striking proof, that unwearied and persevering industry is capable of conquering almost every disadvantage of climate and situation. The air and water in this country are nearly equally bad; the soil produces naturally scarce any thing but turf; and the possession of this very soil is disputed by the ocean, which rising considerably above the level of the land, is prevented from overflowing it, only by strong and expensive dikes. Yet the labours of the patient Dutchman have rendered this small and seemingly insignificant territory one of the richest spots in Europe, with respect to population and property. In other countries, possessed of a variety of natural productions, it is not surprising to find manufactures employed in augmenting the riches of the soil; but to see, in a country like Holland, large woollen manufactures, where there are scarce any flocks; numberless artists employed in metals, where there is not a mine; thousands of saw-mills, where there is scarce a forest; an immense quantity of corn, exported from a country where there is not agriculture sufficient to support one half of its inhabitants, is what must strike every attentive observer with admiration. Among the most valuable natural productions of the United Netherlands may be reckoned their excellent cattle; and large quantities of madder are exported, chiefly cultivated in Zealand. The most considerable revenue arises from the fisheries; but these are not so considerable as formerly. The number of vessels employed in the herring fishery, in particular, is reduced from upwards of 2000 to less than 200; and yet it maintains, even now, no less than 20,000 people. About 100 vessels are employed in the Greenland fishery, and 140 in the cod fishery near the Dogger Bank, and near the coast of Holland. The Dutch were formerly in possession of the coasting trade and freight of almost all other trading nations. They were also the bankers for all Europe. But these advantages did not continue to be so lucrative, when the other European nations began to open their eyes so far as to employ their own shipping in their trade, and to establish banks of their own. Notwithstanding these deductions, the Dutch trade is still immense; in consequence of their vast opulence, they still regulate the exchange for all Europe, and their country is, as it were, the universal warehouse of the commodities of every quarter of the globe. Among the monopolies of their E. India Company, the spice trade has long been the most valuable: it comprehends the articles of cloves, mace, nutmeg, and cinnamon. The Java coffee is the best next to that of Mecca; and other great branches of this trade are rice, cotton, pepper, &c. articles of great importance, but not in the exclusive possession of the Dutch. They are the only European nation hitherto permitted to trade directly to Japan; but this trade is also on the decline. Their W. India Company trades not only to the W. Indies, but to the coast of Guinea for slaves; and, distinct from this, they have two companies, which trade to Surinam and Berbice. The foreign possessions of the Dutch, in Asia, previously to the commencement of the present war, were the coasts of the Island of Java, the capital of which is Batavia the seat of the governor general of all their East-India settlements; some settlements on the coasts of Sumatra, Malabar, and Coromandel; the greatest part of the Moluccas or Spice-Islands; settlements, or factories, in the Island of Celebes, at Surat and Pietro, and in the Gulf of Persia; with Colombo, Trincomale, &c. on the Island of Ceylon. In Africa they had the Cape of Good Hope, with George-de-la-Mina, and other fortresses and factories in Guinea. In the W. Indies they had the Islands of St. Eustatia, Saba, and Curaçon; and in S. America, the colonies of Isequibo, Demerary, Surinam, and Berbice, in the country of Guinea. In Holland, the inland trade is greatly facilitated by the numerous canals, which cross the country in every every direction. The number of manufactures established in the United Provinces is astonishing. Saardam, a village in N. Holland, contains for instance, about 900 windmills, partly corn-mills, partly saw and paper-mills, and mills for the making of white lead, &c. In former times, the Dutch were the exclusive possessors of several ingenious manufactures and arts; as the refining of camphor and borax, the cutting and polishing of diamonds, the refining of sugar, &c. but at present these mysteries, few of them excepted, are in the hands of many other nations, to whose commercial ignorance and want of industry the Dutch were once indebted for immense profits, which have decreased with the causes; among the rest, the woollen manufactory has prodigiously decreased. In a word, the Dutch trade is no longer in its ancient flourishing state, to which, even if the frugality and industry of the nation had not been diminished by too great riches, the rivalry of other nations and the commercial knowledge of the age, would never permit it to rise again. All sects are tolerated in Holland; but, till lately, none but Calvinists could hold employments of trust or profit. Since the great confederation of Utrecht, in 1579, (See NETHERLANDS) the Seven United Provinces have been considered as one political body, united for the preservation of the whole. In 1581, the Hague was appointed the place of meeting for the States General, an assembly invested with supreme power of the confederation, and composed of deputies chosen out of the provincial states. This power related to the making war and peace, levying taxes, &c. in their joint capacity; but as to internal government, each province was independent not only of the other provinces, but even of the supreme power of the republic. In the present disputes on the French revolution, the Dutch, at first, appeared hostile to the new republic, but never heartily co-operated with the allies. The stadtholder was probably influenced by the courts of Prussia and England, but a party more powerful than his own were his enemies, and, on the invasion of Holland by the French, in the beginning of 1795, he thought proper, with his family, to take refuge in England. Since then, their form of government has been modelled upon that of France, and they now form a republic one and indivisible.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, a republic of N. America, consisting originally of thirteen provinces subject to Great Britain, but which, on the 4th of July, 1776, by their representatives in congress assembled, made a solemn declaration of independence, and were afterwards acknowledged free and independent states by the treaty of Paris, in 1783. They are, at present, 15 in number, viz. Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, N. and S. Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky and Vermont. Besides these, there are the districts of Maine, the Tennessee government, and territory NW. of the Ohio, which, in process of time, will, it is probable, become states; the two first, perhaps, within a short space: the latter is, at present, inhabited by different tribes of Indians. Only eleven of these states acceded, at first, to the new federal constitution, but they were afterward joined by N. Carolina and Rhode Island; and Kentucky and Vermont have since been added to them. See AMERICA.

UNNA, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, containing a Lutheran parish church, a hospital church, which both the Calvinists and Lutherans use for their worship, a nunnery, a chapel and a Lutheran school. So early as the year 1032, this place was a considerable village, and with its very extensive and profitable territory (still possessed by the town) belonged to the archbishop of Cologne. In 1250 it was first environed with walls, and endowed with the immunities of a town. Unna was formerly Hanseatic, and at present ranks as the second town in the county. It is situated in a fine plain, on a rivulet named the Kottlebecke, 8 miles E. of Dortmund, and 23 S. of Munster.

UNNA, a river which rises in Bosnia, on the borders of Croatia, 28 miles S. of Bihaes, and runs into the Save, about 16 miles NW. of Gradisca.

UNST, the most remote of the smaller Shetland Islands, about 8 miles long and 4 broad. In comparison with the other Shetland isles, it is reckoned level, yet its surface is diversified by several extensive and moderately high hills. The shores of its numerous bays, creeks, and harbours, are low, shelving, and sandy, but the lands are considerably high and rocky. The highest of the headlands rises to the height of 60 or 70 fathoms. Unst abounds in ironstone and lime-stone, affords large veins of jasper, beautifully variegated with black and green spots; and great plenty of white spar is thrown upon the sea beach. Black oats, bear, potatoes, cabbages, artichokes of a delicate taste, with various garden roots, greens, and most of the garden flowers flowers that grow in the north of Scotland, are common in this island. There is little or no sown grass; but the meadows are rich in red and white clover; and in the seasons of vegetation, are enamelled with a beautiful profusion of wild flowers. The pasture-grounds in the commons are generally covered with a short, tender, flowering heath. The whole number of cows and oxen (which last weigh from 300 to 500 lb.) in the island is not fewer than 2000; of these, about 1150 are milch cows. The number of horses, well known by the name of shelties, is about 1000. The sheep amount to about 6600. Fishing is an important branch of business among the islanders, 80 tons being taken on an average yearly. Rats, mice, frogs, toads, and adders, are unknown here. The number of houses on the island is about 300, and of inhabitants about 1688.

Unsted, Surry, S. of Godalmin. Unston, Derby, in Scarfdale.

UNTERSEEN. See UNDERSWEN.

Unibank, Cumberl. NE. of Kirk-Oswald, in Dacre parish. Unthbank, Durham, on the Wear, opposite to Stanhope. Untbank, SW. of Durham. Uny, Cornwall, near Lalan, N. of Market-Jew. Uny, Cornwall, near Redruth.

UNZA, a province of Russia, the largest division of the government of Kostrom.

VOERDEN, a town of Paderborn; and a town of Osnaburgh.

VOGHERA, a town of Pavia.

VOGLABRUCK, a town in the archduchy of Austria, situated on the river Vogel, 27 miles SSE. of Passau.

VOID, a town in the dept. of Meurthe, 10 miles W. of Toul.

VOIGTLAND, a territory of Upper Saxony, mostly subject to the elector. Vogt was anciently a title in the empire, which was discontinued towards the middle of the 14th century. The learned are not agreed as to what the name and dignity imported.

VOLANO, a sea-port in the Ferrarese, situated at the southern mouth of the Po, 23 miles E. of Ferrara.

VOLCANELLO, a small volcanic island, between Lipari and Volcano.

VOLCANO, one of the Lipari Islands, in the Mediterranean, lying to the S. of the Island of Lipari. It is about 12 miles in circumference, and is a volcano, in the form of a broken cone, but now emits smoke only. Volcano, as well as all the rest of these islands, is supposed to have been produced by an eruption from subterranean fire. The production of this island, in particular, happened in the early time of the Roman republic, and is recorded by Eusebius, Pliny, and others.

VOLGA, the largest river in Europe, which has its source in two small lakes, in the government of Tver, in Russia. It begins to be navigable a few miles above that town. It is considerably augmented here by the junction of the Tverza, which is a broader, deeper, and more rapid river. By means of the Tverza, a communication is made between the Volga and the Neva, or, in other words, between the Caspian and the Baltic. This great river waters some of the finest provinces in the Russian empire, passes by Yaroslaf, Kostroma, Nishnei-Novogorod, Casan, Simbirk, and Saratoff, entering the Caspian Sea, by several mouths below Astracan.

VOLHINIA, a palatinate of Poland, W. of that of Kiev, about 180 miles in length, and from 80 to 120 in breadth. It consists chiefly of well-watered plains, producing a great surplus of corn. Rosemary, asparagus, &c. grow wild in the woods, and can hardly be distinguished from those cultivated in the gardens. Lucko is the capital.

VOLKENMARCK, in Carinthia.

VOLLENHOVEN, a town and district of Overijssel, near the Zuyder Zee.

VOLO, a sea-port of Janna, or Thessaly, 38 miles SE. of Larissa.

VOLODIMIR, or VLADIMIR, a government of the Russian empire, formerly a province of Moscow. The soil is extremely fertile, and in the forests are innumerable swarms of bees.

VOLODIMIR, or VLADIMIR, a town of Russia, capital of the government of the same name, and seated on the river Kliasma. It was once the metropolis of the empire, and is 100 miles E. by N. of Moscow.

VOLOGODSKOI, formerly the largest of all the Russian European governments, as it contained the provinces of Vologda, Archangel, and Veliki Ustiug. It is now divided into the two provinces of Vologda and Veliki-Ustiug, and is bounded on the N. by the government of Archangel, and on the E. by the government of Tobolsk; rather more than 600 miles in length, and about 240 in breadth. It is a marshy country, full of forests, lakes, and rivers, and noted for its fine wool.

VOLOGDA, a city of Russia, in the province of the same name, containing about 1700 houses and several churches. The inhabitants trade in hemp, matting, leather, and tallow. It is the see of an archbishop, and is seated on the river Sachona, near the lake Kubenskoe, 320 miles nearly S. of Archangel, and 308 E. of Petersburg.

VOLPIANO, a town in the principality of Piedmont, 8 miles and a half NNE. of Turin.

VOLSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Saratov, situated on the Volga, 76 miles NE. of Saratov.

VOLTA, or RIO VOLTA, a river of Guinea, which runs into the Atlantic, about 24 miles E. of Acra.

VOLTERRA, a town of Tuscany, containing 25 churches, chapels, or oratories, and 20 religious houses. It is a lonely, mean place, and entire villages in the neighbourhood lie in ruins. It is noted for its medicinal waters, and is seated on a mountain, 32 miles SE. of Pisa.

VOLTURNO, a river of Naples, which falls into the Gulf of Gaeta.

VOLTURARA, a town of Capitanata; also a town of Principato Ultra.

VOLVIC, a town in the dept. of Puy-de-Dome, 2 miles SW. of Riom. Here are immense quarries, formed by a current of prodigious lavas, which furnish materials for buildings, and for the sculptor.

VOORN, an island of S. Holland, between the mouths of the river Maese. Brill is the capital. This island, with that of Goree and Overflackee, which are near it, make the territory called Voomland, which was anciently part of Zealand.

VOORN, an island and fort between the rivers Waal and Meuse, 9 miles NNE. of Bois le-Duc.

VORONETZ, a government of Russia, the capital of which, of the same name, is seated on the river Voronetz, near its junction with the Don, 256 miles S. of Moscow.

VOSGES, a department of France, including the S. part of Lorraine, which was lately a province of the same name. It is so called, from a large chain of mountains, covered with wood, that separate this department from the departments of Upper Saone and Upper Rhine. Epinal is the capital.

Fotherfield, Hants, S. of Alton.

VOUILLE, a village in the department of Vienne, 10 miles NW. of Poitiers. Here Clovis gained, in 507, a battle against Alaric, king of Visigoths, (whom he slew with his own hand) which extended the dominions of the Franks from the Loire to the Pyrenees.

Vowelscomb, Devon. NE. of Modbury. Upberry, Bedford. in Pullox-Hill parish. Upberry, Kent, a manor of Gillingham. Upburn-Denicot, Bucks, near Beaconsfield. Upcerne, Dorset. a mile and a half NW. of Cerne-Abbas. Upchurch, Kent, 3 miles and a half NW. of Milton, and 5 from Chatham. Upcote, Devon. in Cheriton parish. Upball, Essex, near Great Ilford. Upball, Herts, between Puckeridge and Albury. Upbam, Hants, NW. of Bishop's-Waltham. Up Hatherley, Glouce. a hamlet to Shurdington. Upbaven, Wiltshire, 10 miles S. by W. of Marlborough. Upbill, Somers. near the passage to Wales, across the Bristol Channel. Upbolland, Linc.

UPLAND, a province of Sweden, bounded on the N. and W. by Westmania and Gestricia; on the NE. by the Baltic; and on the S. by the Malar Lake. It is about 70 miles in length, and 35 in its greatest breadth, is very populous, and fertile in corn, and has mines of iron and lead. Stockholm is the capital.

Upleadon, Gloucester. on the Leden, 3 miles E. of Newent. Upleatham, York. N. of Gisborough. Up Lyme, or Nether Lyme, Dorsetshire, near Lyme Regis. Up Loman, Devon. NE. of Tiverton. Upminster, Essex, 15 miles E. by N. of London. Upnor-Castle, Kent, near Frensbury, almost opposite Chatham-Dock, was built by Queen Elizabeth, for defence of the Medway. Its platform carries 37 guns; that command two reaches of the river, and defend all the ships that ride between them and Rochester bridge. Upper Ottery; see Mount Ottery. Up Park, Sussex, in Harting parish. Upperleigh, Glouce. in Westbury parish.

* URPINGHAM, a well-built town of Rutland, with a good free-school, and an hospital. It is 6 miles S. of Oakham, and 90 N. by W. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Uppington, Shrops. NW. of Wrekin-Hill. Uprightly, Cumberl. near Carlisle.

UPSALA, a town of Sweden, in Upland, anciently the residence of the sovereigns, and where the Heathen priests, in the times of paganism, offered the greatest sacrifices. It contains, exclusive of the students, about 3000 inhabitants. The ground-plot is extremely regular. It is divided into two almost equal parts by the small river Sala; and the streets are drawn at right angles from a central kind of square. A few of the houses are built of brick, and stuccoed; but the generality are constructed of trunks, smoothed into the shape of planks, and painted red. The roofs are covered in with turf; and each house has its small court-yard, or garden. Upsala was formerly the metropolis of Sweden, and the royal residence. The ancient cient palace was a magnificent building, until great part of it was consumed by fire in 1702. The cathedral, which is a large Gothic structure of brick, has been several times greatly damaged by fire, and as often repaired. The university is the most ancient in Sweden, and is the first seminary in the North for academical education. Its library contains many valuable books, and near a thousand manuscripts. Among these is the Codex Argenteus, supposed to be Uphil's Gothic translation of the Four Evangelists; but it seems rather to be written in the language of the ancient Franks. The Royal Society here is likewise the oldest literary academy in the North. Here is a botanical garden, of which the celebrated Linné was superintendant. The Swedish geographers compute their longitude from Upsala. Upsala is 35 miles NNW. of Stockholm.

Upsall and Castle, Yorks. N. of Thirsk. Upsettlington, Northumb. near Berwick. Upshire, Essex, near Waltham-Abbey. Upsidling, Dorset. W. of Cerne-Abbey. Upstreet, Kent, in Chisle parish, W. of Thanet Isle.

UPTON, a neat, well-built town of Worcestershire, noted for giving name to a hundred. From the number of Roman coins that are often dug up here, it is believed to have been formerly a station of the Roman soldiers. It has a new church, built in 1758, and is seated on the river Severn, over which it has a stone bridge, with a harbour for barges, 10 miles S. of Worcester, and 111 WNW. of London. Market on Thursday.

Upton, Berks, between Abingdon and East Hildesley. Upton, Bucks, near Datchet. and Eaton. Upton, N. of Chester, between the Dee and Mersey. Upton, Cheshire, near Overchurch and Woodchurch. Upton, Dorset. near Osminton. Upton, Dorset. near Bridport. Upton, Dorset. 2 miles from Hamworthy. Upton, Essex, in West-Ham parish. Upton, Gloucester. a hamlet to Hawkesbury. Upton, Gloucester. in Tetbury parish. Upton, Gloucester. near Badminton. Upton, Hants, N. of Andover. Upton, Hereford. NE. of Ross. Upton, Huntingd. SE. of the Giddings. Upton, Leicester. in Sibston parish, SW. of Bosworth. Upton, Lincoln. SE. of Gainborough. Upton, Norfolk, N. of Accle. Upton, Northampton. NW. of Peterborough. Upton, W. of Northampton. Upton, Nottingham. in Headdon parish. Upton, Nottingham. E. of Southwell. Upton, SE. of Shrewsbury. Upton, Somerset. NE. of Dulverton. Upton, Warwick.

URABA, a province of Terra Firma, on a gulf of the same name, in the government of Carthagea, E. of the province of Darien.

URAL, a river of the Russian empire, in Asia, which rises in Mount Caucasus, and watering Uralsk, in the province of Orenburg, falls into the Caspian Sea, by three mouths, below Gurief.

URALIAN COSSACS, a people that inhabit the Russian province of Orenburg, in Asia, on the S. side of the river Ural. These Cossacs are descended from those of the Don: they profess the Greek religion; but there are a kind of dissenters from the established religion, whom the Russians called Roskolniki, or Separatists, and who style themselves Staroverski, or Old Believers: they consider the service of the established church as profane and sacrilegious, and have their own priests and ceremonies. The Uralian Cossacs are all enthusiasts for the ancient ritual, and seem to prize their beards more than their lives. The river Yaik, however, is now called Ural; the Yaik Cossacs are denominated Uralian Cossacs; and the town of Yaitsk, Ural. The Uralian Cossacs enjoy the right of fishing on the coast of the Caspian Sea, for 47 miles on each side of the river Ural. Their principal fishery is for sturgeons and beluga, whose roe supplies large quantities of caviare; and the fish, which are chiefly salted and dried, afford a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire. In consequence of these fisheries, these Cossacs are very rich.

URALSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Caucasus, seated on the river Ural, Ural, about 328 miles NE. of Astracan. Till the year 1774, it was called Yaitsk. See the preceding article.

URANIENBURGH, was formerly a magnificent castle of Denmark, in the little Island of Huen, in the middle of the Sound. It was built for Tycho Brahe, who called it Uranienburgh, or the Castle of the Heavens, and who here made his observations; but it is now in ruins.

URBANEA, a town of Urbino.

URBINO, a city of Italy, capital of the duchy of Urbino, containing a ducal palace, a university or academy, (one of the most ancient in Italy) a noble college, several churches, and 16 convents. The palace was built by Duke Frederick, who furnished it with many ancient statues of marble and bronze, excellent paintings, and a library of curious and rare books. The library was conveyed to Rome, by Pope Alexander VII. The houses are well built, and great quantities of fine earthen ware are made here. It is situated on a hill, at the union of the two rivers, near the head of the Foglio, 18 miles S. of Rimini, and 120 NE. of Rome.

URBINO, a duchy of Italy, in the pope's territory, bounded on the N. by Romagna, on the NE. by the Adriatic, on the SE. by Ancona, on the S. by the Perugiano, and on the W. by Tuscany and Romagna. It is about 55 miles in length, and 45 in breadth. Here is great plenty of fish and game; but the air is not reckoned wholesome, nor is the soil fertile. One of the chief productions is silk. Urbino was formerly governed by its own dukes, of whom the last, Francis Maria, of Rovere, dying in the year 1631, without male issue, the pope took possession of his territory. The duke had, by will, in 1626, confirmed the pope's claims, and already, in effect, made over the country. Poggio Imperiale, and other allodial estates in this country, belong, however, by female inheritance, to the duke of Tuscany. Urbino is the capital.

Urchfont, Wilts, NE. of East Lavington. Urchingfield, SW. of Hereford. Urcote, Gloucest. S. of Thornbury.

URE. See YOWRE.

URGANTZ, a town of Asia, in the country of Charasm, on a river which runs into the Lake of Aral. It was formerly a very considerable place, having been four miles in circumference; but it is now greatly reduced. Lat. 42. 55. N. long. 59. 25. E.

URGEL, a town of Catalonia, seated on the river Sagra, 60 miles W. of Perpignan, and 78 N. by W. of Barcelona.

URI, the most southern canton of Switzerland, and the fourth in rank. It is bounded on the N. by the canton of Schweitz, and the Lake of the Four Cantons; on the E. by the Grisons, and the canton of Glarus; on the S. by the bailiwicks of Italy; and on the W. by the canton of Underwalden and part of Bern. It is about 60 miles in length, and 28 in breadth. Altorff is the capital. The people are Roman Catholics, and were formerly free, under the jurisdiction of the empire. Albert I. however, aiming at their entire subjection, placed a severe vogt over them, whose name was Gëtzler, who, among other irritating procedures, set up a hat on a pole, at Altorff, with orders that the same tokens of regard should be paid to it as to his own person. William Tell openly refused to comply with this mark of slavery, and soon after, viz. in 1308, effected a union between the three cantons of Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, for shaking off the Austrian yoke, which, in 1315, was improved into a perpetual alliance.

URI, LAKE OF, in Switzerland. See WALDSTÄTTER SEE.

Urlingford, in Kilkenny, Leinster.

Urnisson, Lancashire, SW. of Manchester. Urpeth, Durham, NW. of Lumley-Castle.

URQUHART, a town of Ross-shire.

Urswick, Lancast. S. of Ulverston.

USBEC TARTARY, or MAWARAL-NAHAR, a country of Western Tartary, S. of the country of the Kalmucs. These Tartars are divided into several tribes, governed by their respective khans; but formerly they were under one sovereign, and were accounted the most powerful of all the Tartarian nations. Their principal khans pride themselves in being descended from Tamerlane, whose birth-place was the ancient city of Samarcand. The Usbeks, in their persons, are said to have fairer complexions and neater features than the Kalmucs. Their religious profession is Mahometanism; and they differ, in general, very little from the people of the northern provinces of Hindoostan. That country is supplied hence with the most serviceable horses, camels, and other cattle.

Ussborn, Great and Little, Yorks. near the Ouse, SE. of Boroughbridge.

USEDOM, an island of Pomerania, seated at the mouth of the river Oder, on the Baltic, 30 miles in length, and irregular in breadth. It is subject to Prussia, and has a town of the same name, situated on the SW. coast.

USERCHE, a town in the department of Correze, 16 miles NNW. of Tulle, and 217 S. of Paris.

USHANT, an island of France, on the coast of Finisterre, about 12 miles from the continent. It is 10 miles in circumference, and contains several hamlets, a castle, a small port, and about 700 inhabitants.

* USK, a town of Monmouthshire, seated on the river Usk. It is a large place, with well-built stone houses, 141 miles W. of London. Market on Monday.

USK, a river of S. Wales, which rises on the W. side of Brecknockshire, and watering the towns of Brecon, Crickhowel, Abergavenny, Usk, and Caerleon, enters the Bristol Channel below Newport.

Usk, in Kildare, Leinster.

Ushelt, Yorks. near the river Wharfe, NE. of Sherborn. Uflett, Yorks. by the Ouse, NW. of Burton-upon-Trent.

USNEACH, a mountain in West Meath, Leinster, on which fires were kindled by the Druids, in honour of Beal, or the Sun. It was the grand Bealtinne of the northern parts of Leinster, where the states assembled, and held judgment on criminals, when such as were accounted worthy of death, were burnt between two fires of Beal. This seems to have given rise to the account of the Druids offering up human victims as sacrifices. Children, also, and cattle, were made to pass between these fires by way of purification.

USSEL, a town in the dept. of Correze, 30 miles NE. of Tulle.

Uffelby, Linc. NW. of Market-Raisin. Ufshaw, W. of Durham.

USTIANO, a town in the Mantuan.

Ustings, Bucks, between Winslow and Aylesbury.

USTIUG, or VELIKOI USTIUG, a town of Vologda.

Uston, Berks, on the Kennet, between Silham and Aldermaston. Usway, a river in Northumberland, which runs into the Cocket, below Whitside. Usworth, Durham, W. of Hilton-Castle. Utkinton, Cheshire, a mile from Torperley.

UTRECHT, a large and celebrated city of the United Provinces, capital of a province of the same name. It is of a square form, and about 3 miles in circumference, without its four suburbs, which are considerable. The steeple of the cathedral is very lofty, and the handsomest in the United Provinces. There is a great number of churches and hospitals. The students of the university, which is very famous, wear their ordinary dress, and board in private houses in the town, as there are scarcely any endowed colleges in Holland. All the avenues to this city are handsome, and the environs are full of gardens, walks, and groves, which, added to the purity of the air, render Utrecht one of the most agreeable places for residence in these parts, and accordingly a great many opulent families resort hither. In July, 1672, the French made themselves masters of it, when Louis XIV. entered the city in state, accompanied by the Duke of Orleans and the Duke of Monmouth; but, on the 13th of November, the Duke of Luxemburg, who had been appointed governor, abandoned the city and the whole province, after having compelled them to pay 450,000 livres. This town is famous for the treaty of union, signed in 1579. between the Seven Provinces, which laid the foundation of the republic; as likewise for the treaty of peace, concluded here, in 1713, between the allies and France. It is seated on the ancient channel of the Rhine, 18 miles SSE. of Amsterdam, and 27 NE. of Rotterdam. Lat. 52. 7. N. lon. 5. 8. E.

UTRECHT, one of the Dutch United Provinces, surrounded on all sides by Holland and Guelderland, excepting one small strip of land to the northward, and bordering on the Zuyder Zee. The air is very healthy here; nor are there any inundations to fear, as in other provinces; the soil is mostly rich meadow, though, in many parts, full of turf grounds, and the country is pleasant. The length of it is not above 30 miles, and the breadth is no more than 20, although it contains 70 towns and villages. The number of Calvinist ministers is 79, who hold a synod once a year at Utrecht. The Roman Catholics have above 30 churches. There are but few Lutherans, Remonstrants, and Anabaptists.

Utterby, Lincolnshire, 3 miles from Louth.

* UTTOXETER, a large town of Staffordshire, with a bridge over the river Dove, that leads into Derbyshire. Here are a great number of iron forges, and its market is the greatest in this part of England, for corn, cattle, hogs, sheep, butter, and cheese. By the late inland navigations, it communicates with all the midland counties. It is seated among excellent pastures for breeding and fattening cattle, 13 miles NE. of Stafford, and 136 NW. of London. Market on Wednesday, Fairs on May 6th, and July 31st.

UTZNACH, a town of Zurich, which belongs, however, to the cantons of Glarus and Schweitz, who appoint a bailiff alternately.

Vurnwey, a river of Montgomeryshire, which runs into the Severn near Melverly.

* UXBRIDGE, a town of Middlesex, which, though it is a hamlet to Great Hillingdon, is governed independently by two bailiffs, two constables, and four headboroughs. The Coln runs through it, in two streams, and over the main stream is a stone bridge, that leads into Buckinghamshire. Near it is a navigable canal, which communicates with the Thames at Brentford. A treaty was carried on here between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1645; but it was broken off. The house in which the plenipoten-

WALACHIA, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded on the N. by Moldavia and Transylvania; on the E. by Bessarabia and the river Danube; on the S. by Bulgaria; and on the W. by Transylvania, the bannat of Temeswar, and the Danube. It is 280 miles in length, and 150 in its greatest breadth. It abounds in excellent horses and cattle, and there are mines of several kinds. The soil is very fertile; and there are good pastures, with wine, oil, and all manner of European fruits. The inhabitants, who are chiefly of the Greek church, are wretchedly ignorant; and the highest attainments of the ecclesiastics seldom go beyond reading and singing well, and knowing the ceremonies of the church. Walachia is governed by a prince, often elected by the people, and styled waywode, despot, or hospodar. He is a vassal of the Ottoman Porte; his yearly tribute generally amounting to about 60,000 ducats.

Walberton, Suffex, SW. of Arundel.

Walberry, Essex, near Hallingbury.

WALDSHUT, a town of Austrian Suabia, one of the four Forest Towns, 19 miles W. of Schaffhausen, and 26 E. of Basl.

WALDSTÄTTER SEE, or LAKE OF THE FOUR CANTONS, one of the finest lakes in Switzerland, with respect both to its extent, being 20 miles in length, as to the sublimity and variety of the scenery it exhibits. It consists of three principal branches, called the Lakes of Lucern, Schweitz, and Uri. The upper branch, or Lake of Lucern, is in the form of a cross, and is bounded towards the town by cultivated hills sloping gradually from the water, contrasted on the opposite side by a mass of barren and craggy rocks. Mount Pilate, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, rises boldly from this lake. Towards the E. of this branch, the lake contracts into a narrow creek, scarcely a mile across. Soon after, it again widens, and we enter the second branch, or Lake of Schweitz; with the canton of Unterwalden on one side, and that of Schweitz on the other. Here the mountains are more lofty, and infinitely varied; some covered to the very summits with the most lively verdure, others perpendicular and craggy; here forming amphitheatres of wood; there jutting into the water in bold promontories. Near Brumen is the third branch, or Lake of Uri, which takes a SE. direction; the scenery the most sublime imaginable. It is a deep and narrow lake, about 9 miles long, bordered on both sides by rocks uncommonly wild and romantic, and, for the most part, perpendicular, with forests of beech and pine growing down their sides to the very edge of the water.

WALES, a principality in the W. of the island of Great Britain, comprehending 12 counties; namely, Anglesey, Carnarvonshire, Denbighshire, Flintshire, Merionethshire, and Montgomeryshire, in North Wales; Brecknockshire, Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire, Glamorganshire, Pembrokeshire, and Radnorshire, in South Wales. This country is, for the most part, mountainous, but its produce sufficient for the maintenance of the inhabitants. It is the country to which the ancient Britons fled, when this island was invaded by the victorious Saxons. They are now called Welsh, and continue to preserve their ancient language. The western part is bounded by St. George's Channel and the Irish Sea; the southern by the Bristol Channel; the northern by the Irish Sea; and the eastern by the counties of Chester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth. It contains 751 parishes, and 58 market towns. The air is clear and sharp, the cattle small, and provisions, in general, good and cheap. Wales is particularly remarkable for goats, which naturally delight in hilly countries; for fuel they use wood, coal, and turf. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which are noted in the different counties. Wales was long governed by independent kings, till their last prince, Llewellyn, being vanquished and slain, in 1283, Edward I. reduced the whole country under the English dominion. He also invested the principality in his second son, Edward, who afterwards becoming heir of the English monarchy, the eldest son of the king of England have ever since been created Prince of Wales. In the reign of Henry VIII. the government and jurisprudence of Wales were modelled according to the English form, and the inhabitants admitted to the enjoyment of all the English rights and liberties, particularly that of sending members to parliament; a knight for every shire, and a burghers for every shire-town, except Merioneth.

WALES, NEW NORTH, a country of N. America, W. of Hudson's Bay.

WALES, NEW SOUTH, a country of N. America, extending 150 leagues along the SW. coast of Hudson's Bay, and subject to Great Britain. See HUDSON'S BAY and LABRADOR.

WALES, NEW SOUTH, the eastern coast of New Holland, extending from lat. 43. 49. to 10. 37. S. being the NE. and SE. extremities of that vast island. This coast was first explored by Captain Cook, in 1770; and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany Bay, in lat. 4. 80. S. Capt. Arthur Phillips being appointed governor of the intended settlement, as well as commodore on the voyage, sailed from Portsmouth, 1787, on board the Sirius frigate, accompanied by the Supply tender, three storeships, and six transports, which had on board a detachment of marines, and 778 convicts, of which 220 were women. He arrived at Botany Bay on the 18th of January, 1788; but finding this bay very ineligible, in many respects, for a colony, on farther exploring the coast, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about three leagues and a half N. of Cape Banks; and here the settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney Cove. With respect to the country, a vast chain of lofty mountains runs nearly in a N. and S. direction, farther than the eye can reach, about 60 miles inland. The general face of the country is pleasing, diversified with gentle risings and small winding valleys, covered, for the most part, with large spreading trees, affording a succession of leaves in all seasons. A variety of flowering shrubs, almost entirely new to a European, and of exquisite fragrance, abound in those places which are free from trees; and, among these, a tall shrub, bearing an elegant flower, which smells like English May, is peculiarly delightful, and perfumes the air to a great distance. The trees, according to Capt. Tench and others, are of so bad a grain, that they can scarcely be used for any purpose. This, however, has been ascribed, in Governor Phillips's voyage, to their being used in an unseasoned state. They yield vast quantities of red gum, which was found a cure for the dysentery. It is of an acrid quality, and therefore requires to be given along with opiates. The tree which yields it is of a very considerable size, and grows to a great height before it puts out any branches. The gum itself is usually compared to sanguis draconis, but differs from it in being soluble in water, which the sanguis draconis is not. It may be extracted from the wood by tapping, or taken out of the veins when dry. There is likewise a yellow gum, which has the same medicinal qualities, but in an inferior degree. It is properly a resin, being entirely insoluble in water. It greatly resembles gamboge, but has not the property of staining, and is produced by a low, small plant, with long grassy leaves. The stem is strong and light, and is used by the natives for making their spears. The resin is generally dug up from the soil under the tree, not collected from it, and may perhaps be the same which Tasman calls gum lac of the ground. It has been tried by Dr. Blane, physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, in London, who found it very efficacious in the cure of old fluxes. Many of the plants of this country have been imported into Britain, and are now flourishing in perfection, not only in the royal botanical garden at Kew, but in many private collections. Of the few esculent plants, are a kind of bean resembling the cocos of the W. Indies, a sort of parsley and purslain; two sorts of yam, the cabbage-tree, and a palm-tree, whose nuts are very good food for hogs; with a species of cherry-tree, a wild fig, and another tree, whose fruit is not unlike a pine apple in appearance. With respect to the climate of this country, it appears not to be disagreeable: the heat has never been excessive in summer, nor is the cold intolerable in winter. Storms of thunder and lightning are frequent; but these are common to all warm countries. The quadrupeds hitherto discovered are principally of the opossum kind, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. There is also a species of dogs, very different from those known in Europe. They are extremely fierce, and cannot be brought to the same degree of familiarity with those we are acquainted with. Some of them have been brought to England, but still retain their native ferocity. These dogs, which are the only domestic animal they have, resemble the fox-dog of England. In their language, these animals are called dinge; but all other quadrupeds, without exception, they name kangaroo. There are many beautiful birds, of various kinds; among which, the principal are a black swan, swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the ostrich, or cassowary, which frequently reaches the height of seven feet, or more. Besides these, there are various kinds of sea and water fowl, soland geese, pelicans of an enormous size, gulls, shags, &c. with pigeons, quails, herons, cranes, hawks, eagles, bats, and many other land birds. Several kinds of serpents, both harmless and noxious, large spiders, centipedes, scolopendras, and lizards, have likewise been met with; together with a few insects, the principal of which are the mosquito and three or four species of ants, some as green as a leaf, which build their nests upon trees in a very singular manner. They bend down several of the leaves, each of which is as broad as a man's hand, and glue the points of them together, so as to form a purse; the viscous, used for this purpose, is an animal juice, which nature has enabled them to elaborate. Their sting is scarcely less painful than that of a bee. There are likewise many fishes, which are not known in Europe; and on the shoals and reefs are incredible numbers of the finest green turtles, gigantic cockles, lobsters, oysters, and crabs of various kinds. Some very large sharks have been seen in Port Jackson, and two smaller species, one named the Port Jackson shark, the other Watts's shark. The latter, notwithstanding its diminutive size (the mouth scarcely exceeding an inch in breadth) is excessively voracious. One of them having been taken in, and flung down upon the deck, lay there quiet for two hours; after which, Mr. Watts's dog happening to pass by, the fish sprung upon it with all the ferocity imaginable, and seized it by the leg in such a manner, that the animal could not disengage itself without assistance. The inhabitants of New S. Wales go entirely naked; and though pleased at first with some ornaments that were given them, they soon threw them away as useless. It does not appear, however, that they are insensible of the benefits of clothing, or of some of the conveniences of which their new neighbours are in possession. Some of them, whom the colonists partly clothed, seemed to be pleased with the comfortable warmth they derived from it; and they all express a great desire for the iron tools which they see their neighbours make use of. Their colour is rather a deep chocolate than a full black; but the filth with which their skins are uniformly covered, prevents its true colour from appearing. At some of their interviews with the colonists, several droll instances happened of their mistaking the negroes amongst the colonists for their own countrymen. Notwithstanding their disregard for European finery, they are fond of adorning, or rather deforming their bodies with scars, which have an uncommon, or rather hideous appearance. Sometimes the flesh is raised several inches from the skin, and appears as if filled with wind; and all these seem to be reckoned marks of honour among them. Some of them perforate the cartilage of the nose, and thrust through it a bone as thick as a man's finger, and five or six inches long. This hideous kind of ornament, humorously called by the sailors their spritsail yard, so effectually stops up both nostrils, that they are forced to keep their mouths wide open for breath, and snuffle so when they speak, that they are scarcely intelligible even to one another. Their hair is generally so much clotted with the red gum already mentioned, that they resemble a mop. They paint themselves with various colours, and ornament themselves with beads and shells, but make no use of the beautiful feathers procured from the birds of the country. Most of the men want one of the fore teeth in the upper jaw, which also appears to be a badge of honour among them. It is very common among the women to cut off two joints of the little finger; which, considering the clumsiness of the amputating instruments they possess, must be a very painful operation. The New Hollanders appear extremely deficient in the useful arts. Of the cultivation of the ground they have no notion, nor can they be prevailed upon to eat bread or dressed meat. Hence they depend entirely for subsistence on the fruits and roots they can gather, and the fish they catch. They frequently set fire to the grass, in order to drive out the opossums, and other animals, from their retreats; and they have been observed to set decoys for quails. They sometimes contrive to kill the kangaroo, and even birds of various kinds. As all these resources, however, must be at best precarious, it is no wonder that they are frequently distressed for provisions. Thus, in summer, they would eat neither the shark nor the sting-ray; but, in winter, any thing was acceptable. A young whale being driven on shore, was quickly cut in pieces and carried off. They broiled it only long enough to scorch the outside; and in this raw state they eat all their fish. They broil also the fern root, and another, the species of which is unknown. They bake their their provisions, moreover, by the help of hot stones, like the inhabitants of the islands in the Southern Ocean. Their chief subsistence, however, is fish; and when these happened to be scarce, they were wont to watch the first opportunity when the colonists hauled the seine, and often seized the whole, though a part had formerly been offered or given them. They sometimes strike the fish from the canoes with their spears, sometimes catch them with hooks, and also make use of nets, which are generally made of the fibres of the flax plants, with very little preparation, and are strong and heavy; the lines of which they are composed being twisted like whipcord. Some of them, however, appear to be made of the fur of an animal, and others of cotton. The meshes of their nets are made of very large loops artificially inserted into each other, but without any knots. Their hooks are made of the inside of a shell very much resembling mother-of-pearl. Their canoes are nothing more than large pieces of bark tied up at both ends with vines; and considering the slight texture of these vessels, we cannot but admire the dexterity with which they are managed, and the boldness with which they venture out to sea in them. They generally carry fire along with them in these canoes to dress their fish when caught. When fishing with the hook, if the fish appears too strong to be drawn ashore by the line, the canoe is paddled to the shore; and while one man gently draws the fish along, another stands ready to strike it with a spear, in which he generally succeeds. There is no good reason for supposing them to be cannibals; and they never eat animal substances but raw, or next to it. Some of their vegetables are poisonous when raw, but deprived of this property when boiled. A convict unhappily experienced this by eating them in an unprepared state; in consequence of which he died in 24 hours. If bread be given to them, they chew and spit it out again, seldom chusing to swallow it. They like salt beef and pork rather better; but they could never be brought to taste spirits a second time. Their huts are formed in a very rude and barbarous manner. They consist only of pieces of bark laid out together in the form of an oven, open at one end, and very low, though long enough for a man to lie at full length. They also take shelter in the caverns with which the rocks abound, and in the trunks of large trees, which they excavate by means of fire. The custom of going naked does not inure them so to the climate as to make them insensible of the injuries of the weather. The colonists had repeated opportunities of observing this, by seeing them shivering with cold in the winter time, or huddling together in heaps in their huts, or in caverns, till a fire could be kindled to warm them. It seems probable, however, that some knowledge of the arts will soon be introduced among them, as some have been seen attentively considering the utensils and conveniences of the Europeans, with a view seemingly of making similar improvements of their own. It has also been observed, that in some things they possess a very great power of imitation. They can imitate the songs and language of the Europeans almost instantaneously, much better than the latter can imitate theirs, by long practice. Their talent for imitation is discernible also in their sculptures, representing men and other animals, every where met with on the rocks; which, though rude, are very surprising for people who have not the knowledge even of constructing habitations in the least degree comfortable for themselves, or even clothes to preserve them from the cold. In their persons, they are active, vigorous, and stout, though generally lean. They have a quick and piercing sight, and their sense of smelling is very acute. One of them having touched a piece of pork, held out his finger for his companion to smell, with strong marks of disgust. The only kind of food they eagerly accept of is fish. Few of the women, comparatively speaking, have been seen; and such of the females as have been seen, have soft and pleasing voices; and seem to be very chaste; and notwithstanding their barbarism, seem not to be entirely destitute of modesty. The men generally display great personal courage on the appearance of any danger. No encounters between parties of the natives themselves have been observed, though, from some circumstances, it appears that wars are carried on among them. They have more than once been seen assembled, as if bent on some expedition. An officer, one day, met 14 of them marching along in a regular Indian file through the woods, each man having a spear in one hand, and a stone in the other. A chief appeared at their head, who was distinguished from the rest by being painted. They passed on peaceably, though greatly superior in numbers to the English. On another occasion, they offered no hostilities when assembled to the number of 200 or 300, and meeting the governor attended only by a small small party. With all their courage, however, they are much afraid of a musket, and almost equally so of a red coat, which they know to be the martial dress of the Europeans. The mischief which they have hitherto done has been exercised only on some of the straggling convicts, most of whom, probably, have been the aggressors. Though they allow their beads to grow to a considerable length, it does not appear that they consider them as any ornament; but rather the contrary. Some young gentlemen belonging to the Sirius, one day met an old man in the woods with a beard of considerable length, which they let him know they could rid him of, stroking their chins, and thus intimating the smoothness of them. At length he consented: and one of them taking a pen-knife from his pocket, and making the best substitute for lather he could, performed the operation with such success, that he seemed highly delighted. In a few days he paddled along side of the Sirius, pointing to his beard; but he could not by any means be prevailed upon to enter the ship. On this a barber went down to him, who again freed him from his beard, at which he expressed the utmost satisfaction. They certainly burn their dead; which, perhaps, has given rise to the story of their being cannibals. Governor Phillips observing the ground to be raised in several places, caused one of these tumuli to be opened, in which were found a jaw-bone half consumed, and some ashes. From the manner in which the ashes are deposited, it appears that the body has been laid at length, raised from the ground a little space, and consumed in that posture, being afterward lightly covered with mould. They are so honest among themselves, that they leave their spears, and other implements on the open beach, in perfect security of their remaining untouched. They are very expert at throwing their javelins, and will hit a mark with great certainty at a considerable distance. To produce fire, they take two pieces of dry, soft wood; one a stick about nine inches long, the other flat. The stick they shape into an obtuse point at one end; and pressing it upon the other, turn it out nimbly, by holding it between both their hands, as we do a chocolate-mill; often shifting their hands up, and then moving them down upon it, to increase the pressure as much as possible. By this method, they get fire in less than two minutes, and from the smallest spark they increase it with great speed and dexterity. These people are more numerous than was at first imagined; though still the number of inhabitants must be accounted few in comparison to the extent of the country; and there is great reason to believe that the interior parts are uninhabited; as from their great use of fish, it seems necessary for them to live principally on the coasts. The jurisdiction of the governor of New South Wales extends from 43. 49. to 10. 37. S. lat. From the sea-coast it extends westward as far as lon. 135. E. and thence proceeding in an easterly direction, includes all the islands in the Pacific Ocean, within the above mentioned latitudes. See BOTANY BAY, HOLLAND NEW, PORT JACKSON, and SYDNEY COVE.

Walesby, Lincoln. near Market Raisin. Walesby, Nott. SW. of Tuxford. Waleton, Cumberl. where the river Cambeck crosses the Rists Wall, near Lanercoft. Walfield, Cheshire, near Congleton. Walfleet, or Woolfleet, a bank in Essex, noted for oysters. It is situated at the mouth of the river Crouch, towards Foulness Isle. Walford, Gloucester. W. of Preston upon-Stour. Walford, Hereford. S. of Ross. Walford, Heref. N. of Brompton Bryan. Walford, Shropf. W. of Albrighton. Walgrave, Northamp. between Northampton and Kettering. Walgrave, Berks. in the parish of Bray. Walgrave, Yorkf. near Scarborough. Walham, or Wadham Green, Middlesex, between Little Chelsea and Fulham, has several genteel houses. Walham, Nottinghamshire, SE. of Blith. Walham Mead, near Gloucester. Walhampton, Hants, near Lymington.

WALKENRIED, a town of Klettenburg, Upper Saxony, 44 miles NNW. of Erfurt.

Walker, Northumb. on the Tyne, NE. of Newcastle. Wakeringham, Nott. SE. of Misterton. Walkern, Hertford. E. of Stevenage, on the river Beane. Walkham, or Waycomb, Somersetf. near Wells. Walkhampton, Devonshire, SE. of Tavistock. Walkhamsted, Surry, near Godstone. Waltham, Yorkf. SW. of Boroughbridge. Waltham, Yorkshire, near Beverley. Wall, Northumb. N. of Hexham. Wall, Staffordf. S. of Lichfield, has the remains of walls encompassing 2 acres of ground, called Castle Crofts, wherein have been found two ancient pavements of Roman bricks. A tradition has prevailed here, from time immemorial, that by this field there was a city, but demolished before the conquest; which is judged the more probable from the several Roman coins found here, and from the plain appearance of the military way called called Watling-street, from hence to Penkridge. Wall, and Marsh, Kent, near Romney. Wall Grange, Staff. on the Churner, between Cheadle and Leek. Walland, Gloucestershire, near Bristol. Wallborough, Hants, near W. Woodhay.

WALLENBURG, a town of Basle, Switzerland, 15 miles NNE. of Soleure.

Wallendon, Devonshire, near Meth.

WALLENSTADT, a town of Switzerland, incorporated into the bailiwick of Sargans, but enjoying many distinct privileges. It derives its importance from the passage of the merchandise transported from Germany through the Grisons, to Italy. It is seated at the E. end of a lake of the same name, 15 miles NW. of Coira.

WALLENSTADT, a lake of Switzerland, about 9 miles in length, and two in breadth. It is bounded by high mountains, except to the E. and W. the scenery of which is uncommonly wild and picturesque. On the side of the canton of Glarus, the mountains which form its borders are cultivated; enriched with wood or fine meadows; and studded with churches, cottages, and small villages; the Alps of Glarus rising behind, their tops covered with snow. On the other side, for the most part, the rocks are grotesque, craggy, inaccessible, and perpendicular; but here and there a few cultivated necks of land are formed at the edge of the lake, and at the bottom of these rocks, exhibiting a beautiful contrast to the barrenness above and round them. Numberless waterfalls, occasioned by the melting of the snows, fall down the sides of the mountains from a considerable height, and with an almost inconceivable variety. This lake is exceedingly clear, deep, and cold.

Wallerfot, Cheshire, near Vale Royal.

Walley, Nottinghamshire, near Holbeck Woodhouse. Walliborn, Shropshire, NE. of Minsterley.

WALLINGFORD, a town in Berkshire, seated on the Thames, over which is a stately stone bridge, above 300 yards long, with 19 arches and 4 draw bridges. The principal trade is making of malt. It is a place of antiquity, having been surrounded by a wall a mile and a half in circumference. It made a good figure in the times of the Danes and Saxons, and had a strong castle, now demolished, which was often besieged in the barons wars. It has a free school, and a handsome market-house, in which the magistrates keep the sessions; and is 14 miles NNW. of Reading, and 46 W. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Friday.

Wallington, Herts, a mile NE. of Biggrave. Wallington, Norfolk, near Downham. Wallington, Northumberland, E. of Kirk Whelpington. Wallington, Surry, in Carshalton parish. Wallingwells, Nottinghamshire, NW. of Workop.

WALLKILL, a river of N. America, in New York. See DROWNED LANDS.

WALLOONS, a name formerly given to the inhabitants of a considerable part of the Netherlands.

Wallop, Upper, Middle, and Lower, Hants, on the river Wallop, near Stockbridge. Wallop, Upper and Lower, Shropshire, near Caude Castle. Wallapoint, Devonshire, NE. of Kingsbridge.

WALLÖT, or WALLESEA ISLES, Essex, in the river Crouch, W. of Foulness Isle. The water here is brackish; on which account the inhabitants fetch what they use from the other side of the creek. It is 5 miles long and 1 broad, and is secured from the sea by a wall of earth.

Wall-End, Northumberl. 3 miles from Newcastle upon-Tyne. Wall-Town, Northumb. near Thirlewall Castle, near the Picts-Wall, which, a little to the W. of it, is in the greatest perfection: it is 3 yards high, and has 16 regular courses, and at one part are 16 of the facing stones entire. Wall-Town, Northumberl. on the Picts Wall, N. of Ovingham. Walmer, Kent, S. of Deal, separated from its coast by a narrow channel. Walmer, Gloucester, in Westbury parish. Walmesley, Lancashire, NW. of Bury.

WALMIRSTADT, a town of Magdeburg, Lower Saxony, situated on the Ohra, 10 miles N. of Magdeburg.

WALNEY, an island on the N. part of Lancashire. It is 9 miles in length, but hardly 1 in breadth; abounds with sea-gulls, and serves as a bulwark to the hundred of Furness, against the waves of the Irish sea. It has 2 or 3 small villages and a chapel.

WALPO, a town and county of Slavonia, on the river Walpo, 20 miles NNW. of Essek.

Walpole, Suffolk, near the river Blithe, S. of Halefworth. Walpole, St. Andrew's and St. Peter's, Norfolk, in the marshland between the Ouse and the Nyne.

WALSALL, a town of Staffordshire, with manufactories of nails, bridle-bits, stirrups, spurs, bellows, &c. A canal has been lately cut from hence to the collieries at Bradley. It is 15 miles S. of Stafford, and 116 NW. of London. Market on Tuesday.

Walsham in the Willows, Suffolk, between Buddefdale and Wulpit.

WALSHAM,

WALSHAM, NORTH, a handsome town in Norfolk, with a plentiful market on Thursday. It is 10 miles N. of Norwich, and 123 NNE. of London. South Walsham is much nearer to Norwich, and NE. of it.

Walbrocroft, Lincolnshire, gives name to a hundred N. of Market-Raishin.

Walstown, in Cork, Munster.

WALSINGHAM, a town in Norfolk, famous formerly for a monastery, which had a shrine of the Virgin Mary, almost as much frequented as Thomas à Becket's, at Canterbury. Erasmus, who visited it in his time, describes the chapel as 'bright and shining all over, by the reflection of the tapers on heaps of jewels, gold, and silver.' It is 25 miles NW. of Norwich, and 116 NNE. of London. Old Walsingham lies to the NE. of it. Market on Friday.

Walsoke, or Popenhoe, Norfolk, in the marsh-land, SW. of the Walpoles. Walworth, Hants, NE. of Fareham. Walworth, Herts; NE. of Hitchin.

WALTENBUCH, a town of Wirtemberg, Suabia, 8 miles S. of Stuttgart.

Walterston, Dorsetshire, near Piddletown. Walterston, Heref. NE. of Trewin. Waltham, Kent, 3 miles E. of Wye. Waltham, Kent, near Hinkell. Waltham, Lincolnshire, S. of Grimsby.

WALTHAM-ABBAY, a town of Essex, with manufactures of printed linens, pins, and gunpowder. It is seated on the river Lea, which here forms several islands, 12 miles N. by E. of London. Market on Thursday.

* WALTHAM, OR BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, a small town of Hampshire, 8 miles S. of Winchester, and 65 SW. of London. Market on Friday.

WALTHAM-ON-THE-WOUL, a town in Leicestershire, with a small market on Thursday. It is 16 miles NNE. of Leicester, and 113 N. by W. of London.

Walham, Magna and Parva, Essex, NW. of Chelmsford. Walham, North, Hampshire, SE. of Overton.

* WALTHAM, WEST, OR WALTHAM-CROSS, a town, partly in Middlesex and partly in Hertfordshire, separated by the river Lea from Waltham-Abbey. A small market on Tuesday.

Walham, White, Berks, 3 miles from Maidenhead. Walhamstow, Essex, on the river Lea, contiguous to Layton, and 5 miles NE. by E. of London.

WALTON, a town of Virginia, 60 miles SW. of Richmond.

Walton, a village in Surry, seated on the Thames, over which it has a handsome bridge, 3 miles W. of Kingston. Walton, Bucks, near Beaconsfield. Walton, Camb. NW. of Royston. Walton, Cumb. near Stapleton and Bewcastle. Walton, Derbyf. near Alfreton. Walton, Derbyf. W. of Chesterfield. Walton, N. of Dorchester. Walton, Essex, under Naze Point, S. of Harwich, is one of the 3 Sokens. Great numbers of copperas stones are found on the shore; and here are several copperas houses, where it is made. Walton, Glouc. near Tewkesbury, where is a mineral water of the same property as Cheltenham Spa. Walton, Gloucef. in Deerhurst parish. Walton, Herts, NE. of Datchworth. Walton, Huntingd. near the Saltreys. Walton, Lanc. on the Derwent, a mile from Preston. Walton, Lanc. near West Derby. Walton, Leic. near the Swift, E. of Lutterworth. Walton, Northamp. NW. of Peterborough. Walton, Shropf. N. of Chirbury. Walton, NE. of Shrewsbury. Walton, Shropf. near Bridgenorth. Walton, Somersf. near the Bristol Channel, between Porthead and Clevedon. Walton, Somersf. SW. of Glattonbury. Walton, Staff. near Bafwick. Walton, Staff. near Stone, has a bridge over the Trent. Walton, Staff. near Chebsey. Walton, Suff. on the Orwell, SE. of Ipswich, has the ruins of a priory, once a cell to the monks at Rochester. It has the remains of a castle, the foundation of which is 187 feet long and 9 feet thick, where great numbers of Roman bricks are found. Its ancient market has been long disused, but the cross still remains. Walton, Yorkf. near Wetherby. Walton Cardiffe, Gloucef. a mile SE. of Tewkesbury. Walton-D'Eyeville, Warw. near Wellesburn. Walton, E. and Walton Prior's, or W. Norfolk, N. of the marsh-land. Walton, Grange, Staff. SW. of Gnostall. Walton-Hall, Derbyf. E. of Whichnor. Walton-Head, Yorkf. W. Riding, near Kirby-Overblow. Walton-Hill, and Place, Surry, E. of Leatherhead Downs. Walton-Lee, Surry, near Chertsey. Walton, Maudduit, Warwickf. N. of Walton D'Eyeville. Walton, Nether and Upper, Cheshire, on the Mersey, near Warrington. Walton on the Woul, Leicestershire, near Loughborough. Walwarn, a river in Cheshire, which runs into the Lee, above Copenhall. Walwick, Chesters, Northumberland, near the Grange, on the banks of the Tyne. Here was formerly a Roman station, the vallum of which forms an oblong square, in length about 170 paces, and in width 130. Within this space are crowded the ruins of stone buildings, which which appear to have stood in lineal directions, forming streets. On the south, without the vallum and fosse, many ruins of buildings appear. Walwick Grange, Northumb. SE. of Simondsburn, on the Picts' Wall, where have been found a Roman altar and inscriptions. Here the wall is in tolerably good preservation, and the prospect filled with the most agreeable subjects. Walworth, Surry, between Newington Butts (in the parish of which it is) and Camberwell. It is already a considerable village, and is very rapidly increasing in buildings. Walworth, Dutham, near Heighington. Wambridge, Shropshire, NE. of Wellington. Wambrook, Dorset. 2 miles N. of Chardstock. Wamden and its Heath, Bucks, between Woburn and Newport-Pagnel. Wammingore, Sussex, NW. of Lewes. Wampul, a river in Cumberland, which runs into the Eden mouth below Kirkbride. Wampul, Cumb. in Aketon parish. Wamson, Northumb. on the Tyne, W. of Tinmouth Castle. Wamborough, Surry, between Guilford and Aldershot. Wamborough, Wilts, 2 miles E. of Swindon. Wandle, a river of Surry, which rises near Carshalton, and falls into the Thames at Wandsworth. Wandlebury, Camb. near Gogmagog Hills. Wandsworth, a large village of Surry, seated on the river Wandle, near its confluence with the Thames. The art of dying cloth has been practised at this place for more than a century; and there are still two dyers here, one for scarlet. There are also several manufactories; namely, for bolting cloth, the printing of calicoes and kerseymeres, and the whitening and pressing of stuffs. Here are likewise oil, iron, and white-lead mills, vinegar works, and extensive distilleries. It is 5 miles SW. by W. of London. Wangford, York. E. of Bainton Would. Wangay, Essex, near Barking.

WANGEN, a free town of Suabia, trading in paper and hardware.

WANGEN, a town in the department of Lower Rhine, 12 miles W. of Strasburg.

Wangford, Suffolk, on the river Wang, NW. of Southwold. Wanlip, Leicest. on the river Soar, S. of Mountsorrel. Wanlockhead, a village in the N. part of Dumfriesshire, situated near the lead mines, with a considerable number of smelting-houses. Wanbeck, a river in Northumb. Wansdike, or Woden's Dyke, a ditch that runs from near Bath, over the Downs, to Great Bedwin; and from E. to W. over Salisbury Plain, for many miles together; cast up as a boundary, by the W. Saxons, against the incursions of the Britons. It is a strong earthen rampart, with a broad ditch on the S. side.

WANSFORTH, or WALNESFORD-BRIGGS, opposite to Stibbinton in Huntingdonshire. It has a fine bridge over the Nen, and a fine wharf on its banks. Few of our inland readers are, perhaps, unacquainted with the story of a man who was carried down the stream at this place, by the sudden rise of the river, as he slept upon a haycock; yet the editor has never met with one who could inform him of the name of the hero of the tale. This, he finds, was no other than the famous Barnaby Harrington, better known by the title of Drunken Barnaby, who has given us an account of the adventure, in one part of his entertaining journey. As the book is seldom to be met with, we shall transcribe his own account of the accident for the gratification of some of our more curious readers:

Veni Wansforth-Briggs, immanem

Vide amnem, alnum, anum;

Amnem latum, anum lautum,

Comptam, cultam, castam, cautam;

Portas, hortos speciosos,

Portus, saltus spaciosos.

Inde prato per amæni,

Dormiens temulente sæni;

Rivers surgit & me capit,

Et in fluviæ altè rapit

Quorsum? clamant; Nuper erro

A Wansforth-Briggs in Anglo-terra.

Thence to Wansforth-Briggs—a river

And a wife, will live for ever;

River broad, an old wife jolly,

Comely, seemly, free from folly;

Gates and gardens neatly specious,

Ports and parks and pastures spacious.

On a hay cock sleeping soundly,

The river rose, and took me roundly

Down the current; people cried;

Sleeping, down the stream I hied;

Where away, quoth they, from Greenland?

No; from Wansforth-Briggs, in England.

This adventurer flourished in the beginning of the 17th century.

Wansley, Nott. NE. of Codnor Castle, in Derbyshire. Wansley, Dorset. a mile and a half NW. of Beminster. Wansled, Essex, on the skirts of Epping-Forest, 6 miles NE. of London. Wansled, Hants, NE. of Titchfield. Wanstrow, Somersetshire, 5 miles S. of Frome. Wanswell, Gloucestershire, between Berkley and Slimbridge.

* WANTAGE,

* WANTAGE, a town of Berkshire, seated on a branch of the river Ock, 12 miles S. by W. of Oxford, and 60 W. of London. Market on Saturday.

Wantefdon, Suffolk, S. of Tunstall. Wantsum, an arm of the river Stour, in Kent. Wapenbury, Warw. SW. of Dunmore Heath. Wapingthor, Suffex, NW. of Stening. Wapley, Gloucef. 3 miles SW. of Chipping Sodbury. Wapley, Yorkf. between Gisborough and Moulgrave Castle. Wappenham, Northamptonshire near Towcester. Wapsburn, Suffex, near Fletching.

WARADIN GROS, a town, capital of a county of Hungary, 66 miles N. of Temesvar.

WARADIN. See PETERWARADIN.

WARANGOLE, (the Arankill of Ferishtah) a town of Golconda, formerly the capital. The site of it is still evident from the old ramparts, which are amazingly extensive. A modern fortress is constructed within it. It is 45 miles NNE. of Hydrabad.

WARBERG, a sea-port of Sweden, in Halland, with a safe harbour, on the N. sea, but only deep enough for small vessels. A very ancient castle stands at the harbour's mouth, on a rock, surrounded with water. It has a considerable trade, and is 34 miles S. of Gottenburg.

Warbleton, Suffex, 6 miles N. of Arundel. Warbness, Essex, near Harwich.

WARBORG, a town of Paderborn, in Westphalia, formerly imperial, and one of the Hanse Towns. It contains two churches, two convents, and two castles, and is 16 miles SSE. of Paderborn.

Warborn, Hants, in the New Forest. Warborow, Oxf. near Dorchester. Warbys, with its Wood and Fen, Huntingd. between Ramley and Somersham. Warbrick, Lancas. in Amounderness. Warburton, Cheshire, on the Mersey, W. of Altringham. Warcop, Westmorl. on the Eden, near the Roman Maiden Way, SE. of Appleby. Ward, Hants, SW. of Rumley. Wardal, Cumberland, in Seabraham parish, between Egremont and Ambleside.

WARDE, a decayed town of Jutland, 16 miles NNW. of Ripen, seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, which is no longer navigable for ships of burden.

WARDEIN GROS, a town of Hungary, situated on the river Koros, 66 miles N. of Temesvar. Near it is an excellent cold bath.

Warden, Bedfordshire, near Southill.

It had once a Cistercian monastery, which, with a very little alteration, is now a farm-house, with grounds of about 120 acres. Warden, Kent, in Sheppey Isle, 5 miles and a half N. of Faversham.

WARDENBURG, a town of Oldenburg, in Westphalia.

Wardendale, or Stonehill, Kent, in Wilmington parish. Warder, or Wardour-Castle, Wilts, a magnificent Gothic structure, 2 miles NE. of Shaftsbury, about 1000 yards from the road. The entrance to it is wild and picturesque. About a mile from it, a new mansion, on a most magnificent plan, standing beautifully under a woody hill, with a large piece of water before it, has been many years in erecting. Wardale, Cumberland, in the parish of Plumland, and near the beacon of Moothay. Watch and ward were kept here in former times, to guard against the inroads of the Scots.

WARDHUYS, a sea-port of Danish Lapland, seated on the Island of Wardhoe, near the continent. It has an old fort, where the governor resides, and a street of cottages, inhabited by fishermen. It is 100 miles SSE. of the North Cape. Lat. 70. 23. N.

Wardington, Oxfordf. NE. of Banbury. Wardley, Rutlandshire, W. of Uppingham. Wardley, Yorkf. SW. of Halifax. Wardon, or Wardrew, Northumb. on the river Irthing, NW. of Thirlwall-Castle. It has a famous spa, the waters of which have been analyzed, and their virtues ascertained, with conveniences for a few visitors. The situation is retired, but not romantic, having few objects, either to elevate or entertain.

* WARE, a town in Hertfordshire, seated on the river Lea, by which 5000 quarters of malt and corn are frequently sent in a week to London, by barges, which return with coals, 21 miles N. of London. In the year 1408, this town was destroyed by a great inundation; and sluices and weirs being made in the river to preserve it from future floods, Camden supposes that it hence derived its name. It has been of increasing note, ever since the reign of King John, when the high road to the N. was laid through it. Market on Tuesday.

Ware, Devonshire, near Biddiford. Ware, Upper and Lower, Somersetshire, SW. of Axbridge.

WAREBRIDGE, WAADERIDGE, or WADEBRIDGE, a town in Cornwall, chiefly noted for its bridge over the river Camel, which is much the largest in the country, having about 20 arches, some of of which are built upon wool packs, because of the quicksands. It is 5 miles NNW. of Bodmin, and 242 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

WAREHAM, a very ancient town of Dorsetshire, once British, built very regular, and forming almost a long square. The streets generally intersect each other at right angles, especially the 4 principal ones, which take their names from the cardinal points. It was formerly a large place, with 8 churches, which are now reduced to 3, as its once noted harbour is choked up. Brithric, the last king of the W. Saxons, was interred here. The inhabitants, who are about 1100, trade in tobacco-pipe clay, stockings, iron, and coals. It contains, within the walls, about 280 houses, and is situated on a rising ground, in a healthy air, near the mouth of the Frome, where it empties itself into Pool Harbour, 9 miles WSW. of Pool, and 114 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Wareborn, Kent, 5 miles and a half. S. of Ashford. Wareley, Devonf. between Tavistock and Plymouth. Wareley-Hall, Worcest. NE. of Hales Owen, in Shropf. Warelow, Derbyf. in the High Peak, near Tideswal. Warefley Park, Huntingdonf. near Granfden. Wareton, Nottinghamf. on the river Snite, S. of Bingham. Warfield, E. and W. Berks, between Sunninghill and Billingsbear. Wargrave, Berks, 2 miles S. of Henley. It has a ferry over the Thames, and had formerly a market. Wareham, All Saints, and Magdalen, Norfolk, near Wells. Wareham Bridge, Yorkshire, on the river Ware, 5 miles from Stockton. Warham-Mary, Norf. near Lynn.

WARING, a town of Virginia, 15 miles ESE. of Port Royal.

Waring's Ford, in Down, Ulster, on a branch of the river Lagan. Waring's Point, in Down, Ulster, about a mile NW. of Rostrevor. It is the entrance into the river Newry, or Narrow-Water, where coals that come down the canal are shipped off. Two ferry-boats here maintain a communication between this county and that of Lough; and near it a salt-work has been erected.

WARINGSTOWN, a town of Down, in Leinster, where the linen manufacture is carried on to great advantage.

WARKA, a town of Masovia, 10 miles S. of Czerfk.

Wark, or Werk-Castle, Northumb. by the Tweed, near Simonsburn. A small part of the ruins yet remain, which form a rude pillar. Green Head, or High Green Colliery, is in this manor. Warkleigh, Devonf. SW. of South Moulton. Warkton, Northamp. NE. of Kettering. Warkworth, Northamptonshire, near Banbury.

WARKWORTH, a borough town of Northumberland, seated on the river Coquet, with a very considerable salmon-fishery, near a quarry, of much-esteemed stone, and about 3 quarters of a mile from the sea, 5 miles SE. of Alnwick. The great tower of its old castle is a fine piece of architecture, and has most extensive and diversified views.

Wargleton, Cornwall, E. of Bodmin. Warley, Yorkf. 3 miles W. of Halifax. Warley, Great and Little, Essex, near Burnwood. Warley Wigorn, Worcest. in Hales Owen parish, surrounded by Staffordshire, between Birmingham and Dudley. Warlingham, Surry, 5 miles S. of Croydon. Warmedon, NE. of Worcester.

WARMELAND. See WERMELAND. Warmfield, Yorkf. NE. of Wakefield. Warmingcamp, Suffex, between Angmering and Burpham. Warmineham, Cheshire, on the Wheedle, S. of Middlewich. Warmingfield, Surry, W. of Axford, on the borders of Suffex. Warminghurst, Suffex N. of Washington. Warmington, Northamp. NE. of Oundle, near the river Nen. Warmington, Warwickf. a mile NE. of Edgehill.

* WARMINSTER, a populous town in Wiltshire, with a pretty large trade in corn, malt, and cheese, and a manufacture of wool, and cloth, so that it is become of more consequence than most of the borough towns in this county, although it sends no members to parliament. It has some good inns, and is seated on the river Deveril, 22 miles NNW. of Salisbury, and 97 W. by S. of London. A good corn market on Saturday. Fairs on April 11th, August 10th, and September 12th.

Warmley, Warwickshire, near Sutton-Colfield. Warmsandale, Derbyshire, in the High-Peak. Warmsworth, Yorkf. near Doncaster. Warmwell, Dorsetshire, SE. of Dorchester, near Winfrith. Warne, a river of Northumberland, which runs into the German Ocean, about 4 miles S. from Holy Island. Warnborough, N. and S. Hampshire, SE. of Basingtoke. Warnell, Cumberland, between Ireby and Ingleswood-Forest.

WARNEMUNDE, a town of Mecklenburg, in Lower Saxony. It is situated at the mouth of the river Warne, where vessels bound to Rostock pay a toll, which formerly amounted to 80,000 rix-dollars, now to about 6000, 9 miles N. of Rostock.

WARNETON, a town of Flanders, situated on the Lys, 5 miles S. of Ypres. It was ceded, with its territory, in 1715, to the States General, as a barrier town.

Warnford, Hants, NE. of Bishop's Waltham. Warnford, Northumb. W. of Sunderland. Warnoch-Chapel, Monm. NE. of Abergavenny. Warnham, Suffex, NW. of Horsham.

WARNITZ, a town of Bessarabia, near Bender.

Warpslow, Corn. near Treneglos. Warren, a river in Shrop. which runs into the Onney, a little below Hardwick. Warren, Somers. near Langport. Warren, Somers. between Bishop's Chew and Cheddar.

WARREN, a town of N. America, in Rhode Island.

Warrenstown, in Meath, Leinster.

Warrenton, NE. of Worcester. Warrington, Bucks, in Oulney parish. Warrington, Cornwall, near Launceston.

WARRINGTON, a large, neat, populous, and rich, though ancient built town of Lancashire, with large manufactories of sail-cloth, facking, huckabacks, pins, &c. Glass-houses and copper-smelting furnaces are likewise established here; and the cotton trade is now gaining ground. Large quantities of potatoes are annually exported. It is seated on the Mersey, over which it has a fine stone bridge, the last on this river, leading into Cheshire, on the great road from London to Carlisle, 18 miles E. of Liverpool, and 183 NNW. of London. A considerable market on Wednesday for flesh, corn, cattle, potatoes, and all sorts of fish. Also a particular market once a week for huckabacks.

WARSAW, a large city of Poland, the capital of that country, and of the province of Masovia. It is surrounded by a moat and double wall, and consists of the Old and New Town; and two suburbs, Kraka and Praga. The general diets, provincial assembly, and court of judicature, were held here. This city and its suburbs occupy a vast extent of ground, and are supposed to contain between 60 and 70,000 inhabitants, among whom are a great number of foreigners. The whole has a melancholy appearance, exhibiting the strong contrast of wealth and poverty, luxury and distress, which pervades every part of this unhappy country. The streets are spacious, but ill paved; the churches and public buildings are large and magnificent; the palaces of the nobility are numerous and splendid; but the greatest part of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, are mean and ill-constructed wooden hovels. In its last siege by the Russians, in 1794, it is computed that 30,000 Poles perished either by the sword, or in the flames; the suburb of Praga having been set on fire, and nearly the whole of it reduced to ashes by the merciless Russians, ten hours after all resistance had ceased. It is now subject to Prussia, and is situated on the Vistula, which is about as broad here as the Thames at Westminster, but very shallow in summer. Lat. 52. 14. N. lon. 21. 6. E.

Warborough, Yorks. W. Riding, a mile from Stainborough. Wardsdale, Cumb. N. of Eskdale. Warflow, Stafford. between Sheen and Butterton. Warsop, Notting. between Worksop and Mansfield.

WARTA, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Siradia, situated on a river of the same name, which runs into the Oder. Also a town of Neisse, in Silesia.

WARTENBURG, a town of Ermeland, in Prussia; a town in the archduchy of Austria; a town and lordship, surrounded by the principality of Oels, in Silesia; a castle and imperial county, the lands of which lie in detached parts in the circle of Upper Rhine; the castle is 6 miles NE. of Lautern; a town of Boleslaw, in Bohemia; and a town of Bavaria, situated on the Strong, 24 miles NE. of Munich.

Warter Priory, Yorkshire, NE. of Pocklington. Wartbel, NE. of York. Wartley-Hall, Staffordshire, near Birmingham. Wartling, Suffex, near Hurst Monceaux. Wartnaby, Leicestershire, SE. of Dalby on the Woud. Warton, near the Weever, SE. of Chester. Warton, Cumberl. N. of Ireby. Warton, Heref. near Leominster. Warton, Lancas. in Kirkham parish, near the mouth of the Ribble, on a lake called Ware, and at the foot of a hill called Warton Cragg. Though obscure, it is an agreeable little town, with a neat church, and a good grammar school and library. Warton, Lancas. near the influx of the Decker, into the Ken sands. Warton, Lincolnshire, NE. of Gainsborough. Warton, Northumb. W. of Rothbury. Warton, Yorks. near Wilton and Yorks-would. Wartrew, Lancashire, near Liverpool. Warwick, Cumberland, NE. of Carlisle, and a little N. of Wetherall. It has a stone bridge over the Eden.

WARWICK, called by the Britons CAER GUARVIC, and CAER LEON, a fine, fine, large, neat, and ancient town of Warwickshire, the capital of the county. Here is a castle, formerly the seat of the earls of Warwick, which stands on a rock, 40 feet higher than the river, but even with the town on the N. side. From its terrace, there is a prospect of a beautiful country beyond the Avon, consisting of rich meadows, tall groves, spacious parks, &c. Warwick has, at present, only 2 parish churches, though it formerly had 6, and as many monasteries. The houses are in general well built, and the streets, which are spacious and regular, all meet in the centre of the town. At each end of the principal one is an ancient gate. It is adorned with a good free school and a town-house of free-stone, supported by pillars, in which the assizes and quarter sessions are held; has a good trade in malt; and is situated upon a rocky eminence, near the river Avon, with a descent from it every way, which always keeps it clean, 10 miles SSW. of Coventry, and 93 NNW. of London. Within a mile of it, on the Avon, is Guy's, or as some call it, Gibb's Cliff, (a pretty retired cell, among groves and springs) where Guy Earl of Warwick, of fabulous, or at least obscure history, is said to have lived a hermit, after his military exploits abroad. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

WARWICK, a town of Virginia, 6 miles S. of Richmond; another town of Virginia, 65 miles ESE. of Richmond; and a town in Rhode Island, 7 miles S. of Providence.

WARWICKSHIRE, a county of England, bounded at its northern extremity by a point of Derbyshire, on the NW. by Staffordshire, on the NE. by Leicestershire, on the W. by Worcestershire, on the E. by Northamptonshire, and on the S. by Gloucestershire and Oxfordshire. Its extent from N. to S. is about 47 miles, and about 35 from E. to W. where widest. It is the most central county in the kingdom, and somewhat of an oval form, is divided into 4 hundreds and 1 liberty, and contains 1 city, 13 market towns, 158 parishes, 330 villages, about 24,000 houses, and 180,000 inhabitants. The air is mild, pleasant, and healthy, and the more so, since the woodlands have been thinned by the great consumption of wood in the iron works; the woodlands being now converted to tillage and pasture. The northern part of the county, called the Woodlands, is divided from the S. called the Feldon, by the river Avon; but the soil of both is rich. This county produces corn, malt, wood, wool, cheese, coal, and lime-stone. Mr. Wedge, in his view of the agriculture of this county, estimates the whole at 618,000 acres, of which only about 154,530 are constantly under a successive round of tillage or grass-seeds. The remaining 463,470 acres he supposes to consist of gardens, about 4000 acres; of meadows, 82,000 acres; of pasture and feeding land, 150,000 acres; of woods, canals, rivers, &c. 50,000 acres; of open field-land, 57,000 acres; and of waste-lands and roads, 126,470 acres. The principal rivers are the Avon, Tame, and Arrow. The canals that pass through this county are, one from the Wednesbury and Dudley coal and lime works, to Birmingham, and from thence to Fazeley and Fradley Heath, to join the Staffordshire Grand Trunk, extending from Fazeley to Atherstone, Bedworth, and Coventry; one reaching from that at Longford to Braunston and Oxford; one from Birmingham to Worcester; one branching out of the Worcester, one way to Dudley, &c. and the other to Stratford-upon-Avon; and one from Birmingham to Warwick. Warwick is the county town.

WASA, a sea-port town of Sweden, in Finland, situated on the E. coast of the Gulf of Bothnia, 150 miles N. of Abo.

WASDALE, Yorks. near Kirby in Cleveland. WASDALE, Cumberland, at the foot of Copland Fells, 2 miles N. of Eskdale. WASH, a river in Rutland, which runs into the Welland, above Stamford.

WASH-A-CUM-MOW, or CLEARWATER LAKE, in N. America, in lat. 56N. and lon. 108. 20. W. It is about 30 miles in length, and from 5 to 10 in breadth.

Washborn, Great, Gloucesters. 7 miles NNE. of Tewkesbury. Washbrook, a river in Yorkshire, which runs into the Wharfe, near Otley. Washbrook, Gloucester, a hamlet in the parish of Winton. Washbrook, Suffolk, 3 miles W. of Ipswich. Washenburg, near Lincoln, S. of the Witham.

WASHES, a large but shallow estuary, of Lincolnshire and Norfolk, which is under water when the tide is in, and passable by travellers when the tide is out, though not without some danger to strangers who are unacquainted with the quicksands. King John lost his baggage here in going to Lincolnshire. Particular parts of this inlet, which runs into the land, have particular names, such as Fosdyke Wash, below Spalding; Cross Key's Wash, below Wisbeach, at the mouth of the Nen, &c. this last is the immediate boundary between the two counties.

Washfield,

Washfield, Devonshire, near Tiverton. Washford, Devonf. in Wemworthy parish, on a brook that runs into the Taw. Washford, Yorkf. E. of Knaresborough, on the same river. Washingley, Huntingdonf. near Stilton. Washington, Derbyshire, in Scarfsdale, W. of Altretton. Washington, Durham, on the Wear, W. of Sunderland, and 8 miles N. of Durham. Washington, Suffex, NW. of Stening.

WASHINGTON, the name of several counties in the United States of N. America; namely, in Rhode Island; in New York, of which Salem is the capital; in the SW. corner of Pennsylvania, its capital of the same name, 20 miles SSW. of Pithburg, is considerable for a variety of manufactures; in Maryland; in Virginia; in N. Carolina; in S. Carolina; in the district of Charleston; and in Georgia, the capital of which is Golphinton; also a town in Kentucky, situated on the Ohio, 66 miles ENE. of Frankfort.

WASHINGTON, a town of N. Carolina, formerly called Bath; it is seated on the N. side of the river Tar, with a good harbour, 20 miles NW. of Newbern.

WASHINGTON, a town of N. America, in Georgia, and county of Wilkes. Near it is a medicinal spring, which rises from a hollow tree, the inside of which is covered with a coat of nitre, an inch thick; and the leaves around the spring are incruusted with a substance as white as snow. The waters have been found beneficial in rheumatic cases, and are said to be so in all disorders arising from humours in the blood. It is 13 miles SW. of Peterfburgh.

WASHINGTON, a city of N. America, now building for the metropolis of the United States. It is seated at the junction of the rivers Potomac and the Eastern Branch, extending about 4 miles up each, including a tract of territory scarcely to be exceeded, in point of convenience, salubrity, and beauty, by any in the world. This territory, which is called Columbia, lies partly in the state of Virginia, and partly in that of Maryland, and was ceded by those two states to the United States of America, and by them established to be the seat of government, after the year 1800. The plan combines not only convenience, regularity, elegance of prospect, and a free circulation of air, but every thing grand and beautiful that can be introduced into a city. It is divided into squares or grand divisions, by streets running due N. and S. and E. and W. which form the ground work of the plan. However, from the capitol, the president's house, and some of the important areas in the city, run diagonal streets, from one material object to another, which not only produce a variety of fine prospects, but remove the insipid sameness which renders some other great cities unpleasing. They were devised to connect the separate and most distant objects with the principal, and to preserve through the whole a reciprocity of sight. These great leading streets are all 160 feet wide, including a pavement of 10 feet, and a gravel walk of 30 feet planted with trees on each side, which will leave 80 feet of paved street for carriages. The rest of the streets are, in general, 110 feet wide, with a few only 90 feet, except North, South, and East Capitol Streets, which are 160 feet. The diagonal streets are named after the respective states composing the Union, while those running N. and S. are, from the capitol eastward, named, East First Street, East Second Street, &c. and those W. of it are, in the same manner, called West First Street, West Second Street, &c. Those running E. and W. are from the capitol northward named, North A Street, North B Street, &c. and those S. of it are called S. A Street, South B Street, &c. The squares, or divisions of the city, amount to 1150. The rectangular squares generally contain from 3 to 6 acres, and are divided into lots of from 40 to 80 feet in front, and their depth, from about 110 to 300 feet, according to the size of the square. The irregular divisions produced by the diagonal streets are some of them small, but generally in valuable situations. Their acute points are all to be cut off at 40 feet, so that no house in the city will have an acute corner. All the houses must be of brick or stone. The area for the capitol (or house for the legislative bodies) is situated upon the most beautiful eminence in the city, about a mile from the Eastern Branch, and not much more from the Potomac, commanding a full view of the city, as well as a considerable extent of the country around. The president's house will stand upon a rising ground, not far from the banks of the Potomac, affording a fine water prospect, with a commanding view of the capitol, and some other material parts of the city. Due S. from the president's house, and due W. from the capitol, run two great pleasure parks, or malls, which intersect and terminate upon the banks of the Potomac, and are to be ornamented at the sides by a variety of elegant buildings, houses for foreign ministers, &c. Interspersed through the city, where the most material streets cross cross each other, are a variety of open areas, formed in various regular figures, which in great cities are extremely useful and ornamental. Fifteen of the best of these areas are to be appropriated to the different states composing the Union; not only to bear their respective names, but as proper places for them to erect statues, obelisks or columns, to the memory of their favourite eminent men. Upon a small eminence, where a line due W. from the capitol, and due S. from the president's house, would intersect, is to be erected an equestrian statue of General Washington, late president of the United States. At the junction of the rivers, a fort is to be erected, to include an arsenal and magazines. Places are marked out for other public buildings; as a marine hospital, with its gardens; a general exchange, and its public walks; a city hall, churches, colleges, market-houses, theatres, &c. The president of the United States, in locating the seat of the city, prevailed upon the proprietors of the soil to cede a certain portion of the lots in every situation, to be sold by his direction, and the proceeds to be solely applied to the public buildings, and other works of public utility within the city. This grant will produce about 15,000 lots, and will be sufficient not only to erect the public buildings, but to dig a canal, conduct water through the city, and to pave and light the streets, which will save a heavy tax that arises in other cities, and consequently render the lots considerably more valuable. The Eastern Branch of the Potomac is one of the safest and most commodious harbours in America, being sufficiently deep for the largest ships, for about 4 miles above its junction with the Potomac, while the channel lies close along the edge of the city, and is abundantly capacious. This river contains 30 and 35 feet to near the upper end of the city, where it is 18 and 20 feet deep. The city, being situated upon the great post road, exactly equidistant from the northern and southern extremities of the Union, and nearly so from the Atlantic Ocean to the river Ohio, upon the best navigation, and in the midst of the richest commercial territory in America, commanding the most extensive internal resources, is by far the most eligible situation for the residence of congress; and it is now pressing forward, by the public-spirited enterprise, not only of the people of the United States, but also of foreigners. The inland navigation of the Potomac is so far advanced, that craft loaded with produce, now come down that river and its several branches; from upward of 180 miles to the great falls, which are within 14 miles of the city. The canals at the great and little falls, with their locks, are now completed; the navigation is entirely opened between tide water and the head branches of the Potomac, which will produce a communication by water between the city of Washington and the interior parts of Virginia and Maryland, by means of the Potomac, the Shannandoah, the South Branch, Opecon, Cape Capon, Patterson's Creek, Connocheague, and Monacy, for upward of 200 miles, through one of the most healthy, pleasant, and fertile regions in America, producing, in vast abundance, tobacco of superior quality, hemp, Indian corn, wheat, and other small grain, with fruit and vegetables peculiar to America, in vast abundance. The lands upon the Potomac, above the city of Washington, all around it, and for 60 miles below, are high and dry, abounding with innumerable springs of excellent water, and well covered with large timber of various kinds. A few miles below the city, upon the banks of the Potomac, are inexhaustible mountains of excellent free-stone, of the white and red Portland kinds, of which the public edifices in the city are now building. Above the city also, upon the banks of the river, are immense quantities of excellent coal, lime-stone, and marble, with blue slate of the best quality. The Tyber, which is the principal stream that passes through the city, is to be collected in a grand reservoir, beside the capitol, whence it will be carried in pipes to different parts of the city; while its surplus water will fall down in beautiful cascades through the public gardens west of the capitol, into a canal. The plan of this city was formed by Major l'Enfant. Most of the streets were marked out, and the squares divided into lots, in 1792, since which time, some thousands of workmen have been constantly employed. It is 100 miles SW. of Philadelphia. Lat. 38. 53. N. lon. 77. 15. W.

WASSAB, or WARSHABS, a country of Africa, on the Gold Coast. The soil is barren, but abounds in gold.

WASSAW, or WASHAW, GREAT and LITTLE, (this last lies to the SW. of Great Washaw) islands on the E. coast of Georgia, in N. America. The former is about 16 miles in circumference. Lat. 32. 51. N.

Wasing, Berkshire, near Aldermaston. Wasperton, Warw. on the Avon, a little below Barford. Wassal Hill, Worcesterf.

a mile and a half from the Severn. It is noted for the remains of a Roman station. Wassand, Yorkshire, in Holderness, near Hornsey.

WASSENBURG, a town of Juliers, situated on the Ruhr, 9 miles ESE. of Ruremonde.

WASSERBURG, a town of Upper Bavaria, trading in salt; and a town and lordship of Suabia, situated on a point of land, which projects into the lake of Constance, 1 mile N. of Buchorn.

WASSIGNY, a town in the dept. of the Aisne, 16 miles NW. of Vervins.

Wast, Glouc. a hamlet in Hawkesbury. Wastal-Foot, and Wastal-Head, Westmorl. in the Burbeck, S. of Ragsill and Shap. It has a spa-water like that at Harrogate. Wasts, the name of several places in Northumberland, especially in Readfale, and N. Tmedale, and the adjacent mountains.

WASUNGEN, a town of Henneburg, in Franconia, situated on the Werra, 4 miles SW. of Schmalkalden.

WATCHET, an ancient town of Somersetshire, on the Bristol Channel, with a harbour, and a few small coasting vessels, which supply the glass-houses at Bristol with the ashes of sea-weed, of which abundance is burnt here for that purpose. The inhabitants fetch vast heaps of pebble from the coast, and burn it into lime for building; no cement being more durable for masonry that is to lie under water, where it grows as hard as marble. They also export lime-stone and alabaster, great quantities of which fall down the cliffs, by the washing of the sea, and gather great plenty of the lichen marinus, or sea-liverwort, on the rocky coast and cliffs, at low water, which they send to distant parts of the country. It contains about 140 houses, and is 14 miles NNW. of Bridgewater, and 153 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Watchfield, Berks, near Shrivenham.

WATERBURG, a town of Connecticut, 20 miles WSW. of Hartford.

WATEREE, a river in S. Carolina, which runs into the Cangaree, about 5 miles N. of Amelia.

WATEEHOO, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 6 miles long and 4 broad, discovered by Captain Cook in 1777; it is a beautiful spot, with a surface composed of hills and plains, and covered with verdure. The soil, in some parts, is light and sandy; but, farther up the country, a reddish cast was seen on the rising grounds, where the islanders build their houses, 2 or 3 of which were perceived by glasses to be long and spacious. The manners of the people of this island, their general habits of life, method of treating strangers, language, religious ceremonies, &c. greatly resemble those that prevail at Otaheite. The language spoken here was usually well understood by Omai, and by two New Zealanders. Lat. 20. 1. S. lon. 15. 15. W.

Waten-Lath, Cumberl. S. of Keswick. Water, Cumberl. near Langholm. Water-Beach, Camb. W. of Newmarket, and 6 miles from Cambridge. Watercomb, Dorsetl. a mile N. of Wormwell. Water-Crook, Westmorl. has its name from a remarkable curve of the Ken, a little below Kendal. Near it, on the same side of the river, are the banks and ditches of an old fort, supposed to have been Roman, from the coins, broken altars, and other antiquities that have been found here, at different times. Waterden, Norf. NE. of Houghton-Hall. Water-Eaton, Oxf. on the Charwell, SW. of Islip. Waterfall, Staff. S. of Grindon, where the river Hampse, or Hans, after a course of 7 or 8 miles from its spring, falls into the ground, and does not reappear till it enters the river Manifold, about half a mile off. Waterford, N. of Hertford.

* WATERFORD, a city and sea-port of Munster, in Ireland, capital of a county of the same name, and containing about 35,000 inhabitants. The streets are narrow, and the air is not very healthy; but it has an excellent harbour, situated extremely well for trade, and ships of great burden may ride at the quay. It stands on the Suir, which is a broad, deep, and rapid river, 5 miles above its junction with the Nore and Barrow. The white glass and other manufactures, are in a flourishing state. Upwards of 70 sail of shipping are employed in the Newfoundland trade. For many weeks together, upwards of 3000 hogs are killed weekly; and of butter, there have been exported from 60 to 70,000 casks per annum; besides which, the commerce in beef, corn, linen, &c. with England and other countries, is very considerable. The quay is above half a mile in length, and of a considerable breadth. Packet boats sail now regularly between this port and Milford-Haven. It is 8 miles N. of St. George's Channel, and 75 S. by W. of Dublin. Lat. 52. 18. N. lon. 7. 8. W.

WATERFORD, a county of Ireland, about 40 miles in length, and from 8 to 24 in breadth; bounded on the S. by St. George's Channel; on the W. by Cork and a part of Tipperary; on the N. by the the river Suir, which separates it from Tipperary and Kilkenny; and on the E. by Waterford Haven, which parts it from Wexford. It contains 34 parishes, about 18,796 houses, and 110,000 inhabitants; and though in general mountainous, with here and there frightful rocks and precipices, is a fine country, fertile, pleasant, and rich. Among the mountains are 4 considerable loughs or lakes, in which are found trout and char. On the summits of most of them (which are in some parts 720 yards above the level of the sea) are large heaps of stones of great size, supposed to be the ruins of some buildings, but without the intervention of mortar or cement.

WELLINGBOROUGH, a large, ancient, populous, and well-inhabited town of Northamptonshire, very pleasantly seated on a rivulet that empties itself into the Nen, near the town, and over which it has an elegant new bridge, 12 miles NE. of Northampton, and 68 N. by W. of London. It has a great trade in corn, and a manufacture of lace; as also a very considerable one of shoes, there being not less than 1000 shoemakers constantly employed here, of whom about 50 are principal manufacturers. It had the name of Wellingborough Forum, from its market (granted by king John at the petition of the monks of Crowland, who were then in possession of the manor) and from the many wells or springs in and about the town, some of which are medicinal, particularly the noted one, called Red Wells. Henrietta Maria, wife to Charles I. lay many weeks here to drink them. A dreadful fire, in July 1738, consumed about 800 dwelling-houses, out-houses, &c. comprising the greatest part of the town, in 6 hours time, so that very few had time to save their effects; but it is since re-built in a more handsome manner, of a kind of red stone, the foundation of which is chiefly on a red-stone rock. Market on Wednesday.

Wellingham, Norfolk, S. of Rainham-Hall. Wellingham, Sussex, N. of Lewes, on the same river. Wellingbore, Linc. near Welborn. Wellington, Heref. E. of Webley. Wellington, Sussex, 2 miles N. of Lewes.

WELLINGTON, a small town of Shropshire, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in digging for coal, lime, and iron-stone. Here is no particular manufactory, but there are two furnaces, worked by a steam-engine, one of the largest in England. Its church has been lately rebuilt, and is supported on cast-iron-pillars, which gives a lightness to the building, and has a very good effect. It is seated near Wrekin Hill, 12 miles E. of Shrewsbury, and 152 NW. of London. A pretty good market on Thursday.

WELLINGTON, a town of Somersetshire, with a manufactory of serges, druggets, &c. and a considerable pottery. It is seated on the river Tone, 7 miles SW. of Taunton, on the road to Exeter, and 147 W. by S. of London. Market on Thursday.

Wells, in Wexford, Leinster. Wells, in Carlow, Leinster.

* WELLS, a fishing town on the N. coast of Norfolk, exporting malt and corn to Holland, and importing the Dutch pottery. It has a good harbour, and a deep channel, and is situated between Clay and Burnham, 121 miles NNE. of London. Market disused.

* WELLS, a city of Somersetshire, seated at the foot of a hill, has its name from the wells and springs that are about it. Though but a small city, the streets are broad, and it is well inhabited. The cathedral, beside which there is only one parish church, is a stately pile, and the market-house is a neat structure, supported by pillars. Here are considerable manufactories of knit worsted stockings and bone-lace. The number of houses is about 700, and the inhabitants are about 4500. When the see is vacant, the bishop is chosen by an equal number of delegates appointed by each of the churches of Bath and Wells, and he is installed at both places. Besides the bishop and dean, there belong to this church 27 prebendaries and 19 minor canons, with a number of spiritual court men, proctors, and other officers. It is 16 miles S. of Bristol, and 120 SSW. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

WELLS, a town of Austria.

* WELSHPOOL, or POOL, a corporation town of Montgomeryshire, seated on the river Severn, which begins to be navigable about three quarters of a mile from the town, in a rich vale, 19 miles S. by W. of Shrewsbury, 7 N. of Montgomery, and 169 NW. of London. It is the principal trading town in the county, being the great market for flannels, and the houses are in general well built. The assizes for the county are held in the town-hall. The castle, called Powis-Castle, is built of a reddish stone, on an eminence, and was formerly of great strength, beauty, and extent. The market, which is considerable for cattle and provisions, is on Monday. Fairs on the second Monday in March, the Monday before Easter, June 5th, the first Monday after June 27th, September 12th, and December 16th.

It is a fertile and pleasant province; diversified by mountains, rocks, hills, and dales, clothed with forests of birch, poplar, mountain-ash, pine, and fir; and abounding with lakes, which are extremely beautiful. They are from 4 to 40 miles in circumference; some so narrow as to appear like broad rivers; others of a circular shape; their shores, in some parts, steep and rocky; in others gently sloping, but always feathered with hanging wood to the margin of the water; the roads delightfully winding through the dark forests which overhang the impending precipices, and overshadow the water. Numerous rivulets flow from these lakes, and form, sometimes, small picturesque cataracts. The chief occupation of the inhabitants is mining, smelting, &c. together with fishing, and a little agriculture. Their trade consists mostly in masts, planks, timber, the bark of birch trees, &c. In the chief river Clara, or Stor Elbe, is a profitable salmon fishery.

WESTMINSTER, a city of Middlesex, the residence of the monarchs of Great Britain, the seat of the parliament, and of the high courts of justice, and, constituting, with London and Southwark, with which it is so united as to appear one city, the metropolis of the British empire. In early times, this great and noble part of the metropolis, was a little, mean, unhealthy place, (with nothing in it worthy of notice, but its minster or abbey, built where formerly stood a temple of Apollo, till thrown down by an earthquake in the time of Antoninus Pius) and situated to the W. of St. Paul's, or London, in a marshy island called Thorney, surrounded on one side by the Thames, and on the others by a branch of the river, called Longditch. For the convenience of this minster or monastery, a few houses were, probably, first erected, which, at length, grew into a small town, called in ancient books, the town of Westminster. It was, for many ages, a place entirely distinct from London, and there was a large space between them. The road which led from London to it was called the Strand; which was first paved as far as the Savoy, in the year 1385. Westminster owed its most distinguished privileges to Henry VIII. who, in the 37th year of his reign, erected it into an honour, and on the dissolution of its famous abbey, in the year 1541, he converted it into a bishopric, appointing the county of Middlesex (Fulham excepted) for the diocese. It had, however, but one prelate, for Edward VI. translated the see to Norwich. Upon this occasion Westminster became a city, for the making of which, according to lord chief-justice Coke, nothing more is required than the appellation of a bishop's see. The abbey, dedicated to St. Peter, is now a collegiate church, the dean of which is always the bishop of Rochester. See LONDON.

Westmiston, Suffex, near Chiltington.
Westmoor, Somersf. near Barrington.

WESTMORLAND, in old records written WESTMERLAND, a county of England, bounded on the NW. and N. by Cumberland; on the E. and SE. by Yorkshire; and on the S. and SW. by Lancashire. Its extent from NE. to S. is 40 miles, and its breadth about 24.

It is generally divided into the baronies of Kendal and Westmorland, as also into 4 wards, which contain 11 market towns, 32 parishes, 220 villages, and about 70,000 houses. The air is clear, sharp, and salubrious, the natives being seldom troubled with diseases, and generally living to a good old age. The soil is various; that on the mountains is very barren, while the Lowlands, called the Barony, or Bottom of Westmorland, a large, open, champaign country, about 20 miles long, and 14 broad, are fertile, producing good corn and grass, especially in the meadows near the rivers. In the hilly parts, on the western borders it is generally believed there are vast quantities of copper ore and veins of gold; some mines of copper are worked, but most of the ore lies so deep, that it will not answer the expense. This country yields the finest slate, and abundance of excellent hams are cured here. The mountainous districts, here called Fells, which compose a large part of the county, are far from being unprofitable; they feed large flocks of sheep, produce plenty of grouse, or moor-game, and abound with rivulets, which water the valleys beneath. The principal rivers are the Eden, Lune, and Ken, which carry their name to the sea; with the smaller streams of Lowther, Tees, Emont, Belo, and Rootha. It has also several fine lakes, the principal of which is Winander-Mere, the bottom of which is one continued rock. In the forest of Martindale, to the S. of Ulls-Water, the breed of red deer still exists in a wild state. The Earl of Thanet is hereditary sheriff. Appleby is the county-town, but Kendal is the most considerable one, for size, trade, and population.

WESTPHALIA, named originally from the people inhabiting between the Weser and the Rhine, who were called Westphalians (the ancient Saxons, in general, being divided into Westphalians, Angrians, and Eastphalians) one of the circles of Germany, bounded on the E. and S. by the circles of Lower Saxony and Upper and Lower Rhine; on the W. by the United Provinces; and on the N. by the German Ocean, and circle of Lower Saxony. The air is cold, but the soil produces pastures and some corn, though there are a great many marshes. The horses are large, and the hogs are in high esteem, especially the hams, known by the name of Westphalia hams. The principal rivers are the Weser, the Embs, the Lippe, and the Roer. It contains the sovereign bishoprics of Osnaburgh, Munster, and Paderborn, the abbeys of Corvey, Stablo, Essen, and Verden, the principality of Minden, the counties of Ravensburg, Tecklenburg, Ritburg, Lippe, Spiegleberg, Schawenburg, Hoyer, Diepholt, Delmenhorst, Oldenburg, Embden, or East Friesland, Bentheim, and Mark; the cities of Cologne and Aix-la-Chapelle; the town of Dortmund; and the duchies of Juliers, Berg, and Cleves, with some smaller states and signories. The diets of the circle are usually appointed at Cologne, but the archives are kept at Dusseldorf.

WESTPHALIA, THE DUCHY OF, in the circle of Lower Rhine, S. of Munster and Lippe, and E. of Berg and Mark; it is about 40 miles in length, and near 30 in breadth, and is pretty much a mountainous country, full of wood, but moderately fertile, producing corn, cattle, game, and fish, with plenty of iron ore, lead, calamy, copper, and silver, with salt springs, &c. It is divided into 3 parts, called the Hellwegge, the Hoarstrank, and the Suderland, or Sourland. The first of these is low; the second stands somewhat higher between the other two; and the third consists of hills and vales. The principal rivers are the Ruhr, the Lenne, the Dimel, and the Lippe. It is subject to the archbishops and electors of Cologne, who governed it by marshals till the year 1442, but, at present, it is under the direction of an electoral bailiff. Brilon is the capital.

WESTPOINT, a town of Virginia, situated on the York river, 35 miles E. of Richmond.

WESTPORT, a sea-port of Mayo, in Connaught, seated on a small river, whose mouth here forms a fine bay within Clew bay, 8 miles W. of Castlebar.

WESTRA, one of the Orkney islands, containing about 1300 inhabitants. It is about 8 miles long, and from one to three broad, and is situated 9 miles NNE. from the island of Pomona. There are two sloops, of 70 or 80 tons burden, belonging to this island, chiefly employed in carrying kelp to market; and there is a good harbour, for small vessels, on the NW. coast.

NW. of Tintmouth. Wetbele, Warw. W. of Arrow; has a chapel dependent on the church of Kinwarton. Wetheral, Cumb. near Carlisle, formerly a monastery, the gate of which, with a fine elliptic arch, still remains. Near it are three remarkable cells, communicating with each other by means of a gallery in front. They are cut out of the solid rock, about 40 feet above the level of the river which washes the bottom of the rock, and are very difficult of access. The only way to come at them is by a narrow and difficult pass; from whence there is a perpendicular ascent of about seven feet, which could only be surmounted by means of a ladder, which the person ascending might draw up after him.

WETERAVIA, or WETERAW, a country of Germany, situated between Hesse and the river Maine, and so named from the river Wetter, which rises in the county of Solms, and runs into the river Nidda at Assenheim. The northern part is called Wetterwald.

WEXIO, a sea-port of Sweden, in Smoland, seated on the Helga Lake, which contains a group of woody islands, 50 miles W. of Calmar. This town, though a bishop's see, is exceedingly small; the houses are mostly of wood.

Wey, a river of Dorsetshire, which runs into the sea at Weymouth. Wey, a river of Surry, which rises in Hampshire, waters Guilford, and enters the Thames at Weybridge. It has been made navigable to Guilford and Godalmin, and a canal has been lately cut from it to Basingstoke in Hampshire.

WEYBRIDGE, a village of Surry, situated ated at the conflux of the rivers Wey and Thames, 9 miles SW. Kingston, and 20 SW. of London.

Weyhill, Hants, 8 miles W. of Andover. Its fair on October 10th, is reckoned the largest in England for store sheep, Sussex and Kentish hops, Wilts, Somerset, and Gloucester cheese, leather, &c.

* WEYMOUTH, a clean, agreeable, improved, and well-frequented sea-port, town of Dorsetshire, seated at the mouth of the Wey, and incorporated with Melcomb-Regis, with which it communicates by means of a drawbridge. Its port is injured by the sands, from which circumstance its trade, which was once very considerable, it is now much reduced; it sends however, some ships to Portugal and Newfoundland. There is, likewise, a great resort of company hither, for the purpose of sea-bathing, for which it is excellently fitted by its remarkably fine beach, and the softness of its air. Here is a custom house, and a good quay. A few plain and striped cottons are made here. Markets on Wednesday and Friday. See MELCOMB-REGIS.

WEYMOUTH, a town of Massachusetts, 5 miles S. of Boston.

The prize, however, does not appear to have been often claimed. Whicwood-Forest, Oxfordshire, between Charlbury and Burford. Whickleswith, Lancashire, on the Irwell, SW. of Manchester.

WHIDAH, a kingdom of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, extending about 10 miles along the sea, and 7 miles within land. It is a remarkably populous country, well furnished with large villages; and there are so many small ones, that they are not above a musket shot distance from each other. One single village frequently contains as many inhabitants as several entire kingdoms on the coast of Guinea. This small kingdom is divided into 26 provinces. The honies are small, round at the top, and encompassed with mud walls, or hedges. The trees are tall, straight, and disposed in regular order, presenting to the eye fine long groves and avenues, clear of brushwood and weeds. All the Europeans, who have been here, speak of the country with rapture, and extol it as a perfect paradise. A perpetual spring and autumn succeed each other. The fields are always verdant, and being planted with beans, potatoes, fruits, and roots, and covered with a multitude of houses, form one of the finest prospects in the world. The natives sow again the very next day after they have reaped, and yet the ground is not worn out; the next crop putting forth with the same vigour as the former, as if nature here were inexhaustible. The women brew the beer, dress the victuals, and sell all sorts of commodities at the market. Those that are rich employ their wives and slaves in tilling the land, and they carry on a considerable trade with the product, as well as in slaves. The natives exceed all other negroes in civilization, industry, and vigilance, and employ themselves in several kinds of manufactures. They spin cotton yarn, weave fine cotton cloth, make calabasses, wooden vessels, plates, dishes &c. and do smith's work in greater perfection than any other people on the coast. The rite of circumcision is used here, but they are not able to tell whence it is derived. Their principal idols are snakes, and particularly the feliche, a snake with a large, round, beautiful head, a short pointed tongue, resembling a dart, and a sharp, short tail; it is adorned with beautiful colours, on a light, grey ground. It is slow and solemn in its pace, except when it seizes on its prey, when it is quick and rapid. They have a mortal antipathy to venomous serpents, attacking them wherever they find them. They are amazingly tame and familiar, the natives and Europeans handling and playing with them, without dread or apprehension of danger. When the English first settled in Whidah, a sailor, just arrived, found a snake in the magazine belonging to the factory, and killing it, without scruple, threw it on the bank. The negroes, who soon discovered the sacrilege, and had it confirmed by the acknowledgment of the English, assembled all the inhabitants of the province, and massacred the factors to a man; consuming their bodies and goods in the fire they had set to their warehouse. They have oxen, cows, goats, sheep, hogs, turkeys, ducks, and hens, which last are extremely plentiful. There are many elephants, buffaloes, tigers, several kinds of deer, and a sort of hares. The fruits are citrons, lemons, oranges, bananas, tamarinds, &c. and they have vast numbers of palm-trees, from which they obtain wine. The king of Whidah, who is only their chief, resides at Sabi, or Xabier, which is the principal province of the kingdom, as the city of the same name is capital of the whole. The villages or small states are, some the king's, others the viceroy's, and others are built and peopled by particular lords, and become hereditary in their families. Their trade consists of elephants' teeth, wax, honey, and the persons of men. The English factory is about 200 miles NE. of Cape Coast Castle, within land.

* WHITBY, a well-built town, in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, commodiously seated near the mouth of the river Esk, 46 miles NE. by E. of York, and 243 N. of London. It is a considerable sea-port, building many ships for the coal-trade, and employing many others in the export of coals, canvas, butter, tallow, hams, bacon, and fish. It is a tide-haven, almost dry at low water, neither has it any river communication with the inland country. It is much frequented by colliers, and has at least 100 vessels belonging to it, of 100 tons, or more, burden. Several ships are sent thence to the Greenland fishery. On December 24, 1787, at midnight, an alarming event took place here. By the shrinking of some of the high ground, or cliff, near the sea, an esplanade, 300 yards long and 80 in breadth, on which a regular street had been built, since the year 1761, was overturned and overwhelmed. The buildings (to the number of 130, containing above a thousand inhabitants) were eighty feet above the margin of the sea, founded on a strong, new-built quay. One hundred and ninety-six families became destitute of house, fire, or food; but the doors of the humane were thrown open, and every comfort administered. One person, whose rental amounted to 100l. annually, could no more find the place where his property stood. In the neighbourhood are large alum works. Market on Saturday.

Whitcham, or Whittingham, Cumberl. near Millum-under-Blackcomb. Whitchester, Northumb. Whitchford, Warw.

* WHITCHURCH, a town of Hampshire, consisting principally of one street, lately much enlarged and beautified. It contains about 300 houses, among which are two well-accommodated inns, with a manufacture of shalloons, serges, &c. and an exclusive one of paper, for the sole use of the bank of England, long vested in the family of Porthall. The situation is low. It is 24 miles NE. of Salisbury, and 58 W. by S. of London. Market on Friday.

* WHITCHURCH, a large, pleasant, and populous town of Shropshire, with a free grammar-school. In its church, among other monuments of the Talbots, is one of Sir John, the first earl of Shrewsbury of that name. He was so valiant, and his name struck so much terror in France, that he was styled the English Achilles; neither durst any man of that age encounter him single-handed. It is situated near a large meer, from the colour of its water called Blackmeer, 20 miles N. of Shrewsbury, and 164 NW. of London. Market on Friday.

Whitchurch, Somersf. between Pensford and Bristol. Whitchurch, Warw. on the Sour, near Alderminter. Whitchurch, Wilts, SE. of Clarendon-Park. Whitchurch, Wilts, near Malmesbury. Whitchurch, Yorkf. 3 miles from Leeds.

field Castle, Northumberland, near Little Chesters, at the junction of two rivers, one of which is the Allen: White-Gate, Chef. S. of Vale Royal. Whitehall, Camb. near Wisbeach. White-Hart Forest; see Blakemore.

* WHITEHAVEN, a large, populous, rich, and improving town of Cumberland, with a good artificial harbour, defended by a long pier. It has its name from the white cliffs near it, both to the N. and S. which shelter the harbour from tempests. It contains about 16 000 inhabitants, and employs near 300 ships. Ship-building, and the accompanying manufactures of ropes, sail-cloth, &c. are carried on here very extensively, and there are also copperas works, which yield considerable profit; but the working of the coal-mines forms the principal business of the place. These are sunk to the depth of 130 fathoms, and carried to a vast distance under the sea, where vessels of large burthen ride at anchor. From these, a great part of Ireland, and other places, are supplied with coal, from which the proprietor, Lord Lonsdale, derives a revenue of about 16,000*l.* a year. A good deal of business is also done in the foreign and coasting trade from this port. In the year 1566, it had but six houses, and one fishing-boat; and, in 1582, it had only 12 small vessels. Whitehaven is seated chiefly in a valley, between two steep hills, 13 miles SW. of Cockermouth, and 305 NW. of London. Market on Thursday.

Whitehaugh, Stafford. SE. of Leek. Whitehall, Cumb. in the Holm. White-Hill, Surry, near Godstone.

WHITEHORN, a town of Wigtonshire, in Scotland, containing about 1890 inhabitants, of which number 756 live in the town, and the remainder in the country part of the parish. This is a place of great antiquity, having been a Roman station, the capital of a British people called Novantes, and the first bishop's see (or said to have been so) in Scotland. It is 8 miles S. of Wigton.

WHITEHORN, a small island of Scotland, near the SE. coast of the county of Wigton. Lat. 54. N.

White-Horse-Hill, Berks. White-Horse-Hill, Wilts. White House, Durham, 3 miles from Darlington. Whitekirk, a village in Haddingtonshire, 4 miles SE. of N. Berwick. White Ladies, Shrops. near Tong-Castle, where are some considerable ruins of an extensive monastery, supposed, from the arches in the church walls, to have been Saxon: Near it is the oak where Charles II. was secreted after his defeat at Worcester. White Lady-Aston, SE. of Worcester. Whiteleaf-Croft, Bucks, near Wendover, in the parish of Monks Risborough. It is 100 feet high, from 50 to 20 broad, and the beam 70 feet, cut in a chalk hill, on a large base. It is ascribed to some victory obtained by the Saxons, over the Danes, in the beginning of the 10th century. Whiteley, Northumberland, W. of Warkworth.

WHITE-MOUNTAINS, the highest part of a ridge of mountains in the state of New Hampshire, in N. America. They extend NE. and SW. to a length not yet ascertained. The height of these mountains, above the adjacent meadow, is reckoned, from observations made in 1784, to be 5500 feet; and the meadow is 3500 feet above the level of the sea. The snow and ice cover them nine or ten months in the year, during which time they exhibit that bright appearance from which they are denominated the White Mountains. From their summit, in clear weather, is a grand view, extending 60 or 70 miles in every direction. Although they are 70 miles within land, they are seen many leagues off at sea, and appear like an exceedingly bright cloud in the horizon. Their highest summit is in about lat. 44. deg. N.

Whitenorth, Dorset. two leagues from Weymouth. Whiteparish, Wilts, NE. of Downton. Whiterigg, Cumberland, in Torpenhow parish.

WIBURG, or VIBORSKOI, a government of Russia, being the province lately called Russian Finland, which was comprised in Carelia. It has Finland on the N. and W. and the Lake Ladoga and the government of Olonetz on the E. Besides pastures, the country produces rye, oats, and barley, but not sufficient for the inhabitants. It formerly belonged to the Swedes, and was ceded to the Russians, partly by the peace of Nyfadt in 1721, and partly by the treaty of Abo, in 1743. This province retains most of its ancient privileges, with some occasional modifications, which have been necessarily introduced under the new government. In the governor's court, business is transacted, in the Swedish, German, and Russian tongues. The peasants talk only the Finnish dialect; but the inhabitants of the towns understand Swedish also, and many of them German. Lutheranism is the established religion; but the Greek worship has lately been introduced by the Russians.

WIBURG, or VIBORG, a well-fortified sea-port town of Russia, formerly the capital of Carelia, and now of the government of Wiburg. A few houses are constructed with brick: but the greatest part of wood. They sell planks, tar, tallow, &c. chiefly to the English, and import wine, spices, and salt from France and Holland. The inhabitants are about 9000. It is seated on the N. side of the Gulf of Finland, 67 miles NNW. of Petersburg.

WIBURG, a city of Denmark, capital of N. Jutland, the seat of the provincial court, which is held here every month, and the residence of a governor. It is one of the most ancient towns in the kingdom, about 2 miles in circumference, and contains, at present, 3 parish churches, though prior to the reformation, it had 12 churches, and 6 convents. It is seated on a lake, called Asmid, near the centre of the province, 95 miles N. of Sleswick, and 110 NNW. of Copenhagen.

Wicham, 16 miles from Cambridge. Wichampford, Worcesterf. SW. of Evelham. Wichampton, Dorsetshire, near Morechurch. Wichenden, 5 miles from Worcester. Wichford, Cambridgef. W. of Ely. Wichling, Kent, 2 miles N. of Lenham.

WICK, a sea port and royal burgh of Caithnessf. containing about 1000 inhabitants. It is situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, 18 miles S. of Dunbay Head. The coast of this parish consists principally of high rocks, underneath which are many creeks and coves, extending up a considerable way, with hideous caverns, where fishing-boats, however, can harbour, and which abound with a vast variety of fish.

Wick, Cornwall, NE. of Boscastle. Wick, Essex, SW. of Witham. Wick, Gloucestersf. WICKLOW, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; bounded on the N. by the county of Dublin, on the E. by the Irish Channel, on the S. by Wexford and a part of Carlow, and on the W. by Kildare and Carlow. It is about 30 miles in its greatest length, and from 15 to 26 in breadth. It contains 58 parishes, about 11,550 houses, and 58,000 inhabitants. Much of it is mountainous and woody, with a mixture of rocks and bogs, yet affording beautiful and romantic views; the valleys, however, are fertile and well cultivated. In the hills rich veins of copper and other minerals are found, and lately considerable quantities of gold have been discovered.

WICKLOW, the capital of a county of the same name, in Ireland; seated on the sea side, with a narrow harbour, at the mouth of the river Leirtrim, 24 miles SSE. of Dublin. It is remarkable for having the best ale in the kingdom, which, with other provisions sent to Dublin, form the principal part of its trade. About a mile and a half to the SE. is Wicklow-Head, on which there are two light-houses.

Wickner, Norfolk, near Wollerton. Wick Risington, Gloucestershire, S. of Stow-on-the-Would. Wickstreet, Gloucestershire, on Painswick parish. Wick's End, and Odbury, Gloucestershire, near Wickware.

WICKWARE, a very ancient corporate town of Gloucestershire. It has a well-endowed school-house, and is situated on two little streams, over one of which it has a handsome stone bridge, 17 miles NE. of Bristol, and 111 W. of London. Market on Monday.

WIED or OLD WIED, a town of Westphalia, in the county of New Wied, 9 miles N. of Coblenz.

Wiersdale and Forest, a wild, solitary tract, SE. of Lancaster.

WIELICSKA, a village of Cracow, in Poland, now comprised within the Austrian kingdom of Lodomeira. It is celebrated for its salt mines, which lie 8 miles SE. of Cracow. In these inexhaustible mines are several small chapels excavated, in the salt, in which mas is said on certain days of the year. One of these chapels is above 30 feet long, and 25 broad: an altar, a crucifix, with various ornaments and statues, are all carved out of the salt. The immense size of the different excavations or chambers, with the spacious passages or galleries, the chapels above-mentioned, and a few sheds built for the horses, which are foddered below, have given rise to the exaggerated accounts of travellers, that these mines contain several villages, inhabited by colonies of miners, who never see the light. There is certainly room for such purposes, the mines being of stupendous extent and depth, and dry as a room, without the least damp or moisture. There is, however, one small spring of fresh water, which runs through the mine; but the miners have no subterranean dwellings, and do not remain below more than 8 hours at a time, when they are relieved by others. These mines have been worked above 600 years. Before the partition of Poland, in 1772, they furnished a considerable part of the revenue of the king of Poland, who drew from them an average profit of about 3,500,000 Polish florins, or 97,722l. 4s. 6d. sterling.

WIELUN, a town of Poland, in Si-radia.

* WIGAN, a large and well-built town of Lancashire, with manufactures of cotton, rugs, blankets, linen, and with pit-coal and iron works. That elegant species of coal, called Cannel, is found in plenty and great perfection in its neighbourhood. Wigan is pleasantly situated on a small stream called Douglas, which is made navigable to the Ribble, and is joined by a canal from Lancaster, 60 miles S. of Lancaster, and 196 NNW. of London. Markets on Monday and Friday.

S. of Settle. Wiggold, Gloucestershire, a hamlet, NE. of Cirencester. Wighill, York. on the Wharfe, E. of Wetherby.

WIGHT, an island on the S. coast of Hampshire, from which it is separated by a channel, two or three hours sail from Portsmouth, though only about a mile over from Hurst Castle. It was called by the Britons, Guith, and by the Romans Vectis, or Vecta. It is about 21 miles in length, and 13 in breadth, containing 5 towns, 30 parishes, and about 22,000 inhabitants. It is nearly divided into equal parts by the river Mede or Medina, which rises near the south coast, and falls into the Channel near Cowes. Across the island from E. to W. runs a ridge of hills, forming a tract of fine downs, with a chalky or marly soil, which feed a great number of fine fleeced sheep. Rabbits, hares, partridges, wild and tame fowl, &c. are also very plentiful here. In the N. parts the land is chiefly pasture; in the S. chiefly arable, producing, it is thought, as much corn in one year as is equal to the consumption of eight. The variety of prospects which this island affords, its mild air, and the neat manner in which the fields are laid out, render it a very delightful spot. It is devoted almost solely to husbandry, having no manufactory but that of salt, and it is a great resource of the London market for malted barley. Among its exports are a pure white tobacco-pipe clay, and a fine white crystalline sand, used in the manufacture of glass. The sea is continually encroaching on it on the S. parts, and abandoning it on the NE. sides. Newport is the principal town.

Wightfield, Gloucest. in Deerhurst parish. Wighlingham, SE. of Norwich. Wightmere, Stafford. N. of Burton-upon-Trent. Wighton, Norfolk, S. of Wells. Wight Wesel, York. SW. of Lynn. Wigfell, Kent, near Hawk-hurst. Wigston, Great and Little, S. of Leicester. Wigtoft, Lincolnshire, E. of Dunnington.

WIGTON, a neat town in Cumberland, seated among the moors, 12 miles SW.

of Carlisle, and 304 NNW. of London. Market on Tuesday.

WIGTON, a sea-port of Scotland, the county town of Wigtonshire, containing about 1320 inhabitants in the town and parish. Here are some manufactures of plaid and flannel. It is situated on a large bay, to which it gives name, 23 miles W. of Dumfries.

WIGTONSHIRE, a county of Scotland, sometimes called UPPER, or WEST GALLOWAY. It is bounded on the N. by Ayrshire, on the E. by Kirkcudbrightshire, and on the S. and W. by the Irish Sea. Its greatest extent, in any direction, does not exceed 27 miles. The N. part, called the moors, is naked and mountainous. Great numbers of sheep and black cattle are raised here; and they have a small breed of horses peculiar to this district, called galloways, which are very strong and gentle. It is well watered with lakes and streams, and has several commodious creeks and harbours.

WILTON, anciently called ELLANDUNE, the county town of Wiltshire, seated at the conflux of the Willy and Nadder, 5 miles NNW. of Salisbury, and 85 W. by S. of London. It had formerly, according to Leland, 12 churches, though now it has only one. Here are manufactories of tapestry, carpets, and thin woollen stuffs. It glories in Wilton-House, a villa of the Earl of Pembroke, so elegant and magnificent for its building and furniture, that its description forms, at present, one of the principal objects in a history of the arts and belles lettres. The buildings were designed by Holbein and Inigo Jones, on a plan worthy of ancient Rome. It is celebrated for the family portraits by Vandyke, and a most valuable collection of pictures, antique statues, busts, &c. among which are the whole collection of the cardinals Richelieu and Mazarine, and the greatest part of the Earl of Arundel's. Market on Wednesday.

Wilton, Hereford, a mile W. of Ross, had an ancient castle on a hill, now partly converted into a tenement. Wilton, Norfolk, near Hockwold. Wilton, Somerset, near Taunton. Wilton, Wilts, S. of Great Bedwin. Wilton, Yorkshire, near Pickering. Wilton, Yorkshire, NW. of Gisborough. Wilton Bishops, Yorkshire, N. of Pocklington.

WILTOUN, a town of S. Carolina, 21 miles WSW. of Dorchester.

WILTSHIRE, a county of England, so called from the town of Wilton, once its capital. It is bounded on the E. by Berkshire and Hampshire, on the W. by Somerset and Gloucester, on the S. by Dorset and part of Hants, and on the NW. and N. by Gloucestershire. Its length from N. to S. is near 54 miles, its greatest breadth from E. to W. 34. The air is healthy, and though something sharp on the hills in winter, it is mild during that season in the vales. The land in the northern part is generally hilly and woody, but very fertile; here being made that kind of cheese which is much esteemed, and known as North Wiltshire. In the southern it is rich and fertile. In the middle it chiefly consists of downs, that afford the best pasture for sheep; and in the valleys, which divide the downs, are abundance of corn-fields and rich meadows. In some places is found knot-grass, near 20 feet in length, with which hogs are fed, especially about Market Lavington. Its chief commodities are sheep, wool, wood, and stone; of this last there are excellent quarries at Chilmark, where some stones are 20 yards in length and 4 in thickness, without a flaw. The chief manufactures are considerable; few towns being without one, most generally in the clothing-trade. The principal rivers in Wiltshire are the Upper and Lower Avon, the Nadder, Willy, Bourne, Kennet, Adder, Duril, Were, Calve, Rey, and Wilbybourne. This county contains one city, 24 market-towns, and 304 parishes, and is divided into 29 hundreds, and 950 villages.

Wilvorton, SE. of Worcester. Wily, Wiltshire, W. of Stapleford. Wimbish, Essex, SE. of Walden. Wimbledon, Surry, on a fine heath, about a mile each way, 7 miles SW. of London. On the common, near the village, is a round camp, made by the Danes; as also a well, the water of which is never known to freeze. At Wimbledon are some copper-mills, a manufactory for printing calicoes, and another of japan ware. Wimbledon, Yorkshire, near Helmsley. Wimboldeston, WINCHEOMB, a poor town in Gloucestershire, situated on a small stream that runs into the Avon, 16 miles NE. of Gloucester, and 93 WNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

WINCHELSEA, a town in Suffex, one of the Cinque Ports, 2 miles SSW. of Rye, and 67 SW. of London. It was built in the reign of Edward I. when a more ancient town of the same name, which had 18 parish churches, and was distant about 8 miles, was swallowed up by the sea in a terrible tempest. The new town being sacked by the French and Spaniards, and deserted by the sea, soon fell into decay, and is now dwindled to an inconsiderable place, having but about 70 houses. Three of the gates are still standing, but much decayed; as also many other ruinous materials of ancient structures. Upon the level left by the sea, are the ruins of a castle built by Henry VIII.; it is circular, and faced with square stones, with one large round tower serving as a keep. Market disused.

WINCHENDON, a town of Massachusetts, 48 miles NW. of Boston.

* WINCHESTER, a very ancient city of Hampshire, called by the Britons, Caer Gwent, and by Ptolemy and Antoninus, Venta Belgarum. It is about one mile and a half in circumference round the walls, through which there are 6 gates, and suburbs leading to every one of them: it is a town of little trade or manufacture. It contained formerly 32 parish churches, but at present only six, beside the cathedral, which is a large and beautiful structure. In it were interred 13 Saxon kings or queens, whose bones were collected by Bishop Fox, and put into 6 little gilded coffins, in a wall on the S. side of the choir. These, however, in the civil wars, were dispersed and tumbled out of the chests, and restored, without distinction, after the restoration. On a fine eminence, overlooking the city and adjacent country, is the shell of a palace, built by Sir Christopher Wren for king Charles II. It was never finished, but in the late wars was fitted up for the reception of prisoners of war, and is now converted into barracks. Near this place is St. Mary's College, founded by William of Wickham, for a warden, 70 scholars, 10 fellows, 3 chaplains, 3 clerks, a schoolmaster, usher, organist, and 16 choristers; the scholars are educated for New College, Oxford. The episcopal see is so rich, that when Edward III. would have preferred its bishop, Edenden, to the see of Canterbury, he refused it, saying, that though Canterbury was the higher rack, Winchester was the better manger. A county infirmary has been established here, supported by voluntary contribution. In the road to Southampton, is the hospital of St. Cross, founded by a bishop of this see, for a master, nine poor brethren, and four out-pensioners. All travellers, who call at this hospital, have a right to demand some bread and beer, which is always brought to them. The master is generally a dignitary of the church, the appointment being very lucrative. Winchester consists of about 500 houses, has one pretty broad street, but the rest are mostly narrow; the houses are indifferently built, and its wall of flint is greatly decayed. It is seated on the river Itching, 16 miles E. of Salisbury, and 63 SW. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

WINDERMERE-WATER, or WINANDER-MERE, the most extensive lake in England, lying between Westmorland and Lancashire, and exhibiting a very great variety of beautiful prospects. It is about 15 miles in length from N. to S. but in no part broader than a mile. Opposite Ecclefrigg-Crag, it is 222 feet deep. It is famous for its fine char, and abounds also with trout, perch, pike, and eels. This lake is frequently intersected by promontories, which render its shores very winding, and it is spotted with islands. Among these, the Holme, or Great Island, on an oblong tract of about 30 acres, with a good house on it, crosses the lake in an oblique line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles, finely formed and wooded. They make together a kind of Archipelago. In navigating it upward, from the Great Island, the extremity appears singularly grand, its parts neat and picturesque; and the view of the surrounding scenery, from Cove to Kirkstun, is astonishingly sublime and beautiful.

WINDSOR, NEW, a town of Berkshire, situated on the side of a hill, near the Thames. It consists of several streets, and is well paved and lighted. The town-hall is a brick structure, with arcades of Portland stone, erected in 1686. Windsor is celebrated for its magnificent castle, built originally by William the Conqueror, re built by Edward III. and enlarged by succeeding monarchs. It is seated on a hill, which rises on a gentle ascent. On the N. side of the castle is a fine terrace, made by Queen Elizabeth, and enlarged by Charles II. who carried it round the E. and S. sides. It is faced with a rampart of free-stone, and is justly allowed to be the noblest walk in Europe with respect to strength, grandeur, and its beautiful prospects. The palaces in France and Italy have nothing to be compared with it: the terrace next the sea, in the outer court of the seraglio at Constantinople comes the nearest to it. From the Round Tower, which is much more elevated than the rest, is an extensive view to London, and into the counties of Berks, Middlesex, Essex, Herts, Bucks, Oxford, Wilts, Hants, Surry, Sussex, Kent, and Bedford. The royal apartments are adorned with many valuable paintings, particularly with the celebrated cartoons of Raphael, which were formerly at Hampton Court. Here is the royal college of St. George, consisting of a dean, 12 canons, 7 minor-canons, and 18 alms or poor knights. St. George's Chapel, erected by Edward III. in 1377, in honour of the order of the garter, is a beautiful structure, in the purest style of Gothic architecture. Opposite to the SE. side of the castle, is a neat, modern-built mansion, called the Queen's Lodge, which is the royal residence in summer; and below this, is the Lower Lodge, for the accommodation of the younger branches of the royal family. Adjoining the Queen's Lodge is the Little Park, which extends round the N. and E. sides of the castle, and forms a beautiful lawn, about 3 miles in circumference. But on the S. side of the town is a much larger park, called the Great Park, which is said to be 20 miles in circumference. Windsor is 22 miles S. by W. of London. Market on Saturday.

WINDSOR, NEW, a town of N. America, in the State of New York, 47 miles N. of New York.

WINDSOR FOREST, an extensive forest in the E. part of Berkshire, about 50 miles in circumference. It contains several villages, of which Wokingham, or Okingham, near the centre of the forest, is the principal; and though the soil is generally barren and uncultivated, it is finely diversified by hills and dales, woods, lawns, and delightful villas.

YARMOUTH, GREAT, a considerable sea-ea-port of Norfolk, seated on the river Yare, by means of which, it has the export and import trade of Norwich, and various places in Norfolk and Suffolk, 22 miles E. of Norwich, and 123 NE. of London. Its harbour will not admit ships of large burden; but it is extremely convenient for business, the vessels lying in the river, along a very extensive and commodious quay, planted with trees. Its foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic, Holland, Portugal, and the Mediterranean. It also sends ships to the Greenland fishery. The home fishing is carried on at two seasons, that for mackarel in May and June, and that for Herrings in October and November. Of these last, 50,000 barrels are generally taken and cured in one year; about 130⁰ vessels of forty or fifty tons burden, being annually employed in the fishery. The herrings are chiefly cured here by salting; and then drying them in wood smoke; when, under the name of red herrings, they are either consumed at home, or exported to Spain, Italy, and other southern countries. Yarmouth is much frequented in the season as a place for sea-bathing. The town consists of about 1500 houses, and there are a few pretty wide streets, and a spacious market-place; but they are chiefly very narrow, are called rows, and are just wide enough for their little carriages to pass through. These carriages are a kind of sledge, or very small cart, drawn by one horse, and calculated entirely for these narrow streets. A lofty steeple here serves as a landmark for those at sea; but which ever way it is viewed, it appears crooked. Off the mouth of the harbour is a bar, which prevents the entry of ships of large burden; and the roads, E. of the town, within the dangerous sands and banks of the Offing, are much frequented, though noted for frequent shipwrecks. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

YONNE, a department of France, N. of the dept. of Nievre. It is so called from the river that rises in the dept. of Nievre, passes by Chateau-Chinon, Auxerre, Sens, &c. below which last it falls into the Seine. Auxerre is the capital.

* YORK, an ancient city of Yorkshire; of which it is the capital. It has also been considered as the capital of the North, and, in point of rank, as the second city in the kingdom; but it is now surpassed in wealth and populousness by many of the more modern trading towns. The minster is reckoned the most elegant and magnificent Gothic structure in the kingdom, Lincoln, perhaps, excepted. From its top is seen a vast extent of country, particularly the open Wolds to the E. stretching almost to the sea. It is divided by the river Ouse into two parts, which are united by a stately stone bridge of five arches. The castle, built by William the Conqueror, is now a county prison for debtors and felons. Among the charitable foundations is an asylum for lunatics, by much the finest and pleasantest in England. The river Ouse is navigable to this city for vessels of 70 tons burden, although it is 60 miles from the sea. The title of lord was first annexed to the office of mayor by Richard II. The city has jurisdiction over 36 villages and hamlets, W. of the Ouse, called the Liberty of Dinty. Its members claim a seat in the House of Commons, next to the citizens of London, upon what is called the privy councillor's bench. York is 197 miles N. by W. of London. Markets on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

YORKSHIRE, the largest county in England, bounded on the N. by Westmorland, and the bishopric of Durham; on the E. by the German Ocean; on the S. by Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire; on the SW. by a small part of Cheshire; on the W. by Lancashire; and on the NW. by Westmorland. It extends 90 miles from N. to S. and 115 from E. to W. This county is divided into three Ridings; the N. Riding containing 12 wapentakes; the E. 7; and the W. 12. It contains one city, 60 market-towns, 563 parishes, and 2330 villages. The air and soil of this extensive county vary extremely; the E. Riding, on account of its neighbourhood to the German Ocean, is more inclined to humidity than the other ridings; but this inconvenience inconvenience decreases in proportion as the country recedes from the sea. However, where the air is most indifferent, the soil is most fruitful: for on the hilly parts of this riding, especially in what is called the York Wolds, the soil is generally barren; dry, and sandy; great numbers of lean sheep are therefore sold hence, and sent into other countries to be fattened for the market. The W. Riding enjoys a sharp, but healthy air, and the land, on the western side, is hilly, stony, and not very fruitful; but the intermediate valleys consist of much good meadow ground, and also pasture for the largest cattle. Much flax is grown here and large plantations of licorice, about Pontefract. On the side next the river Ouse, the soil is rich, producing wheat and barley; and, in its worst parts, very good oats. Its other commodities are iron, coal, jet, alum, horses, and goats. Here the clothing manufactures principally flourish. The N. Riding, in general, exceeds the other two in the salubrity and coldness of the air. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but on the sides of the hills, in the valleys, and plains, it produces good corn, and rich pastures for large cattle: in the district of Pickering, which forms the NE. corner of Yorkshire, and consists of a very extensive, secluded, and fertile vale, is a fossil marl, produced by a petrifying spring, very beneficial for improving land. Rape and potatoes are grown here in great quantities. Richmondshire, on the NW. of this riding, was formerly a county of itself; here many lead-mines are worked to great advantage. In Yorkshire, likewise, are the districts of Cleveland, Holderness, and Cravan. The principal rivers of Yorkshire are the Northern Ouse, and those which fall into it, as the Don, the Derwent, the Calder, the Aire, the Wharfe, the Nyde, and the Youre, all which terminate in the Humber, which falls into the German Ocean, between Yorkshire, and Lincolnshire. Here are likewise the Tees and the Hull.

YORK, NEW, one of the United States of America, bounded on the SE. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the E. by Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Vermont; on the N. by the 45th deg. of lat. which divides it from Canada; on the NW. by the river St. Lawrence and the Lakes Ontario and Erie; and on the SW. and S. of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. It is about 350 miles long, and 300 broad, and is divided into 13 counties. New York, in general, is intersected by ridges of mountains, running in a NE. and SW. direction. Beyond the Allegany Mountains, however, the country is pretty level, of a fine rich soil, covered in its natural state, with various kinds of trees. East of these mountains it is broken into hills, with rich intervening valleys. The hills are thickly clothed with timber, and, when cleared, afford fine pasture. The valleys, when cultivated, produce wheat, hemp, flax, peas, grass, oats, and Indian corn. Of the commodities produced from culture, wheat is the staple, of which immense quantities are raised and exported. The best lands in this province, which lie along the Mohawks River, and W. of the Allegany Mountains, are yet in a state of nature, or are just beginning to be settled. This state abounds with several fine rivers and lakes. The number of inhabitants, in 1771, was 148,124 whites, and 19,883 blacks; total 168,007. The capital is of the same name.

YORK, NEW, a city of N. America, capital of the state of the same name. It is situated at the SW. point of an island, at the confluence of Hudson and East Rivers, and is about four miles in circumference. The situation is both healthy and pleasant. Surrounded on all sides by water, it is refreshed by cool breezes in summer, and the air in winter is more temperate than in other places under the same parallel. York Island is fifteen miles in length, and hardly one in breadth. It is joined to the main by a bridge, called King's bridge. The channels between Long and Staton Islands, and between Long and York Islands, are so narrow as to occasion an unusual rapidity of the tides, which is increased by the confluence of the waters of Hudson and East Rivers. This rapidity, in general, prevents the obstruction of the channel by ice. There is no basin or bay for the reception of ships, but the road where they lie in East River is defended from the violence of the sea by the islands which interlock with each other, so that, except that of Rhode-Island, the harbour of New York, which admits ships of any burden, is the best of the United States. A few houses here are built after the old Dutch manner, but the English taste has prevailed almost a century. In time of peace, more commercial business is done here than in any other port in the United States. The number of inhabitants, in 1786, was 23,614. Lat. 40. 43. N. lon. 74. 5. W.

YORK FORT, in Hudson's Bay, the principal establishment of the company of that that name; this place has upwards of one hundred men at it, who send home annually, from itself and four subordinate settlements, about 20,000 skins.

YORK-TOWN, a small town of Virginia, situated on the S. side of York River, 13 miles E. of Williamsburgh.

York Wolds, a heap of hills in the middle of the E. Riding of Yorkshire. Yorkton, Shrop. NE. of Albrighton.

YORK, formerly TORONTO, a town of Canada, situated on the NW. coast of Lake Ontario, in lat. 43. 25. N. and lon. 79. 20. W. Also a town of Pennsylvania, 72 miles W. of Philadelphia; a town in the district of Maine, 50 miles NNE. of Boston; and a county of Virginia.

YOTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Houquang, situated on the Tongting Lake, and on the Yangtse river, 675 miles S. of Peking.

• YOUGHALL, a considerable town of Ireland, in the county of Cork. It has a very commodious harbour, and a fine, well-defended quay. It is seated at the mouth of the river Blackwater, 25 miles N. by E. of Cork.

Youle, a village in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, 12 miles below York, at the conflux of the Don and Humber. Here is a remarkable dike, called Youle Dike, about 10 miles long. Here are a sort of persons called Triers, because, with a long piece of iron, they search into the soft, boggy ground for subterraneous trees, which they sometimes meet with of the fir kind. They often meet with trees large enough to furnish timber for building, and the smaller trees they split into laths, or cut into chips or splinters.

Youlston, Devon. in Sherwell parish.

Young's Manor, Kent, by Chilham.

YOURE, a river in Yorkshire, which rises in the Cotter mountain, in the NW. extremity of the county, and passes by the towns of Askrig, Middleham, Mafham, Rippon, and Boroughbridge, below which last, being joined by the Swale, both these rivers constitute what is called the Ouse. On this river is the magnificent cataract, called Aysgard-Force, the water falling nearly half a mile upon a surface of stone, worn into infinite irregular cavities, and inclosed by bold and shrubby cliffs. According to Dr. Pococke, who visited Egypt, it exceeds the cataract of the Nile.

Yoxford, Suff. between Saxmundham and Halesworth. Yoxhall, Staff. 4 miles N. of Lichfield, had formerly a market.

YPRES, a town of Flanders, with a considerable manufactory in linen, of an excellent fabric, and every year, in Lent, there is a well-frequented fair. In 1242, the number of inhabitants, for the most part weavers, amounted to 200,000. By the severity of the Duke of Alva, the principal manufacturers were driven to England, from which time, that branch of trade has declined. The chatelany of Ypres contained about 30 villages, and sent deputies to the states of Flanders. By the treaty of Utrecht, it became a Dutch barrier town, and though taken by the French in 1744, was restored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. It is seated on the river Ypre, 15 miles NNW. of Lille, and 138 N. of Paris.

YRIEX, St. a town in the dept. of Upper Vienne, 20 miles S. of Limoges.

YSENDICK, a town of Dutch Flanders, 8 miles E. of Sluys.

YTHAN. See EITHAN.

YUCATAN. See JUCATAN.

YVERDUN, a town of Berne, Swisserland, in the county of Vaud, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, 15 miles in length, and containing 25 parishes. In the Theodosian table, it is called Castrum Ebredunense, and the Romans maintained here a preseñus barcariorum. It is seated at the head of the lake of the same name, 34 miles SSW. of Bern.

YVERDUN, LAKE OF. See NEUCHATEL.

YVETOT, a town in the dept. of Lower Seine, 5 miles NNE. of Caudebec.

YVICA. See IVICA.

YUMA, or LONG ISLAND, one of the Bahama Islands, 50 miles in length, and of unequal breadth.

YUMETOS, a clustre of small islands among the Bahamas, about 20 miles W. or SW. of Yuma.

YUN-NAN, a province of China, S. of Setchuen and Thibet. It contains 21 cities of the first rank, and 55 in the second and third, and is well-watered with rivers and lakes, which render it very fruitful. Gold is very often found in the sands of the rivers, and probably there are mines of the same metal in the mountains of the eastern part. There are also copper-mines, several sorts of precious stones, beside musk, benjamin, lapis lazuli, and very very fine marble, some of which is painted of divers colours. They have also excellent horses, which are strong and vigorous, but low; as also very small deer, which are kept for their amusement.

YUNNAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of a province of the same name. It is 1152 miles SSW. of Peking.

YUNNING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Honan. It is 430 miles S. of Peking.

ZACATULAN, or SACATULA, a town of Mechoacan, in N. America; situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the Pacific Ocean, 130 miles S. of Mechoacan.

Zael-Monachorum, Devonshire, SE. of Okehampton.

ZAFRA, a town in Spanish Estramadura.

ZAGARA, a famous mountain of Livadia, near the ancient Thebes. It was formerly called Helicon, and is almost always covered with snow.

ZAGATULLA, a town of Mechoacan, Mexico, 130 miles S. of the city of Mechoacan.

ZAGORIA, or DAEVELTO, a town of Bulgaria, the see of a Greek archbishop. It is situated near the Black Sea, 58 miles NE. of Adrianople.

ZAGRAB, a town in Austrian Croatia.

ZAHARA, a town of Andalusia.

ZAHARA, or THE DESERT, a vast country of Africa, stretching from near the Atlantic Ocean on the W. to Barea and Nubia on the E. and from Biledulgerid on the N. to Nigritia and the river Senegal on the S. It comprehends a space of about 600 miles from N. to S. and 1800 from W. to E. The inhabitants are a mixture of wandering nations proceeding from Arabs, Moors, Portuguese refugees, &c. subject to a number of petty princes. The commodities are camels, horned cattle, horses, dates, the fat and feathers of ostriches, and the gum Senegal.

ZAIRE, a large river of Africa, which passes through the kingdom of Congo, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between the 6th and 7th deg. of S. lat.

ZAMORA, a town of Leon, on the Douro.

ZAMORA, a town of Guadalajara, Mexico; and a town of Quito, S. America, 180 miles SSW. of Quito.

ZAMORA, a town of Algiers.

ZAMOSKI, a town of Belez, Poland.

ZANA, or SANA, a decayed town of Truxillo, in Peru, capital of a jurisdiction which extends about 25 leagues along the coast. It is situated in a charming valley, fertile in fruit and corn, and adorned with the most beautiful flowers, about 60 miles N. of Truxillo.

ZANFARA, a town of Negroland, capital of a country, 170 miles ENE. of Wangara.

ZANGUEBAR, a country of Africa, little known, situated on the eastern coast, between lat. 2. O. N. and 18. O. S. in which the Portuguese have various settlements. The inhabitants are partly of the Romish faith, and Mahometans, but mostly Pagans. The Bedouin Arabs breed cattle, and live on the flesh and milk, while the Zanges, or negroes, feed on wild beasts and fowl, which swarm all over these parts. Throughout the whole country, are mines of gold, easily got, by the help of which the indolent natives purchase necessities from other parts; but, on this very account, they are extremely jealous of letting strangers penetrate into the inland country. The principal territories are Melinda, Mongala, Mosambique, Jubo, and some others. The Portuguese trade with the natives for slaves, ivory, gold, ostrich-feathers, furs, wax, and drugs.

ZANHAGA, a district of Zahara, in Africa, bordering on the Atlantic.

ZANTE, an island of the Mediterranean, near the coast of the Morea, 17 miles SE. of the Island of Cephalonia. It is about 12 miles in length, and 6 in breadth; its principal riches consist in currants, with which it abounds. Here are also fine peaches, weighing eight or ten ten ounces, cucumbers, figs, and oil. The houses are low, on account of the frequent earthquakes, for scarce a year passes without one; but they do no great damage. The grapes are called currants, because they were chiefly cultivated about Corinth. This island lately belonged to the Venetians, and in it there are about 50 villages, but no other large towns than Zante, which is seated on the eastern side of the island, and has a good harbour. The English and Dutch have each a factory and consul here. Lat. 37. 58. N. lon. 21. 3. E.

ZANZIBAR, an island of the eastern coast of Africa, near the coast of Zanguibar. Lat. 6. 0. S.

ZARA, a city of the late Venetian Dalmatia, capital of a county of the same name, with a safe, capacious harbour. It is seated on a small peninsula, joined to the continent by an isthmus only 25 paces in breadth. On the side of the citadel the fortifications are considered as almost impregnable, being defended by very deep ditches hewn out of the rock. Near the church, which the Greeks call St. Helia, are two handsome fluted columns, of the Corinthian order, supposed to have been part of an ancient temple of Juno. The circumference of the walls extends two miles, and the number of the inhabitants is about 6000. In the castle the providitor, or governor of Dalmatia, resided. Lat. 44. 22. N.

ZARNATA, a town in the Morea, 10 miles SW. of Mistra.

ZARNAW, a town of Sandomirz, Poland.

ZASLAW, a town of Volhinia.

ZATMAR, a town of Hungary, 56 miles NNW. of Colosvar.

ZATOR, a town of Cracovia.

ZBOROW, a town of Poland, in Galicia, 63 miles E. of Lemberg.

ZEALAND, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, almost of a round form, and about 700 miles in circumference. It is bounded on the N. by the Schaggerack; on the E. principally by the Sound; on the S. by the Baltic; and on the W. by the Great Belt. The coast is much intersected by large bays; and within the country are several lakes, which, together with the rivers, abound in fish. In most parts is plenty of wood, except towards the centre of the island, where turf is generally used for fuel. It is the largest of the isles of Denmark, and exceedingly fertile; producing grain of all sorts, and in great plenty; and abounding with excellent pasture. It is particularly famous for its breed of horses. Copenhagen is the capital.

ZEALAND, one of the Seven United Provinces of the Netherlands, separated by the sea on the N. from the isles of S. Holland; by the Scheldt on the E. from Brabant; by the Hont from Flanders; and on the W. it is bounded by the German Ocean. It comprehends 8 islands, 3 of which are pretty large. Their names are Walcheren, Schowen, S. Beveland, N. Beveland, Tolen, Doveland, Wolfersdike, and St. Philip. There are likewise 6 or 7 others, of little importance. The inhabitants defend themselves from the encroachments of the sea by their dikes, which, at the bottom, are generally 25 German ells in breadth, and are so wide at top, that two carriages may pass abreast. In high tides and stormy weather, the waves, however, often force a passage, and even flow over them. The inhabitants, in general, are extremely wealthy, being maintained by their plentiful fisheries, and trade with foreign nations. The soil is fruitful in these islands, but the air unhealthy for strangers, though not for the natives. The river Scheldt, having passed by Antwerp, divides it into two, and holds, as it were, the isles of Zealand between its arms. One of these runs eastward, and the other westward, which last the fishermen call Stont, or Hont.

ZEALAND, NEW, in the South Pacific Ocean, was first discovered by Tasman, in 1642. He traversed the eastern coast from lat. 34. 0. to 43. 0. S. and entered a strait; but being attacked by the natives, soon after he came to an anchor, in the place to which he gave the name of Murderer's Bay, he did not go on shore. He called the country Staten Land, in honour of the States-General, though it has been generally distinguished in our maps and charts by the name of New Zealand. From the time of Tasman, the whole country, except that part of the coast which was seen by him, remained altogether unknown, till the year 1770, when it was circumnavigated by Captain Cook, who found it to consist of two large islands, separated by the strait above mentioned, which is 4 or 5 leagues broad, and to which he gave his own name. These islands lie between lat. 34. 0. and 48. 0. S. and lon. 166. 0. and 180. 0. E. Along the coast many small islands are formed, and it is indented by deep bays, affording excellent shelter for shipping, and abundant supplies of wood and and water. There are also several rivers capable of receiving large vessels, in which the spring-tide rises near ten feet perpendicularly. Of the two islands, the southernmost is for the most part mountainous and barren. As far inland as the eye can reach, nothing appears but mountains of stupendous height, consisting of rocks that are totally naked, except where they are covered with snow; but the land bordering on the sea-coast is clothed thick with wood, almost down to the water's edge. The northernmost island has a much better appearance: it is, indeed, not only hilly, but mountainous; yet even the hills and mountains are covered with wood, and every valley has a rivulet of excellent water. The soil of these valleys, and the plains, of which there are many overgrown with wood, is, in general light, but fertile; and it is supposed, that every kind of European grain, plants, and fruits, would flourish here with the utmost luxuriance. The winters are milder than in England, and the summers not hotter, though more equally warm. There are forests of vast extent, full of the straightest and largest timber, fit for buildings of any kind. The trees are chiefly of two sorts; one as large as an oak, distinguished by a scarlet flower, the wood of which is hard and heavy; another remarkably tall and straight, of which, probably, very fine masts might be made. Among other trees, is a species of philadelphus, which grows on the eminences that jut out into the sea, the leaves of which may be used as tea, and might be an excellent substitute for that oriental plant. Wild celery, and a kind of cresses, grow plentifully in almost every cove. Yams, sweet potatoes, and cocoas, are also raised by cultivation. Captain Cook, in 1778, planted several spots of ground with European garden-seeds; and, in 1777, in several of these spots, although totally neglected, and overrun by weeds, were found cabbages, onions, leeks, purslain, radishes, mustard, &c. and a few fine potatoes, greatly improved by change of soil. The only quadrupeds are dogs and rats: the former are domestic, and for food; and the latter, though not numerous, seem also to be eaten. The birds, like the vegetable productions, are almost entirely peculiar to the country; and though it is difficult to follow them in the woods, on account of the underwood and climbing plants, yet a person, by remaining in one place, may shoot as many in a day as will serve for six or eight others. Captain

Cook introduced European poultry, and, on his last visit, had the satisfaction to find them increased, both in a wild and domestic state, beyond all danger of being exterminated. Their creeks swarm with fish, which are not only wholesome, but equally delicious with those of Europe. Captain Cook seldom came to an anchor, but his men caught enough, with hook and line only, to supply the whole ship's crew, and when they fished with nets, every mess in the ship salted as much as supplied them when at sea some time after. The rocks are furnished with great quantities of excellent muscles, one sort of which measures above a foot in length, and with great variety of other shell-fish. The men are stout and fleshy; but none of them corpulent, like the indolent and luxurious inhabitants of Otaheite and the Society Isles; and they are also exceedingly vigorous and active. The women, in general, are smaller than the men, possessing few peculiar graces of form or person; and chiefly distinguished by the softness of their voices. The bodies of both sexes are marked with black stains, called amoco, which is the same as tattowing at Otaheite. Their dress is also the same; it consists of an oblong garment, about five feet long and four broad. They bring two corners of this garment over their shoulders, and fasten it on the breast with the other parts, which covers the body, and about the belly it is again tied with a girdle of mat. They ornament their heads with feathers, pearl shells, bones, &c. The women, sometimes, wear necklaces of shark's teeth, or bunches of long beads, made of bones or shells. Their houses are miserable lodging-places, and their only furniture is a few small baskets, in which they put their fishing-hooks and other trifles. Their food consists chiefly of fish, with which, instead of bread, they eat the root of a kind of fern, which they scorch over the fire, and then beat with a stick till the bark, or dry outside, falls off. Beside their dogs, they also contrive to kill birds; and in most part of the northern islands, they have sweet potatoes, cocoas, and yams; but, in the southern, nothing is raised by cultivation. Their cookery consists wholly in roasting and baking, which latter is performed in the same manner as at Otaheite. The women eat in common with the men, and but little subordination, or distinction of rank, is observed among them. From Cape Kidnappers, in lat. 39. 43. S. for upwards of 80 leagues to the northward, ward, the people acknowledge one sovereign, called Teratu, and under him several subordinate chiefs, who probably administer justice, and to whom great respect is paid; but whether his authority be hereditary or delegated, is uncertain. This part of the coast is much the most populous; tillage, weaving, and the other arts of peace, being here best known, and most practised. The canoes are more decorated, the plantations more numerous, and the clothes and carving finer, than any where else. In other parts, they are scattered along the coast, in single families, or in larger tribes, and each in a state of perpetual hostility with all the rest. From their scanty stock of vegetables, if their fishing should fail, they have no resource against absolute famine. Upon the whole, there is little room to doubt that these people are cannibals.

ZEBID, a city of Yemen, Arabia.

ZEGZEG, a kingdom of Africa, situated to the W. of Zanfara.

ZEILA. See ADEL.

ZEITON, a town of Thessaly, 50 miles SSE. of Larissa.

ZEITZ, a town of Naumburg, Upper Saxony, with a college.

ZELL, a town of Lower Saxony, and capital of a duchy of the same name, which devolved to the house of Hanover, by marriage with the heiress, the male line failing, in 1705. It is surrounded by ditches and ramparts, on which are planted chestnut and lime-trees, and is a small town, with a few artificers and manufacturers, particularly in gold and silver. The houses are old and of a mean appearance; but the high courts of appeal for all the territories of the electoral house of Brunswick Lunenburg are held here. Here also is the provincial house for the diets of the principality. The other public edifices are the Guildhall, the Riding-House, the Mews, and the Armory. The castle, which is situated near the town, and is walled and moated in, was formerly the residence of the dukes, and was repaired by order of the King of Great Britain, for the residence of his unfortunate sister, the Queen of Denmark, who died here. It is seated on the river Aller, 40 miles S. of Lunenburg.

ZELL, a town of Salzburg, Bavaria, seated on the Zeller See; and a town of Hammerbach, Suabia.

ZEMBLA, NOVA, a large island, lying in the Northern Ocean, to the N. of Russia, from which it is separated by the Strait of Waigate, about 500 miles in length, and from 100 to 200 in breadth. It was first discovered by the English in 1553. Its inhabitants are chiefly wild beasts, particularly white foxes, bears, elks, reindeer, and rabbits; yet a few human beings have been seen here at times. The country produces nothing but moss, and a few arctic plants. Sea-cows abound on the coast, and sea-fowl flock there to lay their eggs. In 1596, a Dutch vessel was cast away on the coast, and the ship's company were obliged to winter here; they did not see the sun from the 4th of November, to the beginning of February, and had great difficulty to keep themselves from being frozen to death. Lat. 71. to 78. N. lon. 53. 45. W. to 72. 49. E.

Zennen, Cornwall, near St. Burien's.

ZENTA, a town of Hungary, on the river Theisse, where Prince Eugene, in 1697, obtained a signal victory over the Turks, commanded by the emperor, Muttapha II. in person. Twenty thousand Turks were killed, 10,000 wounded, and 3000 taken prisoners. It is 52 miles N. of Belgrade.

ZERBST, a town of Anhalt Zerbst, Upper Saxony, with a castle, where the princes commonly reside, and a college. It is famous for brewing good beer; and here are manufactures of gold and silver. It is 44 miles SSW. of Potsdam.

ZEREA, a town of Farsistan, Persia, 18 miles NNE. of Schiras.

ZIA, an island of the Archipelago, anciently called Ceos and Hydrassa, SW. of Andros, and 12 miles E. of Cape Colonna. It is 15 miles in length, and 8 in breadth; is well cultivated, and abounds in most of the necessaries of life. They have here a sort of oak, whose fruit, called velani, is the best trading commodity of the island, being exported for the use of dyers and tanners. The principal town, of the same name, resembles an amphitheatre, and contains about 2500 houses, all flat at the top. Most of the inhabitants are Greeks, and have a bishop.

ZIRIC-ZEE, a town of the United Provinces, in Zealand, and capital of the Isle of Schowen. It was the ancient residence of the counts of Zealand, and formerly a place of considerable consequence. The harbour is now filled up with sand; it is, however, large and populous, and is 18 miles SSW. of Briel.

ZITTAU, a town of Lusatia, subject to the elector of Saxony. The principal business of the inhabitants is brewing beer; but there are above 100 clothiers, and in the neighbouring villages above 1000 weavers. The merchants of Zittau trade with those of Prague and Leipstick, and extend their commerce as far as Holland. Here is a library, the finest in all Lusatia, which is open twice a week; and at a small distance from it, is the orphan-house. It is seated on the river Neils, 17 miles S. of Gorlitz.

ZNAIM, a town of Moravia, 58 miles SW. of Olmutz.

ZOARA, an island of Barbary, with a good harbour, 60 miles NNW. of Tripoli.

ZOBLITZ, a town of Erzgebürg, Upper Saxony.

ZOFFINGEN, a town of Berne, Switzerland, the principal place of a bailiwick, 24 miles NNW. of Lucerne.

ZOLLERN, a castle of Suabia, which gives name to the principality of Hohen-Zollern, which is 37 miles in length, and 17 in breadth, and is a very fertile country. The prince is hereditary chamberlain of the empire. It is 10 miles S. of Tübingen.

ZOLNOK, a town of Hungary, on the Theisse, 48 miles SW. of Debreczin.

ZONS, a town of Cologne.

ZOQUES, a district of Mexico, in Chiapa, bordering on Tabasco. It produces plenty of silk and cochineal.

ZORNDORFF, a village in the New Marche, Brandenburg, near Custrin.

ZOUT PAN, a curious salt lake in the country of the Hottentots, situated a few miles N. of Point Padron. It is a plain, much above the level of the sea, and between three and four miles in circumference. At some seasons of the year, it is formed into an entire mass of fine white salt, with a hard crust, exactly resembling ice, which, at a distance, has a very striking appearance.

ZUEELA, a town of Africa, in Fezzan, situated in a fertile district, in which the remnants of ancient buildings, fountains, cisterns, and vaulted caves, exhibit such vestiges of ancient splendour, as will probably attract, and highly reward, the attention of future travellers. It is 60 miles E. of Mourzouk.

ZUG, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, seated on a beautiful lake, in a fertile valley. It contains two churches, a convent, a town-house, arsenal, corn magazine, college, hospital, &c. Oswald, a Saxon king of Northumberland, in the 7th century, is the tutelary saint of this place. Zug is 12 miles NNE. of Lucerne.

ZUG, one of the cantons of Switzerland, bounded on the E. and N. by Zurich; on the W. by Lucerne; and on the S. by Schweitz; about 10 miles long, and nearly as much in breadth. The government resides in a council, which meets annually in the town of Zug, where every male of 16 years of age is possessed of a vote, and where all public posts are conferred. The inhabitants are Romanists.

ZUG, a lake of Switzerland, 8 miles long and 2 wide, named from the town on its coast.

ZULLICHAW, a town in the New Marche, Brandenburg, with a woollen manufacture. It is 37 miles SE. of Frankfort on the Oder.

ZULPHA, a town of Persia, a sort of suburb to Isfahan. It contains about 4000 houses, and is peopled with a colony of Armenians, who were brought into Persia by Shah Abbas, from an ancient town on the Aras. It is an archbishop's see, and contains several churches and monasteries.

ZULPICH, a town of Cologne.

ZURICH, a city of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, situated at the northern extremity of the lake of Zurich. It is one of the best-built cities in this country, but the streets are narrow, and the houses high. Zurich was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the church of Rome, being induced thereto by the arguments of Zuinglius. Among the charitable foundations in this town are an orphan-house; an hospital for incurables; that for the sick of all nations, which usually contains between 6 and 700 patients; and the Allmosen-Amt, or foundation for the poor, which puts out children as apprentices, and distributes money, clothes, and books to poor persons, not of the town only, but of the canton, to the amount of upward of 5000l. a year. The arsenal is well supplied with cannon, arms, and ammunition, and contains a reserve of muskets for 30,000 men. They have manufactures of muslins, cottons, linens, silk handkerchiefs, &c. The inhabitants, in 1780, amounted to 10,559. It is 40 miles SE. of Basle. Lat. 47. 20. N. lon. 8. 30. E.

ZURICH, one of the thirteen cantons of Switzerland, about 50 miles in length and 30 in breadth. It is bounded on the N. by Schaffhausen and a part of Suabia; on the S. by Schweitz and Zug; on the E. by Thurgau and the county of Tockenbürg; and on the W. by the county of Baden. The civil war between the magistrates and people of Zurich, in 1335, nearly reduced that city to ruins; but the former being banished, the citizens, in 1337, established a new form of government. The exiles, after several fruitless attempts, were readmitted; but, engaging in a conspiracy against against the citizens, were discovered and put to death. In consequence of this the nobles in the neighbourhood took up arms, and Zurich, for protection, formed an alliance with Lucern, Uri, Schwitz, and Unterwalden, and was admitted a member of their confederacy in 1351. The four cantons yielded the preeminence to Zurich, a privilege it still enjoys, being the first canton in rank, and the most considerable in extent, both of territory and power, next to that of Bern. This canton abounds in corn, wine and excellent pasture; but as there is not a sufficient supply of corn for interior consumption, the deficiency is chiefly supplied from Suabia. There is also a granary maintained at the public expence, where, in seasons of scarcity, corn is sold considerably cheaper than at the market-price. In 1784, it contained 17572 inhabitants, including those in the cantal. The people are divided into thirteen tribes; and the legislative authority is vested in a council of 200, or rather of 212 members drawn from these tribes. This council comprises the senate, little council (composed of 50 members) which has a jurisdiction in all civil and criminal causes.

ZURICH, a lake of Switzerland, the canton of the same name, near 10 leagues in length and one in breadth. It is an oblong form, and the borders are studded thickly with villages and towns. The adjacent country is finely cultivated and well peopled; and the S. part of it appears bounded by the stupendous high mountains of Schweitz and Glarus the scenery is picturesque, lively, and diversified.

ZURITA, a town of New Castile.

ZUTPHEN, a considerable town of the United Provinces, capital of a county of the same name. It was taken by the French, in 1672, under Philip, de of Orleans, only brother of Louis XIV. and abandoned by them in 1674, after having previously destroyed the fortifications. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Berkel and Yssel, 9 miles S. by E. of Deventer, and 55 E. by S. of Amsterdam. Lat. 52. 10. N. lon. 6. 22. E.

ZUTPHEN, a county of the United Provinces, separated by the Yssel from Guelderland. Otho I. of Nassau, acquired this country in the 11th century, by marrying the heiress of Gerlach, Count of Zutphen; since which time it has ever been annexed to Guelderland.

ZUYDER-ZEE, a great bay of the German Ocean, which extends from S. to N. in the United Provinces, between Friesland, Overijssel, Guelderland, and North Holland. It is so called from its situation toward the S.

Zwallock, of Swallock, Cornwall, SW. of Camelford.

ZWAMMERDAM, a town of Holland, on the Rhine, 10 miles ESE. of Leyden.

ZWICKAU, a town of Erzgebürg, Upper Saxony, seated on the river Muldaw.

ZWINGENBURG, a town of Hesse-Darmstadt, circle of Upper Rhine, 20 miles N. of Mannheim.

ZWOLL, a town of the United Provinces, in Overijssel, and in the district of Zallant. It is large and rich, and a canal begins near this place, which extends to the river Yssel. Here was formerly an Augustine convent, in which Thomas à Kempis, otherwise called Hamerken, lived 71 years, and died in 1471, at the age of 91. It was formerly an imperial and Hanseatic town, and is seated on the river Aa, between the Yssel and the Vecht, 15 miles N. of Deventer.

ZWORNICK, or SWERNICK, a town of Bośnia.

ZYTOMIERK, a town of Volhinia, 73 miles NNW. of Kiof.
